THE TRANSLATOR TO THE READER.

AS Monſieur Du Pin has merited the Applauſe of the Learned World, for his former Volumes of Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory; ſo in theſe three which are now publiſh'd, he continues ſtill to write like himſelf, and maintain the ſame Character which has been given of him; he is no leſs faithful in his Relations, judicious in his Reflections, exact in his Criticiſms, and moderate in his Cenſures of thoſe who differ from him; and even more impartial than would be expected from one of a contrary Party. The two firſt Ages treated of in this Volume, viz. the 13th and 14th, were cover'd with ſome Remains of that Ignorance and Barbariſm, which reigned in the laſt preceeding Ages: But this is ſo far from being any juſt Prejudice againſt this Hiſtory, that it ſhould rather invite the Ingenious Reader's Curioſity, when he conſiders, that the excellent Hiſtorian has enlightned theſe dark Ages, by giving a clearer account of them than any one Writer before him; for he has brought to light ſome notable Pieces of Hiſtory which ſeem'd to be buried in Oblivion, and collected together the ſeveral Fragments which were ſcatter'd in many Volumes, and plac'd them in ſuch a clear light, that the Darkneſs of the Times ſerves to ſet off and commend the Judgment of the Hiſtorian. It is his peculiar Excellency, that he gives a juſt Idea of the moſt conſiderable Eccleſiaſtical Writers in all the Ages of the Church, not by general Characters, but by giving an account of the Matters handled in their Works, and taking judicious Extracts out of them; and particularly in this Volume, he has added to the Hiſtory of each Century ſuch uſeful Obſervations, as give the Reader a general Idea of the great Tranſactions then on foot: So that nothing ſeems to be wanting to render this Tranſlation compleat, but ſome Remarks which may be uſe to the Proteſtant Reader, of which I ſhall therefore preſent him with a few, relating to the Controverſies between the Roman Church and the Church of England.

It has been obſerv'd by Monſieur Du Pin and others, That School-Divinity was corrupted in the 13th Century, by introducing into it the Principles of Ariſtotle's Philoſophy, whereby all Matters of Doctrin were reſolved into a great many curious and uſeleſs Queſtions, and decided by the Maxims of that Philoſophy (which yet was learned not from the Greek Originals, but the corrupt Verſions of the Arabians) as if they were of equal Authority with the Scriptures: And as this mixture corrupted the Simplicity of the ancient Chriſtian Faith, ſo it was the cauſe of many Miſchiefs, among which I reckon this to be none of the leaſt, that it furniſh'd Men with ſuch Principles as were ſubſervient to maintain the Popiſh Doctrin of Tranſubſtantion, which begun in this Century to be eſtabliſhed. As for inſtance, This Philoſophy taught Men, that Quantity is an Accident diſtinct and ſeparable from Body, from whence they inferr'd the Poſſibility of the Replication and Penetration of Bodies, and maintain'd, as the School-men do to this Day, That the ſame Body may be in a thouſand diſtant Places at the ſame time; That the ſame Man may be alive at London and kill'd at Rome; That the whole Body of a luſty Man, with all its ſeveral parts, may be crouded within the Compaſs of a Pins head, by which Doctrins they defended ſome of theſe Abſurdities, which are implied in Tranſubſtantiation, viz. That the Body of Chriſt is at the ſame time in Heaven and Earth, and in all the ſeveral Places where the Euchariſt is celebrated, that it is whole in the whole Loaf, and whole in every the leaſt part of it, and many other ſuch like Abſurdities, which are real Contradictions to the Nature of a Body, if Extenſion is eſſential to it, as it is held to be by the beſt Philoſophers both Ancient and Modern.

The firſt pretended General Council in which Tranſubſtantiation is ſaid to be eſtabliſhed, was the fourth Lateran Council under Innocent III. in the Year 1215. But Du Pin has plainly prov'd, that the Canons which go under the Name of this Council, were not made by the Council it self, but only by Pope Innocent III. who read some of them in the Council, and after its Dissolution added many more as he pleas'd, Dissert. 7 de Antiq. Eccl. Discipl. Ch. 3. Sect. 4. which is a Trick that the Popes had commonly used in the 12th Century, who publish'd their own Constitutions as the Decrees of Councils, Du Pin Hist. Eccl. 10th Cent. p. 217.

I shall not pretend to give an Account what was the Doctrin of the first Eight Ages of the Church concerning the Eucharist, which may be learn'd from Archbishop Usher, Bishop Cosins, and others. But to me it seems an Invincible Argument, that Transubstantiation was not then believ'd, That the Jews and Heathens did not charge the Christians with the Absurdities and Contradictions which are the obvious and natural Consequences of that Doctrin.

As to the Term of Transubstantiation, Du Pin says it was first used by Celles Bishop of Chartres, and Stephen Bishop of Autun, in the 12th Century, p. 156. As to the Doctrin it self, it appears to have been first published by Paschasius in his Treatise of the Body and Blood of our Saviour about the Year, 832. wherein he asserts, That after the Consecration under the Figure of Bread and Wine there is nothing but the Body and Blood of Christ; and which is yet more wonderful, he adds, It is no other Flesh than that which was born of Mary, suffered on the Cross, and rose again from the Grave. He might very well call it wonderful Doctrin, not only for its apparent Absurdity, but for its Novelty (since the like Expressions had never been used before) which is ingenuously confess'd by Bellarm. de Scriptor. Eccl. ad annum 850. and by Sirmondus in the Life of Paschasius prefix'd to his Works, Par. 1618. and may be plainly proved from the Writings of the most learned Men in this Century. For, first, Claudius Bishop of Turin, asserted the contrary Doctrin eighteen or nineteen Years before Paschasius's Book upon this Subject was publish'd (which Doctrin was never oppos'd by those who censur'd some other Opinions of his) as Dr. Allix shows from a Manuscript Commentary of this Author's upon St. Matth. Remarks upon the Ancient Church of Piedmont, p. 62, &c. II. In the same Century, after this Doctrin was published, it met with great Opposition from many eminent Men, such as Ratramnus, Joannes Scotus, Amalarius, Florus, Druthmarus and Erigerus, all which are own'd by Du Pin to have oppos'd the Doctrin of Paschasius, Cent. 9th p. 77. to whom may be added Theodolphus Bishop of Orleans, Walafridus Strabo Abbot of Richenou, Abyto Bishop of Basil, and Rabanus Maurus Archbishop of Mayence; who did also oppose the Doctrin of Paschasius in the same Century; and particularly Rabanus in his Penitential, which was written in the Lifetime of Paschasius, censures his Doctrin about the Eucharist as a Novel Error, as is prov'd in a Dissertation about Bertram's Book of the Body and Blood of Christ annexed to the Translation of it, and printed at London in 1686.

I shall only add, that the Doctrin of Bertram's Book against Paschasius about the Eucharist appears plainly to have been generally receiv'd by the Church of England in the 10th Century, from the Paschal Homily which Elfric Archbishop of Canterbury translated into the Saxon Tongue about the Year 970. which is published at London in 1566. and attested to be a true Copy by the hands of fifteen Prelats and several Noblemen; for this Book was commanded by a Canon to be read publickly to the People, as is observed by Dr. Cave Hist. Lit. p. 589. and contains the same Aguments, and for the most part the same Expressions which were us'd by Bertram against Transubstantiation, as is prov'd by A. B. Usher in his Answer to the Jesuites Challenge, c. 3.

And that Bertram's Book was directly levell'd against Tranubstantiation, as it is now defin'd by the Council of Trent will plainly appear, by citing a few passages out of many that are in that little Book to this purpose: For first he says expresly, that the Eucharist is the Body of Christ, not Corporally but Spiritually, and then he proves, That what is Orally receiv'd in the Sacrament is not Christ's natural Body, because it is incorruptible; whereas that which we receive in the Eucharist, is corruptible and visible: And again, Christ's natural Body had all the Organical parts of a humane Body, and was quickened with a human Soul, whereas his body in the Sacrament hath neither; he proves that the Words of the Institution are figurative, because the Symbols have the Name of the thing signified by them. 2. He says expresly, That as to the Substance of the Creatures, what they were before Consecration, they remain after it. Bread and Wine they were before Consecration, and after it we see they continue Beings of the same kind and nature: He denies any natural Change, and affirms it to be only spiritual and invisible, such as was made of the Manna and Water in the Wilderness, into the Body and Blood of Christ.

These

The Tranſlator to the Reader.

Theſe things are ſo plainly and frequently aſſerted in this Book, that I muſt Tranſcribe the greateſt part of it, if I would produce all the Paſſages which are to this Purpoſe; and therefore I cannot but wonder to find Du Pin ſo far miſtake the Queſtions which are handled by Bertram, as he does, in the Hiſt. of the 9*th* Century, where he makes the ſenſe of the firſt Queſtion to be this; Whether the Body and Blood of Chriſt be in the Euchariſt without a Veil, ſo as to appear to our outward Eyes; and the meaning of the 2*d* to be no more than this, Whether the Body of Chriſt be in the ſame manner in the Euchariſt, as it was on Earth, and is in Heaven, and Whether it be there in as viſible and palpable a manner? for it cannot be ſuppoſs'd that ever any Man in his Wits ſhould maintain that the Body of Chriſt in the Euchariſt is viſible to our Eyes, with all its Lineaments and diſtinction of Parts, and that the Fleſh and Bones there are palpable to our hands; or that the Body of Chriſt in the Euchariſt is both Earthly and Corruptible as it was upon Earth, and Spiritual and Incorruptible as it is now in Heaven. Theſe are ſuch wild Imaginations as could never enter into the Mind of any Man of ſound Senſes; and therefore Bertram cannot be ſuppos'd ſuch a Fool, as to confute them ſeriouſly with many Arguments, and that in a Letter to the Emperor; which were no leſs Ridiculous, than if a Man ſhould write a Book on purpoſe to prove that a Man does not appear viſibly in the ſhape and figure of a Horſe, or a Mouſe like an Elephant. The main Queſtion of Bertram's Book then is not, as Du Pin puts it, Whether the Body of Chriſt be in the Euchariſt in as viſible and palpable a manner as when he liv'd upon Earth; which I believe was never affirm'd by any, either in that Age, or any other. But, Whether in the Sacrament we receive the ſame Body of Chriſt which was Born of the Virgin, Crucified, and Roſe again (ſuppoſing what is agreed on all hands that it is not viſibly there) and this he flatly denies, and plainly diſproves, in direct oppoſition to Paſchaſius, and the Doctrin of the preſent Roman Church. He ſays indeed, the Elements are truly Chriſt's Body and Blood; but then he explains himſelf, they are not ſo as to their viſible Nature, but by the Power of the Divine Word; and then he adds, the viſible Creature feeds the Body, but the Virtue and Efficacy of the Divine Word feeds and ſanctifies the Souls of the Faithful. From which, and many other ſuch like Expreſſions, it plainly appears that he did not believe the Sacrament to be a meer Sign and Figure of Chriſt's Body and Blood, but thought they were Really preſent, not in a Carnal but Spiritual Senſe. 1, In regard of the Spiritual Virtue and Efficacy of them, which by the Divine Bleſſing is communicated to the Faithful; in which ſenſe only they can be profitable to the Soul, for the Fleſh profits it nothing. and if Du Pin contends for the Real Preſence only in this ſenſe, the Church of England will readily grant it; which has taught her Catechumens to ſay, that the Body and Blood of Chriſt are verily and indeed taken and receiv'd by the Faithful in the Lord's-Supper. But if he contends for a Corporal Preſence of Chriſt's Natural Fleſh and Blood, the Doctrin of Bertram is no leſs expreſly againſt it, than that of the Church of England; and the latter may as eaſily be reconcil'd to Tranſubſtantiation, as the former.

And this I have the longer inſiſted upon, both becauſe moſt of the Writers of that Age, whom we have alledg'd againſt Tranſubſtantiation, follow the Principles, and make uſe of the Arguments and Expreſſions in Bertram's Book, and chiefly becauſe this Book ſeems to have been the Model by which the firſt Reformers fram'd this Article of the Euchariſt; for ſo Biſhop Ridley, who had a great hand in Compiling this Article intimates; as we find in the Preface of a Book De Cœna Domini, Printed at Geneva, in 1556. where he ſays, That it was this Book which firſt put him upon Examining the Old Opinion, about the Preſence of Chriſt's very Fleſh and Blood, by Scripture and Fathers, and Converted him from the Errors of the Church of Rome in this Point; which is alſo affirm'd by Dr. Burnet's Hiſtory of the Reformation, Part II. Book I. p. 17. And this is what I thought fit to Remark, for the benefit of the Engliſh Reader, concerning the Doctrin of Tranſubſtantiation, which is ſaid to be Eſtabliſh'd in the Thirteenth Century, by Innocent III. concerning whom, I Obſerve in the 2*d* Place,

That this Pope was the firſt who publiſh'd a Cruſade againſt the Albigenſes, which is a way of enlightning Men's Underſtandings, by beating out their brains, and converting them by the irreſiſtible force of Sword and Gun; the ſame way which Mahomet us'd for propagating his Religion in the World was follow'd by this Pope, whoſe Cruel and Barbarous Actions are no leſs agreeable to the Spirit of Mahomet, than they are contrary to that of Chriſt. The ſame Pope Founded the Office of the Inquiſition, which at firſt did only draw up a Proceſs againſt Hereticks, and ſollicit the ordinary Judges to Condemn them, but in a little time the Power of Judging and Condemning

Hereſie

Hereſie was committed to them, and the Secular Judges did only execute their Sentence And it is obſervable that the Inquiſition was eſtabliſhed much about the ſame time with Tranſubſtantiation; the Cruelty of the one being a fit Match for the abſurdity of the other: And indeed this Holy Office was a neceſſary Engine to cram down the throats of Mankind ſuch a choaking Morcel as Tranſubſtantiation.

Mr. Du Pin in this Hiſtory has given us ſome account of the barbarous Proceedings againſt the Albigenſes by the Croiſade and the Inquiſition, without paſſing any Cenſure upon theſe Actions; but leſt any ſhould ſuſpect by his Silence, that he approv'd them, I will now briefly ſhew you what Opinion he had of all Corporal Puniſhments, when they are us'd by Eccleſiaſticks. And this will appear from his Book of Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline, Diſſert. 7. where 1ſt in the Preface he tells us, That the Civil Power reſpects Mens Bodies, which may be forc'd to a Compliance, and therefore the Civil Magiſtrate may Puniſh Men with Corporal Puniſhment and Death; but the Eccleſiaſtical Power reſpects Mens Minds which cannot be forc'd; and therefore the Governours of this Society can only reclaim Men from their Vices by Exhortations and Commands, which if they do not obey, they can inflict no other Puniſhment but that of Excommunication. And then 2dly, in Ch. 1. Sect. 5. of the ſame Diſſertation, he proves that the Church has no Authority in Temporal Affairs, becauſe it cannot force Men by Corporal Puniſhment, and Deprivation of their Goods: For, ſays he, 'tis a thing unheard of among the Ancients, that the Church ſhould inflict any other Puniſhment than that of Excommunication, or Depoſition. He owns, that after the Emperors became Chriſtian, their affection to the Chriſtian Religion, and deſire to preſerve the Empire in Peace, mov'd them ſometimes to Baniſh or Fine thoſe who were Ringleaders of Hereſy; which was very often done of their own proper motion; and ſometimes, but ſeldom, at the deſire of the Fathers of the Church: But it was only in the latter Ages that the Church obtain'd of the Emperors a Power to inflict Corporal Puniſhment. For proof of this he ſhews, 1ſt, That Chriſt gave to the Church no Power but what is Spiritual, nor did order the Obſtinate and Diſobedient to be otherwiſe Puniſh'd, than by excluding them from Communion. But this is not all, for he ſhews in the 2*d* place, (whatever Power Churchmen may have receiv'd from Magiſtrates over Men's Bodies) That nothing is more contrary to the Deſign of the Goſpel than ſuch a Power as ſtrikes terror into the Minds of Men, which he proves from the words of our Saviour to the Apoſtles, when they would have call'd for Fire from Heaven upon the Samaritans, Luke 9. 25. Ye know not what Spirit ye are of, for the Son of Man came not to deſtroy Men's Lives, but to ſave them. 3*dly*, He ſhews, That Chriſt forbad his Apoſtles to uſe the Temporal Sword in defence of Religion, from the Rebuke that he gave to St. Peter for drawing his Sword; Put up thy Sword into the Sheath, for all they that take the Sword, ſhall periſh by the Sword, Matth. 26. And laſtly, he proves, That Eccleſiaſticks cannot uſe the Temporal Sword, or Civil Power, to Force and Puniſh Men, from the Unanimous Conſent of the Fathers, whom he there Quotes. And this may ſuffice to ſhew what Opinion Du Pin had of this Wolf of a Paſtor, Innocent III. and the Sanguinary Methods he us'd to Extirpate Hereticks, by the Cruſade, and the Inquiſition; ſince he declares, not only that Churchmen have no ſuch Power from Chriſt, and that it was never practis'd in the firſt and beſt Ages of the Church, but alſo, that it is contrary to the Deſign of the Goſpel to uſe ſuch Cruelties; and to the Mind of Chriſt to Defend, and much more to Propagate, Religion by ſuch violent and bloody Methods.

A HISTORY OF THE Controverſies in Religion, And other AFFAIRS tranſacted in the CHURCH DURING THE Thirteenth Century.

CHAP. I.

The Hiſtory of the different Revolutions in the Empire and Italy, during the Thirteenth Century.

THE Affairs of the Church in this Century are ſo interwoven with thoſe of the Empire, that before we can enter upon Eccleſiaſtical Matters, we muſt lay down a Scheme of the State of Germany, and Italy, of the principal Revolutions that have happen'd in them, and of the ſcuffles that the Popes had with the Emperors, and the Princes of Italy. This is what I deſign to do in this Chapter.

Conteſts about the Empire between Philip and Otho.

The Emperor Henry VI. dying at Meſſina about the end of the year 1197. or, as others will have it, at Palermos, at the beginning of 1198. left behind him a Son nam'd Frederick, of about ſeven years of Age. Him by his laſt Will he made Heir and Succeſſor to all his Eſtates, as well as the Empire, to which he himſelf had been choſen ſome time before by the Princes of Germany. He deſired the Pope to ſettle him in the Poſſeſſion of them: and to engage him, order'd that he ſhould receive from Frederick, for the benefit of the Holy See, all thoſe Eſtates that had belonged to the Princeſs Mathilda, and ſome other Towns. In the mean while he conſtituted his Brother Philip, the Duke of Suabia, Regent of the Empire. Conſtantia the Mother of Frederick demanded of the Pope to have him crown'd King of Sicily, which was accordingly done; but as for the Empire, Frederick was not put into poſſeſſion of it: that being diſputed by Philip Duke of Suabia, who was choſen by the major part of the Electors, and crown'd at Mentz by the Biſhop of Tarentaiſe; and alſo Otho Son of Henry Duke of Saxony, was elected by the Archbiſhop of Cologn, and ſome other German Princes: to whom the Country of Cologn, the Palatinate, Thuringen, and Livonia ſubmitted; while all the reſt of Germany were for Philip. The King of France ſtood for Philip, and England for Otho. Pope Innocent III. declared for Otho, confirm'd his Election, and rejected that of Philip, who nevertheleſs had the better of it in Germany, and by the force of his Arms had brought many of thoſe that had acknowledged Otho to ſubmiſſion. Upon this, in the year

1201. the Pope ſent his Legate Cardinal Guy Biſhop of Paleſtrina into Germany, to countenance Otho's Party; who ſtraight declar'd Philip no better than a Rebel, and commanded all the Germans, under pain of Excommunication, to acknowledg Otho for their Emperor. Still this did not put a ſtop to the Progreſs of Philip's Arms; who having drawn over Adolphus Archbiſhop of Cologn to his ſide, got himſelf crown'd a ſecond time by the hands of this Archbiſhop in the year 1204, at Aix la Chapelle, maugre all the oppoſition of the Popes Legate; and, underſtanding that Conrade Archbiſhop of Mentz was dead, he got the Vacancy ſupply'd by the Election of Diepold, or Lupold Biſhop of Worms: but he was no ſooner gone from thence, but that the greater part of the Canons proteſted againſt the freedom of the Election; and thereupon having put in an Appeal to the Holy See, they reaſſembled themſelves at Bingen, and elected Sifroy to the Archbiſhoprick of Mentz, whoſe Election was confirmed by the Pope, who likewiſe excommunicated Lupold, and the next year by his Legate depoſed Adolphus Archbiſhop of Cologn, and choſe Bruno into his place. In the year 1206. Otho was beſieged in Cologn by Philip, and not thinking himſelf in a condition to ſuſtain the Siege, retired with ſome Troops, accompanied by the new Archbiſhop Bruno; but being ſet upon by Philip, he was defeated, Bruno taken Priſoner, and Cologn forc'd to receive Philip for its Maſter. Otho ſecur'd himſelf in Saxony, and from thence paſs'd into England. The Princes of Germany, being at length deſirous to ſettle an entire Peace in the Empire, diſpatch'd their Envoys in the year 1207. to Pope Innocent, deſiring him to acknowledg Philip, and apply himſelf to the reconciling of the two Pretenders to the Empire. The Pope agreed to the Propoſition, but upon this condition, that Philip's Daughter ſhould be given in Marriage to Richard his Nephew. In hopes to make this deſign ſucceed, he ſends three Legates into Germany, who were preſent at an Aſſembly held at Northuſe upon the Chriſtmaſs-Holydays, where the two Kings concluded a Peace; Otho giving up the Empire to Philip, on condition of marrying his Daughter, and being his Heir. Adolphus was in this Aſſembly abſolved by the Legates, and Bruno ſet at liberty by the Emperor. Philip did not enjoy the Peace long, for he was the next year kill'd at Bamberg by Otho Count Palatine of Witilſpach, who was incens'd againſt him for engaging himſelf to give that Daughter to another, which he had before promiſed him in marriage. Philip being dead, without any conſideration of the right that Frederick King of Sicily had to the Imperial Crown, Otho was by univerſal conſent of the Princes of Germany choſen Emperor.

Otho acknowledg'd Emperor.

No ſooner was Otho rais'd to this Dignity, but his old Adherents got the upper hand again, and routed thoſe that had been for Philip. Bruno reenter'd upon his Archbiſhoprick of Cologn, and Adolphus was depos'd; Sifroy took poſſeſſion of the Archbiſhoprick of Mentz, and drove out Lupold: only Conrade Biſhop of Spire, who had been Philip's Chancellor, retiring into a very ſtrong Caſtle, would not make his Peace with Otho, nor pay him Allegiance, but upon condition of continuing in his former Charge; which Otho was forc'd to allow him.

Otho goes into Italy, and there makes War.

Pope Innocent having notice of Otho's Election, ſent his Legates into Germany, to invite him to Rome, there to receive the Imperial Crown from his hands. His Legates were receiv'd in an Aſſembly held at Wirtzburg in 1209, where they gave their Approbation of the Marriage that had been agreed upon between Otho, and the Daughter of Philip. The ſame year Otho took a Journey into Italy, and came to Rome, where he was receiv'd by Pope Innocent III. and crown'd in St. Peters, the 4th of October. The Pope obliged him to take an Oath to defend the Patrimony of St. Peter; and the Romans demanding of him what was cuſtomary for Emperors to give in this Ceremony, there aroſe a Diſturbance, in which the Romans coming to blows with the Germans, there were many kill'd on both ſides: which made Otho remove inſtantly from Rome, and ravage all the Church-Lands, as well to revenge the Affront, as to mortify the Pope whom he began now to be jealous of. Upon this the anger and hatred of the Pope broke out againſt Otho to that degree, that he threatned to excommunicate and depoſe him, if he did not ceaſe thoſe Hoſtilities: but Otho was ſo far from regarding it, that he took a reſolution to ſeize upon Romagna, and make himſelf Maſter of Sicily and Apuleia, which belong'd to Frederick, and whereof the Pope had had the Government ever ſince the death of Conſtantia the Mother of that Prince. The Pope willing to put a ſtop to ſuch deſigns as theſe, excommunicated the Emperor, and afterwards call'd a Council at Rome, wherein he declared the Empire void, and all the Subjects of it free from their Oath of Fidelity to Otho, forbidding them any more to acknowledg him for Emperor. He made this Sentence be publiſh'd in Germany in the year 1211, by Sifroy Archbiſhop of Mentz, who quickly repented of having done it; for the Count Palatine, the Duke of Brabant, and ſome other Princes of the Empire entred the Territories of his Archbiſhoprick with an Army, where they laid all waſte, forcing him to retire for ſafety into Thuringen. The Diſturbances that the Publication of this Sentence had made in Germany haſtned Otho's return home. He call'd an Aſſembly at Nurenburg, about Whitſontide the ſame year; wherein he declared War againſt Herman Count of Thuringen, for protecting Sifroy Archbiſhop of Mentz, and for refuſing any longer to acknowledg him Emperor. Straight he gathered his Troops, entered Thuringen, took two of the ſtrongeſt Towns, and put all the Country to Fire and Sword. Being return'd to Northuſe, he celebrated his Marriage with the Daughter of Philip, who died within few days after the Ceremony.

Sentence of Excommunication out againſt Otho.

In

In the mean while Sifroy Archbishop of Mentz, the King of Hungary, the Archbishop of Treves, and the Count of Thuringen, with some other Princes of the Empire, resolve to revive the old Election of Frederick, and to make him Emperor in the stead of Otho. They brought their Resolution into practice, and having made a solemn Election of him anew, they sent two Deputies to carry him the Decree of his Election, and to invite him to come and take possession of the Empire. Frederick made no scruples but what he thought necessary to satisfy himself of their fidelity, and being assur'd of that, he parted for Germany. He took Rome in his way, and there desired Pope Innocent to crown him, but was put off by him with an excuse, that he would send a Cardinal into Germany with him in the Quality of a Legate, to order the Princes of the Empire to relinquish Otho, and acknowledg him. Frederick went on his Journy till he arrived at Constance, where a number of the German Princes, especially those of Suabia, came to meet him with their Troops. Otho would fain have come and set upon him with his Army, but his Troops by little and little dropping away from him, he was forc'd to shift for himself. Frederick on the contrary was kindly received every where, and in a little time made himself Master of Mentz, Cologn, and Aix la Chapelle, where he was crown'd Emperor in the year 1214. Afterward he enter'd into an Alliance with Philip Augustus King of France. Otho who on his part was in league with John King of England, Renaud Earl of Bologn, and Ferdinand Earl of Flanders, having raised a numerous Army against the King of France, join'd Battel with him at Pont de Bowines in Flanders, the 15*th* of July in the year 1214. King Philip's Person was there in great danger, but the Confederate Army was entirely routed, and Otho after having lost his whole Army forc'd to fly. He with much ado got into Saxony, where he died, some say in the year 1216, others in 1218, never caring to meddle in State Affairs after this Defeat.

Frederick chosen Emperor; goes into Germany.

Otho by his death left Frederick in peaceable possession of the Empire. This Prince made himself be crown'd a second time by the hands of Sifroy Archbishop of Mentz; and again a third time by the Pope's Legate. At this last Coronation he made a Vow to go to the assistance of the Holy Land, and gave to the Holy See the Earldom of Fondi in the Kingdom of Naples. Upon this Pope Innocent wrote to the Princes of Germany in his behalf, and engaged Theodorick Archbishop of Treves to get that City to acknowledg him: so that in 1215 Frederick saw himself in a peaceable possession of the whole Empire.

In the year 1220 he was crown'd Emperor by Honorius III. the Successor of Innocent; and for an acknowledgment he gave to the Holy See some Lands in Italy, and engaged himself anew to go the Holy Voyage: but within a while after he and the Pope fell out about two Earls of Tuscany, whom he had rob'd of their Lands, and who were fled to Rome for relief. The City of Bologn, and some other places in Italy rising against him, he came to Rome, and broke entirely with the Pope, by attempting to turn those Bishops out of the Churches which the Pope had put in, and to put in some of his own; pretending it to be a right of the Kings of Sicily, which Pope Innocent III. had encroach'd upon during his minority. The Pope rebuk'd him soundly for his boldness, and threatned him with Excommunication, if he did not let things continue as they were. Frederick not minding to hearken to him, Honorius the Third darted the Thunderbolt of Excommunication upon him, declar'd him to have forfeited all his Kingdoms, and freed all his Subjects from the Oath and Allegiance they had sworn to him: Which was afterwards the occasion of a multitude of Misfortunes to the Church and Empire. This Sentence nevertheless did then little or no execution, not any one thereupon revolting from Frederick: but on the other side, in an assembly of the Princes of Germany held at Wirtzburg in the year 1222, Frederick got his Son Henry, then but twelve years old, chosen King of Germany, and crown'd at Aix la Chapelle by Engelbert Archbishop of Cologn.

Scuffles between the Pope and Frederick.

The Sentence of the Pope against Frederick.

Honorius the Third died before he could push the Sentence home against Frederick; Gregory the IX. who in the month of April in the year 1227 succeeded him, contented himself to warn Frederick of his Journy to the Holy Land, as he fear'd an Anathema. Henry King of Germany call'd a General Assembly of all the Princes of the Empire at Aix la Chapelle at the beginning of the year 1227, where the Expedition for the Holy Land was resolv'd upon. Upon this all that belong'd to the Croisade repair'd to Brines ready to embark, where Frederick, who had engag'd himself to command them, made them wait a pretty while, pretending himself very ill. At last he makes shift to come to them by August, and embarks to go into Asia, but he was no sooner there but he was back again. The Pope having notice of his return, rubs up the old Sentence that his Predecessor had set out against him; yet with a Promise of Absolution if he would undertake the Voyage to the Holy Land. Frederick hereupon published four Manifesto's against the Popes and Cardinals: the first he addressed to all Kings; the second to the Cardinals; and the third to the People of Rome; in all which he complains of the Excommunication which the Pope had thrown at him: and a fourth is presented to all Princes, giving them advice against Churchmen. For all this, not long after Frederick took a Resolution of going into Syria, and put it in execution in August 1228. When he went he sent Ambassadors to the Pope to demand the Absolution. But the Pope absolutely refus'd him, gave order to the Knights Templars, and Hospitalers, to cross him in all his Designs, as a profest Enemy of the Church; and forbid all that were upon the ſame Expedition in Lombardy and Apuleia to join him. In the mean while Renaud Son of the Duke of Spoletto, whom Frederick had left Regent of the Kingdom of Sicily during his abſence, had entred into the Marquiſate of Ancona, and the Valley of Spoletto; againſt whom the Pope rais'd his Troops on the other ſide, and ſent them into Apuleia under the command of John de Briennes King of Jeruſalem, who made himſelf Maſter of many Towns. Frederick receiving this News in Syria, where he had ſucceſsfully taken ſome Towns from the Saracens, was obliged to clap up a Treaty with the Sultan; the Conditions of which were advantageous enough to the Chriſtians, viz. That the Sultan ſhould deliver into their hands the City and all the Kingdom of Jeruſalem, except the Temple and ſome Caſtles; and that there ſhould be a Truce of ten years between the Chriſtians and Saracens. In purſuance of this Treaty Frederick took poſſeſſion of Jeruſalem, and made himſelf be crown'd King therof in the Lent of the year 1229. He gave notice to the Pope that he had made ſuch a League with the Sultan: at which the Pope ſhewed no ſmall diſſatisfaction, and accuſed Frederick of having treated with an Infidel, ſtill ſtirring up his Subjects what he could againſt him. Frederick hearing of this, made a quick return into Apuleia, where bringing in an Army from Germany, he recover'd all the Towns that were taken or had revolted from him, and made a repriſal upon the Church, by taking the Dutchy of Spoletto, the Marquiſate of Ancona, and the City of Benevento. This ſucceſs did not make him ſo high but that he was willing to ſue for the Pope's friendſhip: to gain which he diſpatched the General of his Army with the Archbiſhop of Meſſina to the Pope to deſire his Abſolution; which the Pope ſtill refuſed to agree to, but upon condition that he ſhould pay 26 thouſand Ounces of Gold to the Church of Rome for the damage he had done it; and ſhould reſtore all the Lands that belonged to it. Frederick's Deputies being returned, he himſelf went to meet the Pope at Anagni, where he received his Abſolution, was reeſtabliſhed in his Empire, and declar'd King of the two Sicilies, and of Jeruſalem. The Pope and the Emperor ſeem'd to be very well reconcil'd upon the occaſion, they eat together, and one would have hoped here had been a firm Peace eſtabliſh'd between them: yet 'twas not long before they broke again; for the Romans rebelling againſt the Pope, and Frederick coming to aſſiſt him with his Troops, there happen'd a miſunderſtanding between them; the Pope accuſing Frederick for underhand dealing with his Enemies, and Frederick again reproaching the Pope for ſecretly treating with the Romans, and telling them that it was without his conſent that Frederick ſet upon them near Viterbo. Howſoever it was, Frederick left the Pope, retir'd to Piſa, and from thence paſs'd into Germany; but the Pope drew good part of his Soldiers from him, by promiſing thoſe that would come into his Camp good Entertainment.

Frederick's Peace made with the Pope.

Frederick found himſelf croſſed in Germany by the Factions of the Princes, and ſuſpecting his Son Henry, he deprived him of the Government, and ſent him into Sicily, which very much diſpleas'd moſt of the Princes of Germany: but yet he made ſhift to keep Germany in Peace, and having gathered his Troops together, he returns to Italy in 1235, and ſets upon thoſe Towns of Lombardy which had entered into League againſt him; he takes Verona and Vicenza, and lays all the Country round waſte. His Son Henry being diſcontented, enters himſelf into the League with the Towns of Lombardy, and had drawn over many of the German Princes to his Party, had not Frederick applied a ready remedy, by getting the Pope's Letter, charging the Princes of Germany not to take the Son's part againſt the Father: and thereupon he arreſted and depoſed his Son, and baniſhed him into Apuleia, where he ended his Life the following year in a Priſon. Frederick gets his ſecond Son Conrade elected King of Germany, and brings Vienna, and all Auſtria, which had hitherto oppoſed him, to an acknowledgment of their Duty. While he was thus labouring to eſtabliſh his Power in Germany, he did not forget his Pretenſions to the Kingdom of Jeruſalem; and thinking that they had been encroach'd upon, he wrote to Pope Gregory by the Archbiſhop of Ravenna to do him juſtice in that matter. The Pope gave the Archbiſhop commiſſion in quality of his Legate to take care of the preſervation of the Rights of Frederick, which is an evident proof that from the year 1230, the Pope had not made an open breach of his Agreement with Frederick till 1238. But in this year their Differences began to grow very hot, becauſe Frederick had made war upon thoſe Cities of Lombardy that would not acknowledg him. The Pope ſent the Cardinals to him to make him deſiſt from carrying on the War in Italy, but all in vain; for Frederick who was ſtrongeſt continued his Progreſſes, defeated thoſe of Milan that oppoſed his paſſage, took Breſcia, and all the other Cities of Lombardy, except Bologna and Parma. The Pope ſeeing that Affairs went but ill with him, would have retired to Rome, but there John Cincius, a Senator of Rome that the Emperor had gained, procured the Gates to be ſhut againſt him; yet the Pope by the aſſiſtance of his Friends that were in poſſeſſion of the Capitol, got into Rome, drove out Cincius, procured a Peace between the Venetians and Genoueſe, and taking courage, made the States of Italy enter into a League againſt Frederick. He moreover exerciſed his ſpiritual Arms againſt him, in publiſhing a Sentence of Excommunication againſt his Perſon, and in declaring all his Subjects diſpenſed with for the Oath of Fidelity to him: and in fine, to raiſe a powerful Enemy againſt Frederick, he ſends his Nuncio's into France to offer the Imperial Crown to Earl Robert, Brother of St. Louis King of France; but that Prince refuſed it, and by the advice of the French Lords ſent back his Anſwer in theſe words:

words: " What ſtrange ſpirit, or what boldneſs indeed is this in the Pope, that he ſhould go about to rob of his Eſtates, and depoſe ſo great a Prince as Frederick, without either proof or acknowledgment of the Crimes of which he is accuſed; and who, did he deſerve ſuch dealings, could not be lawfully depoſed but by a General Council? for his Enemies (of whom it's evident the Pope is one of the chief) ought not to be credited in thoſe things of which they accuſe him. As for Us, We ſee no reaſon hitherto to think him otherwiſe than innocent; he has dealt with us as a good Prince and Neighbour, and we have nothing to find fault with either in his Fidelity or Religion which is truly Catholick. Do not We know that he has made war for the Name of JESUS CHRIST, and has expoſed himſelf both by Sea and Land for the Church? This is greater Religion than we can yet diſcover in the Pope, who, inſtead of aiding and defending him that fought God's Battels, did all he could to croſs and deſtroy him. We do not deſire to throw our ſelves into ſo evident a danger as attacking a Prince ſo powerful as Frederick, who would be aſſiſted by ſo many Kingdoms, and whom the Juſtice of his Cauſe alone is ſufficient to uphold. We ſee very well how little the Romans care how laviſh we are of our Blood, ſo we be but the Inſtruments to ſatisfy their paſſions; and We cannot but foreſee if the Pope ſhould happen to conquer by our means, how he would trample all the Potentates of the Earth under his Feet, exalted with the Pride of having cruſh'd ſo great an Emperor as Frederick. He promiſed however to ſend his Deputies to Frederick to know what his Sentiments were about Religion, aſſuring him that he was ready to perſecute and deſtroy all thoſe who had any evil Principles in that, tho it were the Emperor or the Pope himſelf. Accordingly he ſends his Deputies to the Emperor, who acquainted him with the Propoſitions that the Pope's Nuncios had made. The Emperor aſſured them that he was a Catholick, and thanked the Deputies of France, who ſatisfied him that their Prince had no deſigns againſt any Chriſtian Prince whatſoever, counting it ſufficient to be Brother to the King of France, which in their opinion was more glorious than Emperor; the one being a King born, the other receiving his Title only by Election.

The Opinion of the French upon the Depoſition of Frederick.

The Emperor and the Pope accuſed one another mutually in their publick Manifeſtos. The Emperor complain'd that the Pope had broken the Peace by entring with Arms into Sicily, while he warred in the Eaſt, by oppoſing his paſſage into Italy, by aſſiſting the Lombards againſt him, and by having excommunicated him unjuſtly. The Pope in anſwer to theſe Reproaches ſays, That he was obliged to employ both his ſpiritual and temporal Arms for the recovery of thoſe Lands which Frederick detained from the Church, to which they belonged: That he had offered himſelf to mediate a Peace between the Emperor and the Lombards, and that the Emperor refuſed to hearken to it: That he had heaped a multitude of Favors upon Frederick, and that that Prince in acknowledgment of them had aimed at nothing leſs than the deſtruction of the liberty of the Churches, the robbing them of their Poſſeſſions, the ſtopping and hindring Cruſades, and ruining the Authority of the Holy See. Theſe Accuſations on one ſide and the other, were follow'd by an inteſtine War; moſt of the Provinces and Cities in Italy being divided into two Parties, that of the Gibelins which held with the Emperor, and that of the Guelphs which was for the Pope. The party of the Gibelins, being encouraged by the preſence of the Emperor and his Army, almoſt always had the upper hand, ſo that the greateſt part of the Cities were brought under obedience to the Emperor; and there had been good reaſon to fear that he had taken Rome it ſelf, where he kept ſecret correſpondence with the principal Citizens, had not the Pope made all the People of Rome take upon them the Croſs for their defence. The noble reſiſtance of theſe religious Soldiers obliged Frederick to leave Rome, only laying all the Country about it waſte; his Army diſperſed themſelves all over Italy, and whereever they came made havock of the Goods of the Church, of Monaſteries and religious Orders. The Pope, to oppoſe this Torrent, publiſhed plenary Indulgences for all thoſe that would undertake the Holy War againſt Frederick, and call'd a General Council at Rome, to make a more ſolemn matter of his Depoſition. Frederick that he might put by this thruſt, and prevent the ſitting of this Council, takes care to have all paſſages by Sea and Land well guarded for the ſtopping thoſe Prelates that would come to it. The Piſans who were ſet to guard the Sea Coaſts having met with the Genoeſe Galleys, which were bringing a good number of Cardinals, Biſhops, and other Prelates to the Council, ſet upon them, and having taken them, brought all the Prelates to Frederick, who put them all in priſon. Much about the ſame time Frederick took a Caſtle of Campania, and in it many of the Pope's Relations, whom he cauſed all to be hanged. Gregory could not bear up under the grief of ſo many diſmal Misfortunes, and ſo falling ſick, died at Rome the 30*th* of September in the year 1241.

The War between Frederick and the Pope.

Pope Celeſtin the Fourth, who ſucceeded him, ſeemed very inclinable to a Peace; but living but eighteen days, had not time to make any thing of it. After his death the Holy See was vacant nineteen months, becauſe of the Impriſonment of the Cardinals; but Frederick having at laſt ſet them at liberty at the requeſt of Baldwin Emperor of Conſtantinople, they chole Cardinal Sinibaud a Genoueſe, Pope, who took the name of Innocent the Fourth. This Pope it was hoped would conclude the Peace, having been a Friend of Frederick's while he was Cardinal: and indeed he ſaid as much at the beginning of his Popedom, and made uſe therein of the mediation of Baldwin. 'Twas agreed that the Pope and Frederick ſhould have a meeting ing at Caſtellane; but the Pope, not willing to truſt him, being afraid of being taken Priſoner, never came to the place; or, if he did, made great haſte away again, took ſhip at Civita Vecchia, and paſſed into France: where being kindly received by order of King St. Louis, he ſeated himſelf at Lyons; and thither call'd a General Council, citing Frederick to make his appearance.

A General Council at Lyons in the year 1245.

This Council began about the end of the month of June, in the year 1245. Baldwin Emperor of Conſtantinople aſſiſted there in perſon, with the Patriarchs of Conſtantinople and Antioch, and the Archbiſhop of Aquileia or Venice notwithſtanding the oppoſition of ſome, took his place among the Patriarchs. The Kings of France and England ſent thither their Deputies, ſo that what with Cardinals, Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and the Deputies of thoſe that could not come themſelves, there were preſent about a hundred and forty ſix. The Emperor Frederick did not appear himſelf, but ſent Thadæus of Seſſa with a joint Deputation to act in his name with the Biſhop of Strasburg, Hugh General of the Teutonic Order, and Peter des Vignes. The Pope aſſembled the Prelates on the Monday after the Feaſt of St. John Baptiſt, to conſider of the things which ſhould be propoſed in Council. The Patriarch of Conſtantinople laid open the miſerable eſtate and condition of the Latins in the Eaſt, and the great danger that the City of Conſtantinople was in. To this the Pope ſaid not a word. Then another propoſed the Canonizing of St. Edmond Archbiſhop of Canterbury; but the Pope put that off till another time. Then Thadæus propoſed an Accommodation with Frederick, declaring, That he was ready to make peace, and be reconciled to the Pope: That he profered to reunite all Greece to the Holy See; to oppoſe the Progreſs of the Tartars and Saracens, by carrying on a War againſt them at his own charge; to reſtore to the Church of Rome whatſoever he had taken from it, and to make the Pope full ſatisfaction. To this the Pope made anſwer, That there was no reaſon to truſt him that had often cajol'd them with as fair promiſes as theſe, which he had broken, and that he did this only for the preſent to evade the Judgment of the Council: and moreover that Thadæus had no ſpecial Order to make any ſuch Propoſals. Then the Biſhop of Beritus made a Diſcourſe upon the apparent danger that the Holy Land was in, and read a very mournful Letter from the Chriſtian Lords that remained in Paleſtine to deſire ſome Supplies. Theſe were the Preliminaries of the Council, whoſe firſt Seſſion was upon St. Peter's Eve. After the Pope had ſung the Veni Creator, wherein he was aſſiſted by all preſent, and had made a Prayer for the Aſſiſtance of the Holy Spirit, he preach'd a Sermon, wherein he took for his Text thoſe words of the 94*th* Pſalm, In the multitude of the Sorrows that I had in my Heart, thy Comforts have refreſhed my Soul. He told them that he had five Sorrows; the Cauſe of the firſt was the Irregularity of the Clergy and Laity; that of the ſecond was the haughty Inſolence of the Saracens; that of the third the Schiſm of the Greeks; that of the fourth the Cruelty of the Tartars; and laſtly, that of the fifth, the Perſecution of the Emperor Frederick. He enlarged upon every one of theſe heads: Firſt, he exclaim'd againſt the Irregularities of the Clergy and common Chriſtians. Secondly, he laid forth the Cruelties that the Saracens had exerciſed againſt the Faithful, when they took the Holy City, and the Sepulchre of our Lord. Thence he paſſed on to the Progreſs that the Emperor of the Greek Hereticks had made, inſomuch that the City of Conſtantinople it ſelf was in danger. Fourthly, he ſpoke of the Deſtruction that the Tartars had made in Hungary, where they had put ev'ry thing to fire and ſword. And, Fifthly, of the Perſecution that he pretended Frederick had raiſed againſt the Church; of the Injuries that he had done his Predeceſſor Pope Gregory, and of thoſe that he was every day labouring to do him, while he boaſted that 'twas not the Church, but the Perſons of the Popes that he aimed at; which was abſolutely falſe, ſeeing that during the Vacancy of the Holy See, he was ſo far from ceaſing from Hoſtilities, that he took that advantage of oppreſſing the Church and Clergy the more. About the end of his Diſcourſe he exhibited againſt Frederick a particular Charge of Hereſy and Sacrilege, for having built a City upon Chriſtian Ground which he peopled with Saracens, only to curry favor with the Sultan of Babylon and the Saracen Princes; for keeping Saracen Ladies for his Miſtreſſes; and for having broke the Oath he had taken. To prove this laſt Accuſation, he cauſed the Edict of Frederick which was called the Golden Bull, and other Declarations of his to be read, wherein he promiſes Obedience and Allegiance to the Pope, acknowledges that the Kingdom of Sicily and Apuleia is a dependance on the Holy See, and by which he had reſtored to the Church of Rome many Lands. This Diſcourſe being finiſhed, Thadæus roſe up, and anſwer'd to all the Pope had advanced againſt his Maſter, and in his turn accuſed the Pope of having done many things very injurious to him: and produced ſome Letters of the Pope, which ſhewed that he had not been as good to his promiſe as it became him; and as for the Accuſation of Hereſy, he reply'd, That that Prince if he were there could eaſily juſtify himſelf in that, but that they might judg he was a true Catholick by this, that he would ſuffer no Uſurers in his Kingdom: which was, ſays Matthew Paris, "A touch for the Court of Rome, where ev'ry "one knows there is ſtore of this ſort of Cattle. He added, that if his Maſter was in any Confederacy with the Sultan, or any other Saracen Princes, or if he ſuffered the Saracens to ſettle in his Dominions, it was that he might make uſe of them in keeping under his rebellious Subjects, chooſing rather to expoſe their Perſons than thoſe of Chriſtians: and for the other thing, that he had no Saracen Ladies for his Miſtreſſes; that indeed he ſuffered ſome of them in his Court, but 'twas for the diverſion they gave him by their converſation; but that he had ſent them back again, and that he would have no more for the future. After he had done, Thadæus required time to give his Maſter notice, and to deſire him to come to the Council in perſon: the Pope anſwered that he could not in wiſdom allow any delay, that he was afraid of ſome Plots which he had already narrowly eſcaped; that if the Emperor came, he muſt be gone; that he was in danger of his life, and that he did not much care for dying a Martyr, or being clap'd up in Priſon. However the next day by the interceſſion of the Engliſh and French Deputies, they gained five days. Thadæus having given his Maſter notice how things went in that Council, that Prince ſaw plainly that the Pope was ſet upon it to condemn him, and therefore thought it would not be wiſdom in him to expoſe his Perſon in a Council that he knew were his Adverſaries. When the News came to Lions that Frederick would not come to Council, his Enemies made triumph of it, and his Friends ſo much diſcontented, that they did not dare to favour his Intereſts openly; inſomuch that at the ſecond Seſſion of the Council, which was eight days after the firſt, one Apuleian, and two Spaniſh Biſhops made very violent Diſcourſes againſt him, particularly for daring to ſtop and impriſon the Cardinals and other Prelates, who were coming to aſſiſt at the Council call'd at Rome by Pope Gregory. Thadæus with a great deal of courage defended his Maſter, and affirmed that he could not have done otherwiſe, becauſe that thoſe Prelates were going to Rome to aſſiſt his Enemies in their deſign to depoſe him. The Pope gave his Vote againſt the Emperor, and this Seſſion was wholly ſpent in diſputes. Before it roſe, Thadæus demanded ſome longer time, making them hope that Frederick himſelf would come. The Pope put off the next Seſſion for eight days, and then, being ſatisfied that the Emperor did not deſign to come, the third Seſſion was upon the appointed day. They then treated of ſome other matters; as, of the means of recovering the Holy Land, upon which the Pope order'd certain old Conſtitutions to be read; and likewiſe confirmed all thoſe Privileges and Rights that Emperors and Princes had granted to the Holy See. The Deputies of the King of England made their complaints of the exceſſive Taxes that the Court of Rome raiſed in England; and deſired the Pope to take order about his Legate Martin, who had taken upon him to diſpoſe of the Benefices of that Kingdom to the Italians, to the great prejudice of their Patrons; and had tried a great many new devices which were very chargeable both to the Church and State. He would not give them an Anſwer to this out of hand, but put it off till another time, that he might be more at leiſure for Frederick's buſineſs. At laſt Thadæus ſeeing that the condemnation of the Emperor was reſolved upon, appeal'd in the name of this Prince to another Pope, and a more General Council; alledging that there were many Biſhops and Deputies that were not come to the Council. The Pope made anſwer, that the Council was General enough, that all the World was invited to it, and that the Biſhops and Princes that were abſent, were ſuch as depended upon Frederick, whom he would not permit to come to the Council, and that conſequently there was no regard to be had to the appeal of Thadæus; ſo as upon the account of it to forbear proceeding againſt the Emperor. After he had made a Speech, wherein he enlarged upon the friendſhip that had formerly been between that Prince and him, and upon his rare Qualities, he pronounced Sentence againſt him, by which he deprived him of his Empire, of all his Eſtates, and all his Dignities. This he afterwards put into form, and made it be publickly read in the Council. The ſubſtance of it was, that ever ſince his firſt being raiſed to the Sovereign Dignity of Pope, his chief buſineſs had been to reeſtabliſh the Peace of Chriſtendom: that upon this deſign he had ſent ſome Cardinals to Frederick, who was the Author and occaſion of the War, and who had been excommunicated by his Predeceſſor Pope Gregory, with Propoſals of an Accommodation; and that he had by them remonſtrated to him, that for this he muſt begin with the ſetting all thoſe Prelates, and Eccleſiaſticks, and other Perſons at liberty, which he had taken in the Gallies of Genoa; that at the ſame time he had aſſured him of his readineſs to treat with him about a Peace, and to hearken to any Propoſals which he would pleaſe to make for the ſatisfaction of the Holy See in thoſe things for which he had been excommunicated; and that he had fairly offered to make reparation in caſe the Holy See had done him any injury; that if he would ſtand it out that he had done no injury to the Church, he would call an Aſſembly of the Kings, Prelates, and Eccleſiaſtical and Secular Princes to ſome free and ſafe place, and willingly ſtand to their Determination: and that if it ſhould be the judgment of the Council that the Church had in any thing injured him, he was as ready to repeal any thing that had been ſo acted againſt him, as he was to receive ſatisfaction in caſe the Council ſhould determin on the other ſide: that Frederick would not at firſt hearken to any Propoſitions; that at laſt he had ſent the Earl of Tholouſe, Peter de Vignes, and Thadæus of Seſſa, to make Articles of Obedience and Submiſſion, and had promiſed with an Oath to make the Church ſatisfaction: but that having ſo often fail'd of his word, and now continuing his Violences, he found himſelf forced to puniſh him for his faults. Particularly he accuſed him of three principal Crimes: namely of Perjury, becauſe he had often ſacredly ſworn to reunite the Church and Empire, and had as often broken his Oath: Of Sacrilege, for arreſting thoſe Prelates that were coming to the Council: Of Hereſy, becauſe he had laid aſide that Fealty which he owed the Holy See, had ſlighted its Authority, had invaded its Poſſeſſions, had ſtopt its regular Elections, had rob'd the Churches, and perſecuted the Eccleſiaſticks and Religious Orders; all which juſtly render'd him ſuſpected of Hereſy, as well as his League with the Saracens, whom he made uſe of againſt the Chriſtians, and his other many Irregularities. As a juſt conſequence of theſe Crimes, and Diſorders, he declared this Prince, who by his Sins had made himſelf unfit to reign, deſpoil'd of all his Honour and Dignity; of which he is by this Sentence deprived, and all his Subjects diſcharged from the Obligation of the Oath of Fidelity which they had taken to him, and forbidden under pain of Excommunication, ipſo facto, to acknowledg him for their Emperor and King: and finally, thoſe whoſe buſineſs it was to elect an Emperor, were order'd to chooſe him a Succeſſor, leaving it to the Pope to take care for the Kingdom of Sicily. This Sentence was read to the aſtoniſhment of all that were preſent, and was publiſhed and ſent about on all ſides.

Frederick's Defence.

Frederick in his defence writ a Letter to the King of France and other Princes of Europe, wherein, having firſt acknowledged the ſpiritual Authority of the Biſhop of Rome, he denies his Power to extend to the diſpoſing of the Empire, and the puniſhing of Kings and Princes, by depriving them of their Temporalties: alledging, that tho he have the Privilege of conſecrating Emperors, yet he has no more right to depoſe them, than other Biſhops have thoſe Kings whom it is the cuſtom for them to anoint. But ſuppoſing he had that Authority, which he has not, yet that he could not make uſe of it againſt whom he pleaſed, as he had done in his procedure againſt the Emperor, without due form of Law. For that he had no Accuſer, no lawful Summons to appear, nor Charge againſt him; nor did they make a juſt and fair Information, but only declared that the things were notorious, which they were not; that there were very few in the Council which had depoſed any thing againſt him, namely one Biſhop of Apuleia, whoſe Brothers and Nephew he had hanged for Treaſon, and two Spaniſh Biſhops, who were too far off to have good information of what had paſſed in Italy: that had the Pope proceeded againſt him in due form, and he had been allowed to have his Accuſers and Witneſſes, yet he could not have caſt him, becauſe he was not preſent, nor lawfully ſummoned; and had by his Deputies given ſuch good Reaſons for his abſence, that no one could interpret it to have been out of pride and contumacy; and that had he been preſent, he could not have been condemned by a peremptory Sentence: nay, more than all, had the whole Procedure been according to Law and Juſtice, yet the Sentence was not juſtifiable, becauſe it was founded on facts notoriouſly falſe, and becauſe the Puniſhment inflicted exceeded as well the Power of him that gave ſentence (which reaches no farther than ſpiritual things) as the demerit of the Crimes laid to his charge. About the end of the Letter he gave the Kings notice how it was their common Intereſt to diſallow this Sentence; that they were in danger of being ſerved at the ſame rate; that the Pope had begun with him, but would end with them if they did not ſide with him for the ſupport of their Authority. He wrote in particular to the King of France, making him Umpire of his Differences with the Pope, and referring himſelf to his Judgment, and that of his Peers. The King of France ſenſibly touched with theſe Letters, offers Propoſals of Accommodation to the Pope, aſſuring him that Frederick was ready to give him due ſatisfaction, and would ſpend the reſt of his days in warring againſt the Infidels in the Holy Land. The Pope did but laugh at it, and replyed, That he had often promiſed as much, and more, but never performed any thing. The King of France remonſtrated to the Pope that he ought to forgive ſixty, or ſeventy times ſeven times; and therefore counſell'd and intreated him in the name of a great number of Holy Soldiers that were in a readineſs to go for the Holy Land, for the good of the Catholick Church, and the benefit of Religion, in imitation of JESUS CHRIST who ſubmitted himſelf even to the Death of the Croſs, to accept of that humble Propoſition that he made him on the Emperor's part: but the Pope ſtill refuſing to hearken, St. Louis went away very much diſturbed, ſays Matthew Paris, that he could not find that Humility in the Servant of the Servants of God which he himſelf was maſter of. Many other Princes cryed out againſt this Sentence of the Pope, maintaining that 'twas not in his power to raiſe and put down Kings at his pleaſure; and the greateſt part of the Electors and Princes of Germany always received Frederick for their lawful Emperor. Only a few Malecontents that had been gained by the Pope's Agents, elected Henry Landtgrave of Thuringen King of Germany, who made no great advances; but was killed before Ulme in the year 1247. William Earl of Holland was choſen in his ſtead, and having taken Aix la Chapelle, was there Crowned in 1248. All this while Frederick with no ſmall ſucceſs was carrying on the War againſt the Guelphs in Italy; but his Son Entius, who was his Lieutenant General, being taken by the Bolognians, and put into priſon, abated his heat, and retired into Apuleia, where he ended his days in 1250, leaving his Son Conrade Heir to his Eſtates. The Pope confirmed William in the Empire, excommunicated Conrade, and ſent his Legates into Sicily to hinder that Kingdom from receiving any other Soveraign than the Holy See.

The Death of Frederick.

The Hiſtory of Conrade Frederick's Son.

Conrade, whoſe Affairs went but ill in Germany, did nevertheleſs raiſe an Army, and paſs into Italy to ſecure the Eſtates his Father had left him: and after having ſpent ſome time in Lombardy, he went into Apuleia, where his natural Brother Manfred governed with the Title of Viceroy; but with the deſign of making himſelf Soveraign. Conrade was received and and acknowledged by all the Cities of Sicily and Apuleia, except that of Naples, which he laid Siege to; and took at the end of eight months. But William in the mean while making great progress in Germany, Conrade was forced to return in the year 1251, and took the City of Ratisbone with the help of Henry Duke of Bavaria; but understanding that William was in his march to set upon him with a numerous Army, he betook himself back again into Apuleia, where he died, not without suspicion of being poisoned by his Brother Manfred, the 22*d* of May in 1254, leaving his Son Conradine Heir to Sicily. Manfred, who did not care for parting with Sicily, pretended a desire of being friends with the Pope, and thereupon invites him to come to Sicily. Accordingly the Pope comes with an Army to make himself acknowledged Soveraign of that Kingdom; but Manfred quickly picks a quarrel with him, and routs part of his Army; which so seized upon Innocent's Spirits, that he died at Naples the 7*th* of December, 1254. Alexander the 4*th*, who succeeded him, did not lay down his Predecessor's design upon Sicily: but he had no better fortune; Manfred defeated his Troops, and made himself Master of Apuleia and Sicily. The Pope seeing he was not able to maintain this War, gave the Kingdom to Edmund Son of the King of England, and dispensed with the Vow of that King to go for the Holy Land, on condition he would make war upon Manfred, against whom he also appointed a Crusade.

The Government of Manfred in Sicily.

While Manfred was strengthening himself in the Kingdom of Sicily, Ecelin, who took the part of Frederick's Heirs, had made himself master of Lombardy; and the Pope to drive him from thence, had published a Crusade against him too at Venice. The greatest part of Germany had acknowledged William for their Soveraign, and as he was preparing to take a journey into Italy, there to receive the Imperial Crown, he was forced to march against the Friezlanders who had entered into Holland; but going against them, he fell into a Fen that was frozen, and was there killed by an Ambuscade of his Enemies, in December 1256. After his death the German Princes were divided about the Election of an Emperor, some of them declaring for Richard Brother to the King of England, and the others for Alphonsus King of Castile. The former was Elected at Francfort on the Octave of the Epiphany, in the year 1257, by Conrade Archbishop of Cologn (who was also Proxy for Gerard Archbishop of Mentz) by Lewis Count Palatine of the Rhine, and Henry Duke of Bavaria; the other in Lent, by Arnold Archbishop of Treves as Proxy for the King of Bohemia, the Duke of Saxony, the Marquis of Brandenburgh, and many other Princes. Thus did the German Princes basely sell the Honor of their Nation, and their own Votes to Strangers, who for many years together disputed the Empire without ever agreeing the matter. All which time Lombardy was the Seat of the War between the Guelphs and Gibelines; of the former of which Albert, of the latter Ecelin was the Head. The latter was wounded, and taken Prisoner in 1260, and died of his wounds, after having for four and thirty years been master of the most considerable Cities in Lombardy. His death set Italy at rest, which was not long after broken by the War between the Venetians and Genouese.

Troubles in the Empire and Italy.

The Elections of Alphonsus and Richard to the Empire.

Richard and Alphonsus were elected Emperors, but got nothing by it save the bare Title. Alphonsus never set foot in Germany; and Richard being come to Francfort, after having spent all that he was worth, was forced to return to England. In their absence Ottogar King of Bohemia extended his Dominions in Germany, so that in a short time he was become one of the most powerful Princes in Europe. In Italy Urban the 4*th*, who succeeded Alexander, had published a Crusade against Manfred, and all that sided with him in Apuleia or Lombardy, and stirred up some French Lords to come into Italy. Manfred on his part entred with his Troops into the Estate of the Church, and to strengthen himself against the Pope, entred into an Alliance with James the 3*d* King of Arragon, by marrying his Daughter Constantia to Peter the King's eldest Son. The Pope on his side seeing that Edmund could not prosecute the Conquest of the Kingdom of Sicily, by reason of the Troubles that were in England, invested Charles Earl of Anjou Brother of St. Louis therewith, who came to Rome in 1265, and was there crown'd King of Sicily on the 28*th* of June, by Clement the 4*th* Urban's Successor, who also made him Senator of that City. He was followed with an Army by Sea and Land; and giving Battel to Manfred on the 26*th* of February the following year near Benevento, he gained an absolute and bloody Victory over his Troops, Manfred himself being killed upon the spot. After his Death the Kingdom of Sicily submitted to the Conqueror; but Conradin, whose right this Kingdom was, wrote a Letter to the Princes of Europe, wherein he laid open the justice of his Pretensions, and implored their assistance for its recovery. He got together an Army composed for the most part of Voluntiers, with which, by the advice of Henry Brother of Alphonsus, he made a Descent into Tuscany, where he surprized and cut in pieces those Forces which Charles, whom the Pope had constituted Vicar of the Empire in that Country, had left there; and at the same time Conrade, a Son of one of the Emperor Frederick's Bastards, who was come from Antioch, drew off all Sicily from their Obedience, except Messina and Palermos, while Conradin by the assistance of the Gibelines, made himself Master of all Tuscany and Romagna, and entred in Triumph into Rome, where he was proclaimed Emperor by the People. But being entred into Campania with a design to go into Sicily, Charles met him at the Lake of Fucin, called the Lake of Celano, where he gave him Battel on the 25*th* of August 1268, in which Charles got the day. Conradin, Frederick Duke of Austria, and Henry of Castile betook themselves to flight; but happening to be known in the way, were brought back again to the Conqueror, who put them into prison, and gave them their Trial the next year. Conradin and Frederick were put to death, and Henry of Caſtile confined to Priſon. Juſt about the ſame time too Conrade was taken by ſome of Charles's Party, who hanged him up; and a ſhort time after Entius, the only one remaining of the Princes of Suabia, died in his Priſon of Bologna. Thus unhappily periſhed the whole Race of the Emperor Frederick.

The Election of Rodolphus to the Empire, and his Actions. The Houſe of Auſtria quickly ſucceeded that of Suabia in Glory and Power: for Richard being dead, and Alphonſus having no friends left him in Germany, the Electors aſſembled themſelves in October 1273 at Francfort, according to the counſel of Pope Gregory X. and there elected Rodolphus Earl of Hapsburg, without any regard had to the Remonſtrances of the Deputies of Alphonſus, or the Sollicitations of thoſe of Ottogar King of Bohemia, who thought the Empire had been aſſured to him (tho ſome Hiſtorians ſay that he refuſed it.) Rodolphus was crowned the ſame year at Aix la Chapelle, and the next was confirmed by the Pope in the Council at Lions, and acknowledged in an Aſſembly at Nuremberg, by all the Princes of Germany, except Ottogar King of Bohemia, who refuſed to be there. Rodolphus declared him a Rebel, and required him to deliver up Auſtria, and many other Provinces which he pretended belonged to the Empire. Ottogar refuſing to deliver them, Rodolphus declares War againſt him, and lays ſiege to Vienna in 1276. Ottogar came with an Army to its aſſiſtance, and the King of Hungary to that of Rodolphus; but yet they did not come to a Battel, the Princes of Germany interpoſing their Authority to make up theſe Differences. 'Twas agreed that King Ottogar ſhould content himſelf with Bohemia and Moravia, and ſhould reſtore Auſtria, Stiria, Carinthia, Carniola, and the other Provinces to Rodolphus, for the performance of which he ſhould take his Oath; and to the King of Hungary thoſe Cities which he had taken from him, as well as the Hoſtages and Treaſures that he had of his. This Peace did not laſt long, for the King of Bohemia, not caring faithfully to perform theſe Articles, and being very angry that he ſhould be thus forced to ſubmit to Rodolphus, provides a new Army, and comes to ſet upon the Emperor, but he loſt the Battel and his own life. Rodolphus took Moravia from Wenceſlaus the Son of Ottogar about eight years old, leaving him Bohemia, under the Tuition of his Uncle Otho Marqueſs of Brandenburg. He gave Auſtria to his eldeſt Son Albert, whoſe Poſterity took the name of Auſtria, as more illuſtrious than that of Hapsburg.

Charles deſpoiled of his Authority by the Pope. The Eſtabliſhment of Rodolphus leſſen'd Charles the King of Sicily's Authority in Italy. Pope Nicholas III. took from him the Vicariate of Tuſcany, and the Quality of Senator of Rome; and in recompence received of Rodolphus, Romagna, and the Lieutenancy of Ravenna which he gave to the Holy See, leaving all the other States of Italy in a ſort of liberty dependant upon the Empire. But it would not content the Pope that he had deprived Charles of his Authority in the upper Italy; he had a deſign to get the Kingdom of Sicily from him too: and about this, deals with Peter King of Arragon, as Heir of the Houſe of Suabia by his Mother Conſtantia the Daughter of Manfred. This gave occaſion to the Conſpiracy that was laid by John Lord of the Iſland of Crocida, whom Charles had rob'd of his Poſſeſſions, againſt this Prince, and all the French that were in Sicily, which did not break out till after the death of Nicholas, when the Sicilians maſſacred all the French in the Kingdom, on Eaſter Sunday 1282.

The Sicilian Veſpers.

Charles coming to revenge this cruel Action, the King of Arragon enters into Sicily with his Army, and amuſes Charles with a Truce. His Admiral Soria lays ſiege to Naples in the year 1284, and, having defeated Charles his Troops, takes his Son Charles the Lame Priſoner, and ſends him into Arragon. Charles had enough to do to keep Apuleia and Calabria, and not being able long to ſurvive his Misfortunes, died at Foggia in Apuleia the 7th of January 1285, leaving his Son Charles the Lame his Heir, who got out of Priſon in 1287, but on condition that he ſhould renounce all Pretences to Sicily. Yet he was no ſooner got out but he made himſelf be crowned at Rome King of Sicily and Apuleia, on the 28th of May 1289. Alphonſus dying ſome time after, Charles made up the matter with Dangianus his Succeſſor, the latter renouncing his Pretenſions to the Kingdom of Sicily, on condition that Charles of Valois ſhould lay down his to Arragon. Yet for all this, Charles the Lame could not enjoy Sicily in peace, for Frederick the younger Brother of Dangianus, to whom Alphonſus by his Will had left this Kingdom, got himſelf crowned King by the Sicilians, ſo that Charles was never in poſſeſſion of any but the Continent; the Kingdom of Sicily as it is called being from that time divided into two: one beyond the Pharos of Meſſina which is the Iſland of Sicily; the other on this ſide of that Tower, call'd the Kingdom of Naples.

Charles his defeat and death.

The diviſion of the Kingdom of Sicily.

The Reign of Adolphus. The Emperor Rodolphus ended his days at Germeſheim near Spire, the laſt day of September 1291, having reigned eighteen years. He laid the foundation of the prodigious Greatneſs of the Houſe of Auſtria; but he laid down as it were the Empire of Italy, by neglecting to go thither, as well as by ſelling his Power over many Cities of Tuſcany. Adolphus Earl of Naſſau was choſen into his place the 6th of January 1292, and crowned at Francfort. He peaceably enjoyed the Empire for ſome years; but the German Lords being diſcontented that he had not allow'd them a ſhare in a ſum of Mony that the King of England had given for help againſt France, and ſeeing that he had not authority nor ſtrength ſufficient to maintain the peace of Germany, depoſed him in 1298, and in his ſtead elected Albert Duke of Auſtria, Son of the Emperor Rodolphus. Adolphus defended his right, but the fortune of War quickly decided the caſe in favour of Albert; Adolphus being defeated and kill'd in the firſt Engagement near Worms, in the month of July. After his death Albert was elected anew, and crowned at Aix la Chapelle, and remain'd in peaceable poſſeſſion of the Empire of Germany.

CHAP. II.

The Life, Letters, and other Writings of Pope Innocent the Third.

The Life of Pope Innocent III.

INNOCENT the Third before he was raiſed to the Pontifical Dignity, went by the name of Lotharius. He was born at Anagni, being the Son of Trafimond of the Family of the Earls of Signi, and of Claricia a Roman Lady. He ſtudied at Rome, Paris, and Bologn; and being upon his return to Rome, was ordained Subdeacon by Gregory the 8*th*, and when he was but 29 years old, was made Chief Deacon by the Title of S. Sergius and S. Bacchius, by Clement the 3*d*. His Learning and Merit made him be unanimouſly choſen by the Cardinals on the very day of Celeſtin the 3*d*'s Death, which happened on the 8*th* of January 1198; although he was then but very young, and no more than Deacon. He was conſecrated Prieſt the 21*ſt* of February the ſame year, and raiſed to the Pontifical Throne on the Sunday next after the Feaſt of the Chair of St. Peter at Antioch. After having ſatisfied the People by the ordinary Largeſſes, and received an Oath of Allegiance from them, he made an Order, forbidding all Officers in the Court of Rome to take any Fee or Gratuity for what ſhould be done at Rome, except the Rights that were due to thoſe who drew up and writ the Bulls, on which he laid a very moderate Impoſt. Having remedied this Abuſe, he applied himſelf wholly to decide in caſes that ſhould be brought before him. Thrice a week he had a publick Conſiſtory, where he in perſon gave Judgment in all principal Cauſes, leaving the meaner ones to his Commiſſaries. This quick diſpatch brought him a multitude of Cauſes from all parts of the world; ſo that an Author that lived in his time remarks, that he in his Popedom decided more and more weighty Affairs than had ever been decided in thrice the time in the Church of Rome. This was the occaſion of his writing ſuch a vaſt number of Letters, of which there is a Collection divided into nineteen Books according to the years of his Pontificate. The two firſt were publiſhed in the laſt Century, by Cardinal Sirlett, printed at Rome in 1543, and reprinted at Cologn in 1575, and at Venice in 1578. Monſieur Boſquet found four others, viz. the thirteenth, and the three following Books at Tolouze in the Library of the College of Foix, and printed them in 1635. Monſieur Baluze has ſince publiſhed the tenth, eleventh, and twelfth, with part of the fifth, and a Collection of the Letters that concern the Empire, and cauſed them to be printed at Paris in 1682, with ſome other Books that had been out before. The third, and the following Books to the tenth, were found in Manuſcript in the Vatican Library. The three laſt are wholly loſt. Becauſe theſe Lettters contain many Hiſtorical Facts and Points of Diſcipline, which may ſhow us what the Eccleſiaſtical Polity of the Church of Rome was in the time of Innocent, by which the Popes have ever ſince taken their meaſures, I thought it might be worth while to make an extract (at leaſt of part) of them, by particularizing the Subject of each Letter.

The Letters of Innocent III.

The firſt then is a Circular Letter about his Election, certifying all the Faithful how that after the death of Celeſtin his Predeceſſor, his Funeral being over, he was choſen Pope by the Cardinals; and recommending himſelf to all their Prayers, that God would give him Grace and ſtrength to bear that heavy Burden of the Papal Chair. This Letter is full of expreſſions of Humility. The 2*d* and 3*d* are nothing but this ſame Letter directed, with ſome few Alterations, to the King of France, and to the Abbots, Priors, and other Religious of that Kingdom.

There is an expreſſion in the ſecond which is no ſmall honor to the King of France ——In Conſideration, ſays he, that the Kingdom of France has always remain'd in unity with the Church, We addreſs the firſt fruits of Our Letters to You, that are the firſt and eldeſt Son of the Church of Rome.

He writ alſo a particular Letter to the Patriarch of Jeruſalem upon the ſame Subject, in which he tells him what a fervent deſire he has to recover the Holy Land, and deliver the City of Jeruſalem. This is the eleventh Letter of the firſt Book.

In the fourth Letter of the ſame Book he writes to the Biſhop of Paris, to put him in mind of exhorting King Philip to take the Queen his Conſort again, and to uſe her kindly.

In the fifth he forbids the Archbiſhop of Strigonia to perform that Vow he had made of going to Jeruſalem, unleſs the Kingdom of Hungary ſhould be in peace. In the next Letter he entruſts him with the Reform of a Monaſtry.

In the ſeventh he reprimands the Abbot of St. Martin of Hungary, for being in a Conſpiracy with a Lord of that Country againſt the King, contrary to the Injunction of Pope Celeſtin.

In the eighth he entruſts the Biſhop of Ferrara with the care of the temporal and ſpiritual Affairs of the Abby of Nonantule, with Authority to puniſh the Abbot.

The ninth is a permiſſion to the King of Hungary to remove a Monaſtry from one place to another.

In the tenth he adviſes one of the Sons of the King of Hungary to make a Voyage to the Holy Land to acquit himſelf of a Vow which his Father had made, and which he had obliged himſelf to perform.

The thirteenth is a moral Exhortation to the Princes of Germany, inviting them to take up Arms againſt the Infidels.

In the fourteenth he appoints the Dean Elect, and Nicholas de Levennes Canon of Cambray, Commiſſioners to give judgment in a difference about a Church that was between the Abbey of Prom, and that of Premontre: but becauſe about the end of the Commiſſion he had added theſe words, quantum de jure poteritis, after theſe, probationes præſentis partis recipere; and conſequently the Commiſſioners ſeemed to have power to prepare things for a hearing without obſerving this Clauſe, the Pope explains himſelf in the 62*d* Letter, and declares that this Clauſe reſpects as well the Preparation for, as the Judgment of the Cauſe.

The fifteenth, which is written to two Cardinal Legates, is againſt an Agreement entred into without his knowledg by a Prior, and the Prelates and Conſuls of the Cities of Tuſcany, which he pretends is a Demeſne of the Holy See.

In the ſixteenth, written to the Chapter of St. Anaſtaſia, having firſt eſtabliſh'd this for a Maxim, that all important Cauſes are to be carried to Rome; he declar'd the Election of a Biſhop, which this Chapter was forced to by the Secular Power, to be null, and order'd the Canons to proceed to the chooſing another, who more deſired to do good, than to enjoy the Dignity, qui non minus prodeſſe deſideret, & noverit, quam præeſſe. He writ two Letters at the ſame time to the ſame purpoſe, the one to the Archbiſhops of Capua, Reggio, and Palermo, the other to the Empreſs, to procure a free Election. Theſe make the 17*th* and 18*th*.

In the nineteenth, addreſſed to the Biſhop of Paris, he declares, That a Prieſt who by the advice of his Phyſicians has been gelt for prevention of the Leproſy, is not thereby render'd uncapable of diſcharging his Miniſterial Office.

By the twentieth he commiſſions the Biſhop of Troyes, and the Abbot of St. Loup to abſolve a Prieſt that had been accuſed of murder, if he could clear himſelf canonically, and his Accuſer did not appear.

In the twenty firſt he orders the Archbiſhop and Archdeacon of Trani to inform againſt the Biſhop of Veſti, for not having obſerved an agreement which he made with his Church, for the reſtitution of many things that he had taken from it.

In the two and twentieth he gives leave to the Archbiſhop of Milan to ordain thoſe Deacons and Prieſts who had received the Clericature of the Pope, becauſe of the neceſſity he found himſelf in of having Prieſts.

The twenty third is an Oath of Fidelity taken by Peter the Prefect of Rome, and by two other Officers to Pope Innocent the Third.

In the twenty fourth he orders the Biſhops of Spire, Strasburg, and Wormes, to command a German Lord to ſet the Archbiſhop of Salerno, whom he kept Priſoner, at liberty; and if he would not, to ſuſpend the Dioceſs wherein he was detained.

In the five and twentieth he orders the Biſhop of Sutri, and the Abbot of St. Anaſtaſius to abſolve Philip Duke of Suabia, provided he ſet the Archbiſhop of Salerno at liberty.

In the twenty ſixth, which is ſuperſcribed to the ſame Perſons, he orders them to charge the German Princes to ſet all the Sicilians at liberty that they had priſoners, and upon their refuſal to excommunicate them, and interdict their Eſtates.

In the ſeven and twentieth he recommends the aſſiſtance of his Legates which he had ſent into the Exarchate, to the Archbiſhop of Ravenna, and his Suffragans.

In the twenty eighth he deſires the Archbiſhop of Sens, and the Biſhop of Meaux to comfort the Counteſs of Champagne about the death of her Son, and to make uſe of Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures for the prevention of any ones doing her any injury.

The twenty ninth is to the Biſhop of Ferentino, and contains a deciſion of the following Caſe. A Man had promiſed another by Oath to marry his Daughter; and there was nothing to hinder the performance of it but the Daughter's unwillingneſs to comply: Two or three years after another man eſpouſed her, per verba de præſenti. The Pope's Judgment is, That the ſecond Contract ought to ſtand, if it were certainly made per verba de præſenti; but if it was enter'd into like the other, per verba de futuro, then the former ſhould take place.

The thirtieth he writes to the Chapter of Strasburg, to certify them, that for the preſervation of the peace of their Chapter, the Provoſt of St. Thomas (in conſequence of the Grant that he had made him of it by his Legate the Cardinal of St. Cecilia) had given up into his hands the right that he claimed to one of their Prebends, and had thereby put an end to the Suit that was between them and that Provoſt.

In the one and thirtieth, written to the Archbiſhop of Tarragon, and the Sacriſt of Wie, he entruſts them with the Judgment of a Difference about the Election of an Abbot of St. Bernet of Bage.

The thirty ſecond is an Act by which he confirms the Settlement that the Archbiſhop of Colocza had made of ſome Churches upon the Provoſt of that Church.

The thirty third is addreſſed to two Canons of Piſa, ordering them to take care that a certain Man's Goods which he had mortgaged for a ſum of Mony ſhould be reſtored him, he paying the Principal of that Sum for which his Eſtate was mortgaged.

In the thirty fourth he warns the Sovereign Magiſtrate, and the Counſellors of Viterbo, not to go on in that Treaty which they and thoſe of Piſa had began to make with the Governors of Tuſcany, without the Conſent of the Holy See. He gives order in the following Letter to his Legates to interdict the Piſans, if they did not obey this Command.

In

In the six and thirtieth he gives judgment that a Priest, who at the point of death has received a Monachal Habit from the hands of a simple Monk, and has thereupon been carried into a Monastry, but afterwards upon his recovery has quitted the Habit, and left the Monastry with the leave of the Abbot, is not afterwards thereby obliged to lead a Monastical Life. Pope Innocent's Letters.

The seven and thirtieth is the decision of a Suit that was between the Archbishop of Milan, and the Monastry of St. Donatus of Scozula.

In the thirty eighth he confirms the Excommunication of Marcovald by his Legates, for having seized upon the goods of the Church; and forbids all his Subjects to obey him, freeing them all from any Oath of Allegiance that they might have taken to him.

The thirty ninth is a Decree, ordering the Bishop of Lodi to settle a Clerk, named James, in the Prebend of the Church of Novara, which had been given him by his Predecessor, except it could be proved that the two Persons who were in possession of the vacant Prebends were chosen before his Predecessor forbad the choosing any other but James. The next Letter is but the same over again, in respect of the other that had been chosen by the Holy See for the other Prebend.

By the forty first and forty second, he puts a Monastry, that depended before immediately upon the Holy See, under the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Luni.

In the forty third he gives order to the Archbishop of Gnesn and his Suffragans to make use of their Ecclesiastical Censures upon the Princes of Poland that troubled the Duke of that Country.

In the forty fourth he gives the Bishop of Worms notice, to take care of the celebration of the Feast of St. Paul's Conversion in his Dioceſs.

The forty fifth is the confirmation of a Privilege granted by the Bishop of Chartres to the Curates of the Deanery of Espernon, and to the other Archdeaconries and Deaneries in his Dioceſs.

In the six and fortieth, addressed to the Archpriest and Canons of Perusa, he confirms the Rules they had made for the government of their Church: which were, that there should be eight regular Canons and professed Monks in their Chapter, two other Clerks, Subdeacons or Acolites: that among the Canons there should be three Offices, an Archpriest, an Ordinary, and a Chamberlain: that the Archpriest should be the chief, and should have the care of the Society: that the Ordinary should be entrusted with the care of the Cloister of the Divine Office, and of the Reading, and should be President in the absence of the Archpriest: and that it should be the Chamberlain's business to take care of the temporal Affairs: for the Election of an Archpriest three persons should be chosen out of their Canons, who should take the Votes of all the others: that the Ordinary and the Chamberlain should be appointed by the Archpriest, but with the consent of the Society; and many other Rules doth this Letter contain for the Settlement of this House.

The forty seventh is a Letter written to the Pope, by the Consuls and Inhabitants of the Castle of Monte-Bello, whereby they give themselves up to the Church of Rome.

In the forty eighth to the Bishop of Marsi he decides the following Case. A Man married a Woman with whom he had before been carnally acquainted; and after that married another of whom he had had Children: the first Woman demands either that he may live with her, or else she may have leave to marry another. The Pope's Answer is, that if this Man married the former per verba de præsenti, he then ought to return her; but if per verba de futuro, they must then both have a Penance enjoined them, and the Woman be at liberty to marry whom she would.

In the forty ninth, to the Abbot and Religious of the Monastery of St. Prosper of Riom, he declares null the Alienation of the Possessions of this Monastery by Guy, a former Abbot thereof.

By the fiftieth he suspended the Patriarch of Antioch from the Power he had of ordaining Bishops, because he had, without permission from the Holy See, translated him that had been chosen Bishop of Apamea to Tripoli, and made him Bishop of that City. In the next he suspends this Bishop too.

The fifty second, fifty third, and fifty fourth are writ about a Church newly built at Compeign, which they would have under the Bishop of Soissons. He writes to him to dedicate it, and that he is willing it should belong to him, so the Bishop of Arras would but consent. And to him too he writes to bring him to agree to it.

The fifty fifth is a confirmation of the Judgment of his Predecessor against the Canons of Limoges, for abusing and driving out a Priest that the Bishop of Perigeux would have made a Canon of that Church: whereby he ordered the Archbishop of Bourges to excommunicate the Canons, and interdict their Church till they gave the Bishop satisfaction. The Archbishop executed the Orders of Pope Celestin the Third. Innocent in this Letter confirms what his Predecessor had done, and orders the Archbishop of Bourdeaux to carry on the procedure against the Canons.

In the fifty sixth he settled the right of Metropolitan of all the Bishopricks in the Isle of Corsica, upon the Archbishop of Pisa, and grants him the Primacy of the Provinces of Sardinia.

The fifty seventh is to forbid giving any Fiefs or Benefices to those that were concerned in the Murder of the Bishop of Vicenza.

By

Pope Innocent's Letters.

By the fifty eighth he took off the Sentence of Excommunication that the Legate of his Predeceſſor had pronounced againſt the Biſhop of Zamora in Spain.

The fifty ninth is written to the Deans of the Churches of St. Mary, and St. Peter of Laon, and to the Chancellor of the Church of that City, about the Preſentation to a Benefice diſputed between the Archdeacon, who had preſented a young man not twenty, and another who had provided a Prieſt. Innocent decides in favor of the laſt, if the thing was ſo as it was repreſented.

In the ſixtieth he commits to the Biſhop of Luques and two other Perſons the deciſion of a Difference between the Biſhop of Orenſe in Spain, and the Abbot of Cella-Nova, about the pretended Exemption of this Abbot.

In the ſixty firſt to the Archbiſhop of Sens he revokes the Privilege granted by his Predeceſſor to the Biſhop of Chartres, which deprived that Archbiſhop of the Power of abſolving thoſe whom this Biſhop had excommunicated till their cauſe ſhould be examined by the Abbots of St. Colombus, and of St. Germain des Prez.

In the ſixty ſecond he determin'd, that Women may come into the Church in a ſhort time after their lying in; but yet, if they think fit to ſtay away out of reſpect, their Devotion is not to be condemned.

In the ſixty fourth he makes null all the Preſentations to Benefices by the Secular Power in the Archbiſhoprick of Averſa. And in the next Letter he dos the ſame for the Archbiſhoprick of Salerna, in all thoſe Preſentations that had been ſo made while that Archbiſhop was kept Priſoner.

In the ſixty ſixth he gives leave to the Monks of Gualdo, to change their confinement for liberty.

By the ſixty ſeventh he commits the Reform of the Abbey of St. Maixant to the Biſhop of Poictiers, and orders him to do Juſtice to the Prior of Azay.

In the ſixty eighth he order'd the Biſhop of Lodi not to have any regard to thoſe forged Letters by which he had hindered the Election of a Biſhop by the Chapter of Novara.

In the ſixty ninth he diſcharged the Biſhop of Troces from a Vow which he had made of going to the Holy Land, upon condition that he ſhould ſend ſome religious Perſon thither, who for the relief of the Country ſhould carry with him the Sum which he would have ſpent in his Voyage. In this Letter he mentions a Letter of Pope Alexander his Predeceſſor, which ſays, that the Vow of going to the Holy Land may be exchanged.

In the ſeventieth he commiſſions the Biſhop of Liege, the Abbot of St. Tron, and the Provoſt of Utrecht to inform againſt the Archbiſhop of Treves, with Power to ſuſpend him, if they ſhould find him guilty of the Crimes whereof he ſtood accuſed by the Dean of his Church.

By the ſeventy firſt he entruſted the Biſhop of Zamora in joint Commiſſion with an Abbot and a Prior, to put in execution the Decree of his Predeceſſor Pope Lucius the 3d, which conſtituted the Archdeacon of Troiſchateaux Biſhop of Leon, notwithſtanding a contrary Decree of his Legate publiſhed ſome time after.

The ſeventy ſecond is written to the Biſhop of Aliſa, to excommunicate thoſe that pretended to make him anſwer before Secular Judges.

The ſeventy third is an order to the Grand Maſter, and the Brothers Hoſpitallers of St. John of Jeruſalem, to reſtore to the Church of Tripoli the Church of Nephin, and all its Dependencies, according as it had been ordered by the Holy See.

By the ſeventy fourth he permitted the Biſhop of Anagni, with the conſent of his Chapter, to mortgage the Church Lands, for to purchaſe a Caſtle which was for his conveniency.

The ſeventy fifth is a ſolemn Decree for confirming the Election of Ademar to the Biſhoprick of Poictiers, which there had been a Suit about at the Pope's Tribunal. After the death of William Biſhop of Poictiers the Chapter agreed to refer the Election of a Biſhop to ſix of the Canons: theſe having let ſix Months ſlip without any Election, the agreement was renewed in the preſence of the Archbiſhop of Bourdeaux, and Ademar was choſen. The Election was confirmed by that Archbiſhop; but on the other ſide the Dean, the Subdean, and ſome Canons oppoſed it, pleading that the time of agreement was expired; that 'twas true it had been renewed, but upon condition that the Election ſhould be the ſame day; that the Electors had put it off to another day, and had done it privately, without making the Chapter acquainted, contrary to the Appeal which the Dean had made to the Holy See. Upon theſe grounds they proceeded to another Election, and named the Biſhop of Nants. Some of thoſe that had made the former Election, ſeeing that the Earl of Poictiers did not much like it, came over to them. The reſt ſtood to their Election, anſwering that Ademar was choſen the very day of the renewal of the agreement, and that the Archbiſhop of Bourdeaux notified it to the Chapter, which agreed to it; that they dared not make it publick, becauſe of the Earl of Poictiers, which was the occaſion of the Electors ſecuring themſelves in ſome ſafe place before they ventured to publiſh what they had done in the City: and as for the reſt, that the conſent of that Prince was not at all neceſſary for the validity of the Election. The Pope having heard the Attornies of both Parties in a publick Conſiſtory, gave Judgment in favor of Ademar, though the King of England was againſt him.

In the ſeventy ſixth he declared that tho his Predeceſſors had conſider'd the Ordination of the Clergy that had no Titles, as nothing, yet he being willing to act with more Lenity towards them, meant that thoſe, or the Succeſſors of thoſe who had ordained them, ſhould provide provide for their Subsistence till they had Benefices: and this he enjoins the Bishop of Zamora in particular in the case of a poor Clerk whom his Predecessor had ordained Subdeacon, without any Title either to a Benefice or Estate. Pope Innocent's Letters.

By the seventy seventh he advised the Dean of Astorga to content himself with the Privileges and Rights that his Predecessors had enjoyed, without overloading the Chapter.

In the seventy eighth he ordered the Archbishop of Magdeburg to expel him that had been thrust into the Bishoprick of Prague by the Secular Power, and to give the Chapter the liberty of choosing one according to form.

In the seventy ninth he commanded the Archbishop of Auch to hinder all Ecclesiasticks obtaining Benefices by means of the Laicks. He ordered him also in the eightieth, eighty first, and eighty second, to make all the rambling Monks to return to their Monasteries; to take care for the Punishment of Hereticks; and to oppose Pluralities either of Livings or Abbeys.

In the eighty fourth he condemned the dealings of two Parsons who would have changed Livings; the one of which put a trick upon the other by making him resign his Living to a Kinsman of his, and then refusing to give him his own. The Pope ordered his Living to be restored him.

In the eighty fifth he wrote to the Archbishop of Milan to excommunicate his Advocate called Passeguerre, for having spoken disdainfully of a Decree he had made, if he did not give surety to make satisfaction within a fortnight.

The eighty sixth is an order to the Archbishop of Sens, to put the Curates of the Bishoprick of Chartres in possession of that Privilege of Exemption that their Bishop had granted them, and which had been confirmed to them by the 45*th* Letter.

In the next he ordered him to take care to provide for those who had been presented to Benefices in that Diocess, and whom the Bishop had put by without any reason.

In the eighty eighth he vindicated himself from a reproach that the Magistrates of Tuscany cast upon him for intending to deliver up the City of Assisi to the Duke of Spoletto. He says, that he was so far from that, that he had excommunicated the Duke, and had not given him Absolution but upon condition that he should deliver up the Country which he was in possession of, which he had in part performed by restoring the Cities of Foligni and Terni, and he had done the same by the Castle of Assisi had not the Citizens of that City and those of Perusa opposed it: as for the rest, the Reason he did not like that Treaty which they had made with his Legates, was only because there seemed to be some things in it which were not for the honour of the Church.

The eighty ninth is an Act of a Grant made to one Peter, of a Prebend of St. Hillary of Poictiers which had belonged to his Uncle.

In the ninetieth he adjudged a Prebend of the Church of Antwerp to him that the Chapter had provided, against one that his Predecessor had given a Canon's place to for his subsistence; because this last had conceal'd his having any more Benefices sufficient for his maintenance.

In the ninety first he gave leave to the Bishop of Alisa to hire an Estate to help forward the paiment of some Debts that he had contracted by the repairing of his Church.

The ninety second is against the incestuous Marriage of the King of Castile's Daughter with the King of Leon. He charges Cardinal Raimier to excommunicate them if they did not part. He orders him also to excommunicate the King of Navarr if he had broken that Treaty which he had made with the King of Castile, and to keep all the Kings and Princes of Spain in peace. The following Letter is to the same purpose.

In the ninety fourth he recommends it to the Archbishop of Aix to assist the Commissaries of the Holy See in their Proceedings against the Hereticks of Provence, and the Vaudois, Catares, Patarins, and others. This same Letter is likewise directed to the Archbishops of Narbonne, Auch, Vienne, Arles, Embrun, Tarragon, and Lions, and their Suffragans, and to all the Princes, Barons, Earls, and in general to all the People of those Provinces.

In the ninety fifth he exhorted all the Ecclesiasticks to favour the Brothers of the Hospital of the Holy Spirit founded at Montpellier: and in the ninety seventh he confirms the Privileges of that Hospital.

In the ninety sixth he ordered the Archbishop of Trani, and the Bishop of Bitonto to take care of the restitution of those things that had been taken from the Monastry of Pont de Brinde, by excommunicating those that were in possession of them, till they should restore them.

In the ninety eighth he gave Judgment that the Canons newly created in the Chapter of Ferara ought to have part of the additions to the Revenues of that Chapter.

In the ninety ninth he puts the King of Portugal in mind of paying that acknowledgment which his Father Alphonsus had engaged himself to pay to the Holy See every year after having received the Title of King, and informs him that he has given order to his Legate to force him, if he would not do it willingly.

In the hundredth he order'd the Chaplains of St. John of Perficeto to pay their Archpriest the right of Procuration, which he should give the Bishop of Bologn for his Visit.

In the hundred and first he ordered the Archbishop of Vienne to put him that had been named by the Abbot of Chaise-Dieu, in possession of the Abbey of Faverni, if he found that Abbot's right was well grounded.

In the hundred and ſecond he anſwered the Chapter of Spoletto, that the Marriage of a Man with a Concubine which he kept while his Wife was alive, is valid, except it could be proved that one of them had a hand in her death.

The hundred and third is in favour of a Man who had a Canonry of the Church of Laon reſigned him, but had been oppoſed in it by another that the Holy See had provided, and caſt after a great deal of charges, in a Suit at Rome under Pope Celeſtin. The Pope willing to deal favourably with him, ordered that he ſhould be acknowledged and conſidered as a Canon by the Chapter of Laon, and ſhould enter upon the firſt Canon's place vacant in that Church, notwithſtanding a Decree of the Holy See to the contrary. This is the Subject of this Letter written to the Archbiſhop of Sens, and the Biſhop and Chapter of Laon.

In the hundred and fourth he determines that a Man who has enter'd into any Order when he was very young, and afterwards has changed it, becauſe of his weakneſs, for one leſs rigid and ſevere, and has in this laſt received all Orders, may without ſcruple perform the Functions incumbent on thoſe Orders, remaining a Monk in the latter Monaſtry.

In the hundred and fifth, and the hundred and ſixth, he declared to the Archbiſhop of Monreal in Sicily, that he is obliged to redeem all the Eſtates of his Church which he had alienated to no good purpoſe, and forbids him to alienate them any more.

In the hundred and ſeventh he determined that Beneficiaries are obliged to reſide in the Church where their Benefices lie.

In the hundred and eighth he confirmed a Treaty made between Walter Archbiſhop of Rouen, and Richard King of England, by the conſent of the Chapter and Biſhops of the Province of Normandy; by which the Archbiſhop of Rouen was to give Andely to the King, except the Churches, Prebends, Fiefs, and the Land of Freſne: and the King in lieu was to give him all the Mills which he had at Rouen, the Towns of Diepe, and Boteille, with the Land of Louviers, and the Foreſt of Aliermont.

In the hundred and ninth, to the Biſhops of Arras, Tournay, Terouane and Cambray, he laid open the whole Suit that had been about the Election of a Provoſt into the Church of Seclin in Flanders. The Counteſs of Flanders who claimed the Patronage of that Church had named a Provoſt for it: the Canons being unwilling to receive him, ſhe appealed to the Holy See; notwithſtanding which Appeal the Canons had choſen John of Bethune for their Provoſt, who had obtained a Reſcript from the Predeceſſor of Innocent, ordering the Biſhop and Provoſt of Soiſſons to maintain the Election, and excommunicate the Counteſs if ſhe ſhould oppoſe it. In purſuance of this the Commiſſaries had excommunicated the Counteſs, and their Judgment had been likewiſe ſeconded by other Commiſſaries: but at laſt the Caſe being brought before Innocent, he declar'd, That the Reſcript in favour of John of Bethune had been obtained by a Trick, that the Counteſs had been unjuſtly excommunicated; and therefore he revoked all that had been acted by the Commiſſaries. This is the Subſtance of this Letter and the next to the Archbiſhop of Rheims.

In the hundred and eleventh he forbad the Archbiſhop of Canterbury to build a Chappel that might any way be a prejudice to his Cathedral.

In the hundred and twelfth he declared it meritorious to reform Women from their lewdneſſes, and to marry them.

By the three following he ordered that the Monaſtry of Baume ſhould be ſubject to that of Cluni.

In the hundred and ſixteenth, written to the Canons and Provoſt of St. Juvença of Pavia, he order'd them to entertain the Canon to whom his Predeceſſor had given a Mandate to be admitted into their Chapter.

In the hundred and ſeventeenth to the Archbiſhop of Bourges, he declar'd, That the Pope alone has Authority to permit Biſhops to change one See for another.

By the hundred and eighteenth he entruſted the Biſhop, the Chanter, and a Canon of the Church of Paris with the execution of a Mandate which his Predeceſſor had given to Bernard of Liſle, for a Canonſhip of Tournay, in which he had been inveſted by the Dean of Paris.

In the hundred and nineteenth he gave Commiſſion to the Biſhop of Lamego, to a Monk that had before been Biſhop of that City, and to a Prior, to be Judges in a difference between the Archbiſhop of Brague, and the Canons of St. Martins of Caſtre about Immunity.

In the hundred and twentieth he ordered the Archbiſhop of Milan to confer the Dignity of Chancellor of his Church on Henry Subdeacon of the Church of Rome.

The three next were written to procure the reſtitution of thoſe things to the Cardinal of Sancta Maria, which had been taken from him by Hubert the Son of Palavicin. He ordered that unleſs within a fortnight they gave ſatisfaction for the damage done to that Cardinal, the Churches of Placentia and Parma ſhould be deprived of their Biſhopricks, and ſubjected to the Archbiſhop of Ravenna.

In the hundred twenty fourth, he gives leave to the Biſhop of Oviedo to make a Monaſtry of a houſe of Regular Canons.

In the hundred twenty fifth, he gave permiſſion to take off the Cenſure that had been publiſhed againſt the Kingdom of Leon, and to abſolve the King; but not before he had reſtored the Biſhop of Leon, and made him reparation for the Injury he had done him.

In the hundred twenty and ſixth to the Archbiſhop of Tarragon, he ſaid, That having heard that his Church was too full by reaſon of the Benefices that had been given to a great many

Perſons

Perſons both within and without his Dioceſs, he would have him for the next ſeven years let alone the filling of Vacancies, that by this means it might be eaſed. Pope Innocent's Letters.

The hundred and twenty ſeventh is a Confirmation of a Mandate granted by his Predeceſſor for a Canonry of the Church of Cambray.

The two next have nothing in them worth taking notice of.

The hundred and thirtieth is the Confirmation of a Treaty between the King of France and Earl of Flanders.

In the hundred and thirty firſt, to the Abbots of Citeaux, and of Clairvaux, he forbad the Archbiſhop of Rouen to act in any thing againſt Philip King of France, to the prejudice of that Appeal which he had put in to the Holy See; and he truſts theſe two Abbots to ſee the Order executed.

In the hundred thirty ſecond he granted the Biſhop of Tortona the power of forcing the Monks of his Dioceſs to obſerve the Interdict which he had publiſhed.

In the hundred and thirty third he gave order that the Pariſhioners of St. Achindanus at Conſtantinople, dependent upon the Archbiſhop of Grado, ſhould pay their Tenths to this Archbiſhop, tho they had been uſed to pay them heretofore to the Biſhops his Suffragans.

In the hundred and thirty fourth he anſwer'd the Abbot and the Religious of Belleville, that they might build Oratories whereſoever they had Religious ſufficient to celebrate Divine Office, provided ſtill that they firſt have leave of the Biſhop of the place. By the next Letter he freed them from that exceſſive Duty of Procuration which they owed the Religious of St. Irenæus.

The hundred and thirty ſixth is an Approbation of the Statutes of the Abbey of St. Waaſt of Arras.

In the hundred and thirty ſeventh he confirms the Cuſtoms and Privileges of the Abbey of Vezetai, and grants it ſome new ones, particularly that of ſinging Gloria in excelſis on the day of the Tranſlation of St. Mary Magdalen in Lent.

In the hundred thirty and eighth he revok'd a Privilege granted to a certain Chapter, that their Church ſhould never be interdicted upon the account of any injury done by the Lords of the place to the neighbour Churches, becauſe they had abuſed this Grant.

In the hundred and fortieth he confirmed the Decree of the General Council of Lateran for ſettling the number of Domeſticks that Prelates might take with them when they went a viſiting.

In the hundred and forty firſt he gave his Approbation of the Agreement which the Abbot and Religious of Vezelai had made with the Earl of Nevers. He writes in the next to the Archbiſhop of Sens, to the Biſhops of Autun, Langres, Auxerre and Nevers, to take care that this Agreement be obſerved by the Count of Nevers and his Succeſſors.

In the hundred forty and third he determined that a Clerk who had bragged of his having abuſed a Woman, ought to be turned out of his Living, and that the Husband of the Woman ſhould take her again.

In the hundred forty fourth he enjoins one who had been elected Biſhop, to whom his Predeceſſor had given leave to be for ſome time abſent from his Dioceſs for the ſtudying of the Holy Scriptures, and who had abuſed this allowance, ſo as to apply himſelf to the ſtudy of the Civil Law; he enjoins him, I ſay, to return to his Dioceſs, and to take with him one well verſed in the Holy Scripture to inſtruct him.

In the hundred forty fifth he gave order to execute a Mandate which his Predeceſſor had given his Secretary for a Canonry of Poictiers.

The hundred forty and ſixth is about the Reform of the Monaſtry of Caduin in Poictou. In the following he order'd that the Abbot of this Monaſtry ſhould be upheld againſt the Abbots that had been forcibly put in by the Monks.

The three following concern the Privileges of the Abbey of Vezelai.

In the hundred fifty and firſt he allows him that had been choſen Biſhop of Cambray to give up his right, and would have the Chapter to proceed to a new Election; and if they could not agree upon a Man, then that the Archbiſhop of Rheims, to whom this Letter is written, ſhould provide one.

In the hundred fifty and ſecond he gives leave to that Archbiſhop to erect the Abbey of Mouzon into a Biſhoprick, or to build a Cathedral in the place according to a Grant made him by his Predeceſſor; provided all the while that the Monks be not driven out of their Monaſtry.

By the next Letter he gives him leave as long as he lives to appoint the Biſhops of this new Biſhoprick.

In the hundred fifty fourth he confirm'd the Judgment which Cardinal William Archbiſhop of Rheims had given in favour of the Chancellor of the Church of Tournay.

The next five Letters are written in favour of the Chapter of the Church of Tournay, to hinder the Alienation of their Eſtate, and about the Diviſion to be made thereof between them.

The four following are in favour of the Church of St. Waaſt of Arras.

In the hundred and ſixty fourth he commiſſions the Archbiſhop of Grado to give Judgment in a Difference between the Archdeacon of Treviſi and the Clergy of that Church.

The hundred and ſixty fifth is addreſſed to all the Prelates and Chriſtian Lords, to exhort them to aſſiſt his Legates Rainier and Guy, and to employ their ſpiritual and temporal Authority againſt the Hereticks which they ſhould find.

Pope Innocent's Letters.

In the hundred and ſixty ſixth he gave leave to the Abbot of St. Waaſt of Arras to ſend back the Regular Canons to a Church they had been of before, although they had been ſettled there ſince the Monks.

In the hundred and ſixty ſeventh he order'd that all thoſe that had a hand in the murder of a certain Biſhop ſhould come to Rome for Abſolution, except they were in danger of their lives, or could not come thither in perſon.

In the hundred and ſixty eighth and ninth he cited the Archbiſhop of Tours to Rome before the Feaſt of St. Michael, for the deciſion of a Difference between him and the Biſhop of Dol.

In the hundred and ſeventieth he entruſted the Archbiſhop of Tarentaiſe, the Biſhop of Aoſta, and the Abbot of Bonnemont to prepare things for a hearing between the Biſhop of Lauſanna and his Chapter, who accuſed him of having robbed and waſted the Goods of the Church. The three hundred and thirty fourth is upon the ſame ſubject.

The hundred and ſeventy firſt is a Letter of advice to Philip Auguſtus King of France, earneſtly exhorting him to take his Wife again, and to put away her that he had married.

In the hundred and ſeventy ſecond he appointed the Archbiſhop of Rheims to take care of the preſervation of the Rights of the Abbey of St. Germain des Prez: which he confirms in the next Letter, as he doth thoſe of the Abbey of St. Dennis in the hundred and ſeventy fourth, and fifth.

In the hundred and ſeventy ſixth he recommends himſelf to the Prayers of the Religious of Citeaux and other Societies.

By the hundred and ſeventy ſeventh he ordered the Archbiſhop of Armagh, to allow the Biſhop of Kabogh, who had reſigned his Biſhoprick to another, to retire, and the other to whom he had reſigned it to remain in it, provided the Canons of that Church would chooſe him.

In the hundred and ſeventy eighth he approved of the Judgment that the Cardinal of St. Mary had given in a Suit between two private Men, about a Canonſhip in the Church of Pavia.

The hundred and ſeventy ninth is a Confirmation of the Election of an Abbot of St. Dennis.

In the hundred and eightieth he gave leave to the Biſhop of Agrigento to remove the Monaſtries in his Dioceſs, which ſtood too much expoſed, into places more ſecure, and to recover the Poſſeſſions of his Church which had been alienated.

In the hundred and eighty firſt he gave leave to the Abbot and Religious of St. Germain of Auxerre, in caſe the Biſhop of Auxerre who was at falſings out with them ſhould deny, or purpoſely to their prejudice defer giving them holy Chriſm for the Dedication of their Altars and Churches, or conſecrating their Abbots, and ordaining their Monks gratis, to apply themſelves to any other Biſhop whom they pleaſed: and likewiſe forbids this Biſhop to require any thing for the abſolution of thoſe belonging to this Abby that he had excommunicated. By the hundred and eighty fourth he determined, that if this Biſhop excommunicated them unjuſtly, his Excommunication ſhall be null: and by the hundred and eighty fifth he allows them to apply to the Archbiſhop of Sens for protection from the Injuſtice and Violences of their Biſhop.

In the hundred and eighty ſecond he appointed the time for the Trial of the Suit between the Biſhop of Langres and his Chapter, to be at Michaelmas.

In the hundred and eighty third he nominated the Biſhops of Arras and Senlis to take care of the Privileges of the Abbey of St. Dennis.

By the hundred and eighty ſixth he appointed the Biſhop and Dean of Maſcon, Judges in the Difference between the Biſhop of Autun and the Monaſtry of Baume.

By the hundred and eighty ſeventh he order'd the Chapter of Milan to let the Biſhop of Tortona ſtill enjoy the Canonry which he had in their Church before he was Biſhop.

In the hundred eighty and eighth he wrote to the Archbiſhop of Sens to oblige the Biſhop of Autun to obſerve the Sentence which the Cardinal, Biſhop of Oſtia, had given in the caſe between this Biſhop of Autun, and the Abbot of Flavigny.

In the hundred and eighty ninth he confirm'd the Election of Hugues to the Abby of Vezelai, and adviſes him to diſcharge his Duty.

In the hundred and ninetieth he wrote to the Archbiſhop and Archdeacon of Sens, not to turn out of his Living a Clergyman that had by chance killed a Child as he was ſhooting an Arrow at a Tree, and had had Abſolution for his Fault from the former Archbiſhop, who had abſolved him, and permitted him ſtill to keep his Benefice.

In the hundred and ninety firſt he empower'd the Biſhop of Troies to oblige the Clergy of his Dioceſs that had Pluralities to leave them, and to force thoſe whom he ſhould have occaſion for in higher Orders, to receive Ordination.

In the hundred and ninety ſecond, to the Archbiſhop of Sens, and the Biſhop of Troies, he diſannuls a new Order made by the Canons of Troies; which was, That the Canons who had been already made, ſhould receive their Incomes whether preſent or abſent, whereas thoſe that ſhould be made for the time to come ſhould not receive them but only when they were preſent.

In the hundred and ninety third he confirm'd an Agreement made between the Biſhop of Troies and the Order of Premontre.

By the hundred ninety fourth, and fifth, he order'd the Biſhop of Xaintes to depoſe the Prior of a Society of Regular Canons, for having waſted the Eſtate of the Monaſtry, and overthrown their Government.

By

By the hundred and ninety fourth, written to the Abbot and Religious of Premontre, he confirmed a Grant made them by his Predeceſſors, of taking in, and turning out whom they pleaſed of their Order, without ſo much as ſubmitting to the Letters of the Pope, for the taking in thoſe again whom they had caſt out. Pope Innocent's Letters.

The next is a Confirmation of a Statute of the Chapter General of the Order of Premontre, forbidding all the Abbots of their Order to wear a Mitre and Gloves like a Biſhop. In the hundred and ninety eighth too he confirms another of the Statutes of their Chapter, by which they had order'd that they ſhould not be obliged to receive any Nuns into their Order. In the two hundreth he gives them protection from any trouble that might be given them under the pretence of the Right of Procuration. By the two hundred and ſecond, and the two hundred and third he order'd that the Canons of this Order ſhould be ſubject to their reſpective Abbots and Superiours, and thoſe to the Abbot and Chapter General of Premontre, before which they ſhould appear at the times appointed by their Orders. Laſtly, he recommends in the two hundred and fourth, the Privileges and Rights of this Order to the care of all the Prelates in Chriſtendom.

In the hundred and ninety ninth he ordered the Archdeacon of Laon to reſtore to Hugues the Abbot of Peirrepont the Horſe which he had exacted of him on the day of his Promotion to that Dignity.

In the two hundred and firſt he wrote to the Biſhop and Dean, and Archdeacon of Soiſſons about an Oath which the Religious of the Abby of St. Eloy of Noyon had made before they choſe an Abbot, that he who ſhould be choſen ſhould have it in his Power to diſpoſe of only three Obediences, and that he ſhould not appeal to the Holy See, or to the Pope's Legate. Innocent determined, That they ought to have a Penance laid upon them for this Oath, and that there ſhould be no obligation upon any one to obſerve it.

In the two hundred and fifth he reprimands the Biſhop of Senlis for giving half a Prebend to a man that had a Mandate of the Popes; contrary to an Order of the Council of Tours, which forbids the dividing of Prebends. He order'd him to give this Man the firſt Canons place that ſhould be vacant in his Church, on pain of being deprived of the conferring of them, till he had provided him one; and forbids the Canons to receive any other.

The two hundred and ſixth Letter to the King of England, is a myſtical Moral upon the Stones of four Rings which he had ſent him.

In the two hundred and ſeventh he gave leave to the Biſhop of Lizieux, to reduce all the Penſions upon the Churches in his Dioceſs which were contrary to the Decree of the Council of Lateran.

In the two hundred and eighth to the ſame Biſhop, after having taken notice that he ought not to admit of thoſe Appeals which were made only to evade Judgment, he granted him power of fixing a competent time to thoſe of his Dioceſs, who had appealed to the Holy See, to proſecute their Appeal; which if they failed to do in that time, Judgment ſhould be executed on them.

The two hundred and ninth is againſt a Dean of Rouen, and a Chaplain who had abuſed a Prieſt, and done other Violences. He order'd the Archdeacons of Bayeux and Coutances to ſuſpend them ab officio & beneficio, and to excommunicate them till ſuch time as they ſhould make ſatisfaction.

In the two hundred and tenth he order'd the Biſhop of Evreux, and the Archdeacon of Lizieux to inform about a deſign of a certain Lord that had many Benefices in his Gift, of founding in his own Land a Collegiate Church of Regular Canons, which ſhould enjoy the Incomes of the Churches of which they were Patrons.

In the two hundred and eleventh he wrote to the King of Navarr to reſtore certain Caſtles to the King of England. If he ſhould refuſe, he threatned to proceed againſt him with Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures.

In the two hundred and twelfth, to the Prior and Religious of Bourgueil, he declar'd it not to be in the power of their Abbot to alienate or mortgage the Eſtate of their Monaſtry, unleſs with the conſent of the greateſt and wiſeſt part of their Society.

In the two hundred and thirteenth he order'd that the Knights ſhould pay the Tenths of the Lands that had been given them, to the Church to which they belonged.

In the two hundred and fourteenth, he entruſted the Archbiſhop of Bourges, the Abbot of St. Cibar of Angouleme, and the Dean of Perigueux with the Regulation of a Difference between the Biſhop of Angouleme and his Chapter, about the number of Canons in that Church.

In the two hundred and fifteenth he gave judgment in a Conteſt about a Prebend of a Church, in favour of him to whom this Letter is written.

In the two hundred and ſixteenth he gives leave to the Abbot of Beza to ſend ſome of his Religious into the Obediences of Cluni, and to take ſome of the Religious of Cluni into his Monaſtry, for the reeſtabliſhment of it after its being very much damaged by fire.

In the two hundred and ſeventeenth he determined that the Merchants ought to pay to the Biſhop of Bergues the uſual Tithes.

In the two hundred and eighteenth he order'd the paiment of the yearly penny for every Family, which the Earl of Couthnes had obliged himſelf to make all his Subjects pay as an Alms to the Holy See; and becauſe the new Biſhop of that Country had been the occaſion of ſtopping the paiment of that Duty, he empowered the Biſhops of Kirchval and Roſſe to force him to it by Eccleſiaſtical Puniſhments.

Pope Innocent's Letters.

By the two hundred and nineteenth he declar'd null the Grant which his Predeceſſor had made of a Church to a Canon of Maſcon, not knowing that he had been excommunicated by his Chapter.

The two hundred and twentieth is written againſt a certain Chaplain that uſed to require Mony for the burial of the Dead, and the benediction of Marriages, and would pretend ſome hindrance or other if they would not pay him.

By the two hundred twenty firſt he committed to the Biſhop of Lisbon and two Priors the Judgment of a Caſe between the Biſhop of Coimbra and the Templers.

In the two hundred and twenty ſecond he ſent back to the Abbot, and two Monks of the Abbey of Alcobacius in Portugal, the Examination of the Difference which was between the Biſhop of Coimbra, and the Monaſtry of the Religious of the Holy Croſs of Arganil, about an Exemption they pretended to under covert of a Privilege which they had by a trick gained of Pope Clement, by feigning that the Mother-Church was not the Cathedral Church, but the Church of Rome. His Determination is, That if this were all they went upon, they muſt e'en be ſubject to the Juriſdiction of that Biſhop.

The five following are likewiſe written to maintain the Privileges of the Biſhop of Coimbra.

The two hundred and twenty eighth is written to the Archbiſhop of Rouen, forbidding him to abſolve thoſe Perſons which his Suffragans had excommunicated; and ordering him to ſend them back to their Biſhop, and then if he ſhould refuſe to abſolve them, giving him leave to do it, firſt taking ſecurity of the Accuſed upon Oath, and upon condition of full ſatisfaction being made to the Biſhop, if he do not find that the man was unjuſtly excommunicated.

In the two hundred and twenty ninth he granted the Biſhop of Lizieux the Privilege of not appearing before the Biſhop of Rouen as Judg Delegate in caſe he ſuſpected him, unleſs his Letters of Commiſſion ſhould have this particularly in them.

The two hundred and thirtieth is to the King of England, wherein he gave him an account of what he had done as to the Reſtitution of that Mony which the Germans had exacted of him for his Ranſom: and of what he had done againſt the King of Navarr to make him reſtore thoſe Caſtles which belonged to him. Laſtly, he makes a relation of the complaints and differences between the Kings of France and England, and proteſts that it was not his deſign to declare for either ſide, but to do all he could to make peace between them.

In the two hundred and thirty firſt he order'd the Archbiſhop of Bourges to inform againſt the Biſhop of Angouleme, accuſed by his Chapter of waſting the Eſtate of his Church, and a great many other Irregularities.

In the two hundred and thirty ſecond, to the Abbot and Religious of Cherlieu, he decided, That one of their Monks who was gone over into the Order of the Black Monks, and had there taken the Order of Prieſthood, could perform the Offices of his Order.

In the two hundred and thirty third he determined moreover, that the Canons may be Witneſſes in the Civil Cauſes of their Church, and that credit ought to be given to their Teſtimony.

In the two hundred and thirty fourth he commiſſions the Biſhop of Autun, and the Abbots of Oigny, and of St. Margaret, to reform the Monaſtry of St. John of Autun.

The two hundred and thirty fifth is written to the Archbiſhop of Rheims, and to the other Archbiſhops and Biſhops of the Kingdom of France, againſt the forging of the Popes Bulls; and to prevent it for the time to come, he order'd that the Bulls ſhould be received either from the hands of the Pope, or of them who are commiſſioned by him to deliver them. And for the remedying what was paſt, he would have a Provincial Council called, and all that pretended to have any Letters from the Pope ordered to produce them, that they might be compared with the true ones: and if they were found to be forged ones, thoſe who forged them ſhould be puniſhed; the Laicks with Excommunication, and the Clergy by being ſuſpended ab officio & beneficio. Laſtly, he order'd that it ſhould be publiſh'd, That all thoſe who to their knowledg had any of theſe forged Letters, ſhould be bound to produce them within a fortnight, under pain of Excommunication not to be taken off by the Pope himſelf, except at the point of death.

In the two hundred and thirty ſixth he wrote to the Archbiſhop of Magdeburg, to force the Duke of Suabia to reſtore that Mony to the King of England which the Emperor Henry had exacted from him for his Ranſom. The two hundred and fifty ſecond is to the Duke of Auſtria upon the ſame ſubject.

In the two hundred thirty ſeventh he empower'd the Biſhop of Tarentaiſe to abſolve thoſe Incendiaries that could not come to Rome within three years, by reaſon of their ſickneſs or hindrance by their Enemies.

In the two hundred and thirty eighth he ſettled upon the Biſhop of Neytrach or Bezzenza all the Poſſeſſions that he might have, and exempts all the Lands of his Church which he kept in his own hands from all ſorts of Tithes.

In the two hundred and thirty ninth, he determined that the Biſhop of Oviedo was not obliged to reſtore the fruits of a piece of Land which belonged to the Biſhop of Zamora, until he had paid what was owed him, that he might be in a condition to pay his debts.

By the two hundred and fortieth, and forty firſt, he revok'd that Privilege which he had granted the Biſhop of Lizieux, of not anſwering, if he did not pleaſe, before the Archbiſhop of Rouen;

Rouen; but he order'd that this Archbiſhop ſhould never proceed againſt him till after having thrice admoniſhed him; and that whenſoever he appealed a futuro gravamine, the Archbiſhop ſhould have no power to attempt any thing farther either againſt him or his Church. Pope Innocent's Letters.

In the two hundred and forty third he gave leave to the Prior of Locheier to keep the Eſtate of his Church in his own hands, paying the Chapter the Rents which the Farmers uſed to pay them.

In the two hundred and forty fourth, to the Biſhop and Chapter of Angouleme, he determined, That the non-reſident Canons ſhould have no power to oppoſe any Orders made by the Chapter in their abſence.

In the two hundred and forty fifth, to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, to the Biſhops of Lincoln and Worceſter, and to the Abbot of Tewksbury, he order'd, That the Monks be reeſtabliſhed in the Church of Coventry, who had been turned out by the Biſhop of Cheſter, under pretence of a Brief gained by a Trick from his Predeceſſor.

By the two hundred and forty ſixth he commiſſioned the Archbiſhop of Bourdeaux, and the Abbots of St. Cibar of Angouleme, and of Nanteuil, to be Judges in a Difference between the Biſhop of Angouleme, and the Archdeacon of Mairinac.

In the two hundred and forty ſeventh he committed to the Biſhop of Nevers the examination of a Difference between the Biſhop of Autun and the Abbot of Buſſiere, about the goods of an Archprieſt who had deſired to be made a Monk in this Abbey, and had let them enjoy his Goods while he lived, of which the Biſhop of Autun ſtript them when he was dead, pretending that when this Archprieſt offered himſelf to the Monaſtry, he was not well in his ſenſes; but, as he anſwered the Monks who asked him, Will you be a Monk? Yes, I will; ſo he anſwered another, who asked him, Will you be an Aſs? Yes, I will. The Pope order'd that if the Biſhop could prove that the Archprieſt was beſide himſelf at the time he made this Donation, then the Monaſtry ſhould be condemned to reſtore his Eſtate and the Uſe of it; but if he could not prove that, they belonged to the Monaſtry.

In the two hundred and forty eighth he entruſted the Abbot of St. Eucher, the Dean, and a Canon of Treves, with the Judgment of a Suit about a Prebend of St. Mary Magdalen of Verdun.

In the two hundred and forty ninth he order'd Cardinal Rainier to oblige the Kings of Portugal and Caſtile to obſerve the Conditions of peace which they had agreed upon.

The ſix next Letters have nothing worth notice in them.

In the two hundred and fifty ſixth he determin'd, That the Acts of Judges are not authentick unleſs they are authoriſed by the Witneſſes.

In the two hundred and fifty ſeventh he confirmed ſome Rules made by the Magiſtrates of Benevento, about the dues of Officers of Juſtice.

By the two hundred and fifty eighth he order'd the execution of a Mandate granted by Pope Celeſtin for a Canonſhip of Benevento.

In the two hundred and fifty ninth he order'd the Archbiſhop and Chapter of Rouen to proceed according to the Reſolution of the greateſt and wiſeſt part of the Chapter, that every Canon ſhould contribute out of his Revenue towards the repairing of the Church.

In the two hundred and ſixtieth, written to the ſame Archbiſhop, he exhorts him not to yield to the agreement which the Kings of France and England had made together, by which they reſolved to appoint four Eccleſiaſticks to examine whether the Judgments he had given, or ſhould give, ought to be executed by them againſt their Subjects; and in caſe they ſhould not give Judgment, that they ought to force them by ſeizing on their Eſtates to revoke their Judgment.

In the two hundred and ſixty firſt he wrote to the Biſhop of Wincheſter to puniſh the Simoniacks in his Dioceſs, notwithſtanding their appeal to the Holy See.

In the two hundred and ſixty ſecond, to the Biſhop and Chapter of Veſca, he order'd them to turn a certain Clergyman out of his Living for having forged Letters, by which he got his Living again after having left it.

In the two hundred and ſixty third he gave leave to the Biſhop of Amiens to put what Canons he pleaſed into a Houſe which he had given the Abbot of St. Martin of the Twins to place his Canons in, if the Abbot ſhould neglect to do it after being put in mind by the Biſhop.

In the two hundred and ſixty fourth, to the Archbiſhop of Rouen, he determined, That a perſon who hath the Patronage of a Living cannot preſent himſelf to it, however fit he be for the Place.

In the two following to the ſame Perſon, he declar'd, That all the Dioceſans as well Eccleſiaſticks as Laicks are obliged to ſubmit to the Sentences of Interdiction publiſhed by the Biſhop.

In the two hundred and ſixty ſeventh, written to the Biſhop, Archdeacon, and Sacriſt of Maguelone, about a Difference between this Biſhop and the Provoſt of his Church concerning a Perſon nominated to the Archdeaconſhip of this Dioceſs, after having related the reaſons urged on one ſide and the other, he declar'd, That following the Footſteps of his Predeceſſors, who were of opinion, that the Judgments of the See of Rome might be altered when it was found there had been a Trick, he revoked the Donation of this Archdeaconſhip made by the Biſhop, although approved of by his Predeceſſor Pope Alexander; and order'd the Chapter to proceed to a new Election. By the five hundred forty and firſt he ſettled the Archdeaconſhip upon him who had had it conferred upon him by the Archbiſhop of Arles.

In

Pope Innocent's Letters.

In the two hundred and ſixty eighth he recommended the protection of the Monaſtry of St. Victor of Marſeilles to the Archbiſhops of Arles, Aix, and Embrun, and to the Biſhops their Suffragans.

In the two hundred and ſixty ninth he order'd the Biſhop of Varadin to come to Rome to receive the Abſolution of the Excommunication which he had incurred.

In the two hundred and ſeventieth he gave leave to the King of Hungary to keep back an Earl, and ſome other Holy Soldiers to the number of twenty, whom he had need of to keep himſelf firm in his Kingdom.

In the two hundred and ſeventy firſt he exhorted an Hungarian Lord to be loyal to his King.

In the two hundred and ſeventy ſecond he confirmed a Judgment given by his Legate Cardinal Gregory in favour of the Biſhop of Tranſilvania.

By the two hundred and ſeventy third he entruſted the Archbiſhop of Arles with the Reform of the Monaſtry of Lerins, with leave to put in ſome of the Monks of Citeaux, if he did not find any of that Order there.

In the two hundred and ſeventy fourth he gave leave to this Archbiſhop to put ſome of the Monks of Citeaux into an Iſland in the ſtead of the Canons which were there, but had not ſubſiſtence.

In the two hundred and ſeventy fifth he order'd the Archbiſhop and Archdeacon of Narbonne to nullify all that the Abbot of St. Saviour of Lodeve had done againſt the Monks of his Monaſtry, and other Perſons, to the prejudice of their Appeal put into the Holy See.

In the two hundred and ſeventy ſixth he gave leave to the Canons of St. John of Beſancon to ſettle another Houſe with the conſent of their Biſhop.

By the two hundred and ſeventy ſeventh he diſcharged the Archbiſhop of Beſancon from the accuſation which his Canons had laid againſt him, they not caring to proſecute it; and he forbids them for the future to propoſe any thing againſt their Archbiſhop: but in the mean while he ſets the Biſhop of Challon and the Abbot de la Fertè to inform him of the Conduct of this Archbiſhop.

By the two hundred and ſeventy eighth he commiſſioned the Abbots of Citeaux and de Toul to proceed againſt the Treaſurer of Beſancon, to oblige him to reſidence, becauſe, ſays he, it is agreeable to reaſon and equity, that he who has the honor and the profit ſhould bear the charge of it, and that the Eccleſiaſtical Dignities were eſtabliſhed for this end that thoſe who enjoyed them ſhould do Service to the Lord.

In the two hundred and ſeventy ninth he complained to the Archbiſhop of Milan of his ſaying that he had been deceived in the meaning of Letters from the Holy See for want of attention to what they contained, and order'd him for the future to take care of the execution of thoſe that ſhould be directed to him or his Dioceſans, except they had been gotten by ſuppreſſing and hiding the Truth, or by telling a Falſhood.

The two hundred and eightieth is a Confirmation granted to the Chapter of Colocza to receive the Tithes of certain Villages.

In the two hundred and eighty firſt he committed the Reform of the Monaſtry of St. Stephen to the Archbiſhop of Colocza.

In the two hundred and eighty ſecond, to the Patriarch of Grado, he order'd the execution of a Treaty made between the Church of St. Saviour, and that of St. Bartholomew of Venice.

In the two hundred and eighty third he determined, That the Church of St. Proculus ſhould be totally ſubject to the Monaſtry of St. Zeno of Verona, and that the Archprieſt and Clergy of that Church ſhould be ſubject to the Abbot of St. Zeno, and ſhould receive the Holy Chriſm from his hands. He leaves them to take care of all that belonged to the Church of St. Proculus, the Chappels and Offices which depended on it, and the Privilege of chooſing the Archprieſt.

The two hundred and eighty fourth is a Confirmation of the Inſtitution of the Order of Regular Canons of the Abby of S. Oſytus of Chuc, and of its Privileges.

In the two hundred and eighty fifth he order'd that the Biſhop of Segovia ſhould have the Privilege of putting Canons into his Church with the conſent of the greateſt and wiſeſt part of the Chapter, notwithſtanding the oppoſition of ſome of the Canons.

The two hundred and eighty ſixth is a Confirmation of the Privileges of the Abbey of St. Germain of Auxerre.

In the two hundred and eighty ſeventh, to the Biſhop of Pampeluna, he empower'd this Biſhop to celebrate, or cauſe to be celebrated during the General Interdict, the Divine Office in a low Voice, the doors of the Church being ſhut, without ringing the Bells, upon condition that he ſhould not aſſiſt any of thoſe that were interdicted or excommunicated.

By the two hundred eighty and eighth he gave commiſſion to the Biſhop of Riez to give the Dean of St. Quintin who was in Lombardy, notice to appear before the Archbiſhop of Rheims, and the Biſhop of Arras, whom he had appointed Judges in the Difference between the Dean and his Chapter, jointly with any other whom the Dean ſhould pleaſe to name. The following Letter is the Commiſſion to the Archbiſhop of Rheims and the Biſhop of Arras.

In the two hundred and ninetieth he confirm'd the Election of Sifroy to the Provoſtſhip of Augsburgh.

By the two hundred and ninety firſt he commiſſioned the Archbiſhop of Bourges to inform againſt the Abbot of Eſterpe.

In the two hundred and ninety ſecond he gave leave to the Biſhop of Aquino to retake the Poſſeſſions which had been alienated from his Church. In the two hundred and ninety fourth he gave the Biſhop of Malta the ſame permiſſion.

In

In the two hundred and ninety third he confirm'd the Order which the Biſhop of Vatz in Hungary had made to oblige the Curates of his Dioceſs to come to his Synod. Pope Innocent's Letters.

By the two hundred ninety fifth he commiſſioned the Archbiſhop of Trani, and the Archdeacon of Brindeſi to be Judges in a Difference between two private Men about the Chanterſhip of Otranto.

In the two hundred and ninety ſixth he confirmed the Power of the Canons of St. Peter of Rome over divers other Churches.

In the two hundred ninety ſeventh he determin'd, That a Man who had been diſtracted, and was thereupon turned out of his Canonſhip, and made a Monk of, and being now come again to his Senſes had proteſted againſt this dealing, ſhould be put off a while, and reeſtabliſhed in his Living.

In the two hundred and ninety eighth, to the Archdeacon of Milan, he declar'd that Hereticks cannot be choſen into Livings, nor have any right to chooſe.

In the two hundred and ninety ninth he entruſted the Biſhop of Nevers, and the Abbots of Vezelai, and Maizeries, with the Judgment of a Difference between two Competitors to the Abbey of Flavigny.

By the three hundredth, to the Archbiſhop of Magdeburg and his Suffragans, he order'd them to make uſe of Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures to make the Eſtates of the Holy Soldiers, which had been taken from them while they were in the Holy Land, be reſtored them.

In the three hundred and firſt he commits to the Biſhop of Lizieux, and the Abbot of Valricher, the Cauſe of the Abbot of Conches.

In the three hundred and ſecond he exhorted the Biſhop of Syracuſe, and the Biſhops of Apuleia, Calabria, and Tuſcany, to preach the Cruſade, and earneſtly exhort all their Dioceſans to go to the Holy Land.

In the three hundred and third he adviſed the Religious of St. Saviour of Teleſa to proceed to the Election of a new Abbot, their Abbey being vacant by the voluntary Reſignation of the former.

The three hundred and fourth is a Mandate directed to the Biſhop of Limoges, and the Canons, for a Prebend of their Chapter.

In the three hundred and fifth he declar'd that the judgment of the greateſt and wiſeſt part of the Chapter ought to carry it.

In the three hundred and ſeventh he decided this Caſe, That a Man who wanted his left hand, and had been choſen Abbot without its being known that he was ſo maimed, ought to be turned out, as not being capable upon that account to receive Holy Orders.

In the three hundred and eighth he wrote to the Archbiſhop of Lyons about the abſolution of his Archdeacon.

The three hundred and ninth is written to the Biſhop of Padua againſt thoſe Canons that lived more like Laicks than Eccleſiaſticks, who wore the Habit of Laicks, and made no ſcruple of living publickly with Concubines; he order'd the Biſhop to take care of them, to oblige them to live honeſtly, to wear a Clergyman's Habit, and to part with their Concubines, to eat in common, and never to lie out of their Cloiſter.

In the three hundred and tenth he wrote to the Archbiſhop of Montreal in Sicily, that the Holy See always kept the abſolution of thoſe that abuſed the Clergy in its own hands, to the end that if the honour and reſpect which was due to Eccleſiaſticks could not keep men within their duty, at leaſt the pains and trouble of a Voyage to Rome might reſtrain them: that the Church of Rome did ſometimes abate of this Rigour by an eſpecial Diſpenſation, where 'twas reaſonable: that in this it did not ſeek its own private advantage, but aimed at the preſervation of the Privileges of the Clergy, and the Salvation of thoſe that failed in that point. Upon theſe grounds he gave power to this Archbiſhop for three years to abſolve ſuch of his Dioceſs who were guilty of this Crime, as either for age or infirmity were not in a condition to come to Rome.

In the three hundred and eleventh he confirmed the Orders which had been made by the Biſhop of Rennes, commiſſioned by the Legate of the Holy See, in regard to the Duty of the Abbot of Bourgueil and his manner of living; namely, that he ſhould be obliged to eat in the Hall, and ſleep in the Dorter, except he had ſome allowable excuſe to aſſiſt in the Office, to take the advice of his Chapter in Affairs relating to the Houſe, &c. He appointed in the next Letter the Biſhop and Dean of Rennes to ſee theſe Orders executed.

In the three hundred and thirteenth he determined, That a Laick who had the Tithes in his hands might give them to a Monaſtry with the conſent of the Biſhop of the Dioceſs, without having need of taking that of his Clergy too.

In the three hundred and fourteenth he confirmed a Judgment given between two Prieſts of Treviſi, by a Cardinal whom he had commiſſioned for that purpoſe, in a Suit which they had about a Benefice.

In the three hundred and fifteenth he order'd the Archbiſhop of Milan to give a Canon's place in his Church to Bonacatſius a Clergyman of that City, who had been ſent on the part of this Archbiſhop to the Pope, and had gained a Mandate about a Benefice in that Church.

In the three hundred and ſixteenth he confirmed the Privileges of the Archbiſhop of Montreal.

The three hundred and ſeventeenth is an account of a long Caſe between the Abbot of Pegaw, and the Biſhop of Mersburg. This Abbot being accuſed of many Crimes, was called on by the Biſhop to anſwer, who paſſed ſentence upon him for Non-appearance, which was confirmed by the the Legate of the Holy See. To avoid the Consequences of this Sentence, and without telling a word of what had passed, he obtained a Grant from Pope Celestin, which exempted him from the Jurisdiction of this Bishop. Returning into Germany, and there showing his Grant, he was cited to the Court of the Emperor who had an account of it. From thence he appealed to the Holy See, and got Commissaries named. In the mean time the Archbishop of Magdeburg having interdicted, and having a mind to turn him out of his Abby too, he was forced to put himself into the hands of this Archbishop, who gave an arbitrary Sentence. The Abbot not being pleased with this, made his complaints to Rome, and had Commissaries appointed not very favourable to the Bishop of Mersburg: they made their Information: it is carried to Rome, the Affair is sent back again from thence to other Commissaries, and at last made up by an agreement between the Parties. Notwithstanding this, the Abbot still applied himself to Rome, and got two of the prime Judges appointed Commissaries; the one of them gave his Information, and the Bishop appeal'd from it. The Pope gave them Commissaries, and upon their report of the Case, doth by this Letter confirm the decisive Sentence of the Archbishop of Magdeburg, except what regarded the validity of the Privilege. He revokes whatsoever is contrary to that, and order'd that the Monastry should remain free, and exempt from the Jurisdiction of the Bishop, till such time as the matter could be fully tried. By the following Letter he appoints Commissaries upon the place to inform of the matter.

In the three hundred and nineteenth he appointed the Archbishop, the Dean, and the Chanter of Lions to judg in a Case between two Archdeacons of Challon. He there determin'd, That a Man who hath been excommunicated for two causes, and hath been absolved upon the score only of one, remains still excommunicated.

In the three hundred and twentieth he warned the Clergy of Islande to take some order about the Disorders which reigned in their Country. The three hundred and twenty first is written upon the same Subject, and in the same Terms, to the People of that Island.

In the three hundred and twenty second, to the Archbishop of Otranto, he determin'd, That the Son of a Woman who passed for the Concubine, and was afterwards declared the lawful Wife of a Man, is Legitimate.

In the three hundred and twenty third, he declar'd, That a Deacon who had been deprived of his Benefice by an Abbot, who was afterwards out of revenge, without his knowledg, killed by his Kindred, and who out of sorrow for this accident turn'd Monk, and forbore executing the Functions of his Order for two years, might not only execute them, but be also raised to the Priesthood, if there was no other bar, but his suspected Innocence.

In the three hundred and twenty fourth he wrote to the Bishop of Arras and the Dean of Cambray, to put the King of France in mind of paying the Duke of Lorrain his Wife's Portion.

By the three hundred and twenty fifth he determin'd, That a Girl who was not eight years old, could neither contract Marriage, nor make any Promise that could oblige.

In the three hundred twenty sixth, he gave leave to the Bishop of Faience to remove to the Bishoprick of Pavia, to which he had been elected. There are very pretty things in this Letter about the spiritual Marriage of a Bishop with the Church his Spouse. What is said in Scripture about the indissolubility of the carnal Marriage, he presumes may be as well applied to the spiritual. He adds, that it should seem then as if it were not in the power of the Pope to break the spiritual Marriage of a Bishop with his Church: and yet Custom, which is the Interpreter of the Laws, and the Holy Canons always gave full Power to the Holy See, to which alone belong the placing, the deposing and translating of Bishops: wherein he sayeth the Popes do not exercise human Authority, but that of Jesus Christ, whose Vicars they are. He takes notice that the Church of Pavia ought not to have elected, but have asked for him. Lastly, he declared, That he consents to this Translation only for the good which will thence accrue to the Church of Pavia.

In the three hundred and twenty seventh he confirm'd the Decree made by the Bishop and Chapter of Orense in Spain to admit of but six and twenty Canons.

In the three hundred and twenty eighth he recommended the Bishop of St. George to the Monks of Monte-Cassino that they might entertain him, and supply him with whatsoever was necessary during his abode in their Monastry.

In the three hundred and twenty ninth he commissioned the Archbishop of Cagliari, and two other Bishops of Sardinia, to sit Judges in a Difference which was between the Bishop of Oristagni and his Chapter.

In the three hundred and thirtieth he gave in charge to the Bishop of Limoges to reprehend and correct the Clergy of his Dioceses.

The three hundred and thirty first is an Approbation of the Order of Premontre, and a Confirmation of its Customs and Privileges.

In the three hundred and thirty second he entrusted the Dean of Lisbon and two Priors to examine the Privilege granted by the Bishop of Coimbra to his Chapter.

In the three hundred and thirty third he determined, That a deaf and dumb Person may marry.

In the three hundred thirty fifth he suspended the Bishop of Hildesheim, for removing to the Bishoprick of Wirtzburg without the leave of the Holy See, and deprived the Canons of Wirtzburg of the power of Election for this time, for having chosen him.

The

The three hundred and thirty ſixth is a circular Letter, exhorting all Princes and People to take up Arms for the defence of the Holy Land againſt the Saracens. Pope Innocent's Letters.

The three hundred and thirty ſeventh is a Mandate granted to a Clerk for a Canon's place in the Church of Treviſi.

In the three hundred and thirty eighth, written to the Archbiſhop of Sens, he declar'd, That in caſe the Dean and Chapter of Sens had with an Oath fixed the number of Canons before the Pope granted his Mandate to the Clerk, then the Mandate ſhould be null: and that all the Clerk had to do, was to make them come to Rome to maintain their pretended right: becauſe, ſays he, as we expect to be punctually obeyed when we command any thing, ſo we would not command any thing which is unjuſt.

The three hundred and thirty ninth is a Mandate granted to a Clergyman for an Archdeaconſhip vacant in the Church of Ivrea.

In three hundred and fortieth he exempts the Chapter of St. Domnin's-Burg from the Juriſdiction of the Biſhop of Parma.

In the three hundred and forty firſt, to the Biſhop of Otranto, he adviſed him to put the Religious of Citeaux into a Chappel, and into a Monaſtry, in compliance with the deſire of the Earl the Founder of the Chappel, and Patron of the Monaſtry.

The three hundred and forty ſecond is a Confirmation of a Privilege of Exemption granted to the Church of St. Nicholas du Mont near Narni.

In the three hundred and forty third he exhorted the Biſhop of Lydda to continue his care and preaching in Sicily, to promote the raiſing of an Army for the Recovery of the Holy Land. By the next he gave him power to abſolve thoſe Excommunicated, whoſe Caſes belonged only to the Holy See to remit, on condition that they would go in perſon to the Holy Land.

In the three hundred and forty fifth, addreſſed to the Prelates of France, he recommended to them the Legate whom he had ſent into that Kingdom to make peace between the King of France and the King of England, and to gain them to aſſiſt againſt the Saracens.

In the three hundred and forty ſixth he gave power to his Legate to ſummon ſuch Engliſh Prelates as he thought neceſſary to procure the Peace. By the following he order'd him to proceed by way of Interdict againſt the Kingdom of France, if King Philip did not take his Wife again within a month. He exhorted this Prince to make and conclude the Peace with the King of England, in the three hundred and forty eighth Letter.

In the three hundred and forty ninth, written to the Archprieſt and Canons of Milan, he diſcover'd a Forgery which had been practiſed in a Bull, by taking the Seal from another Letter, and faſtning it to this forged one. He order'd the puniſhment of him who was ſuſpected of it, and at the ſame time takes notice of the different ways that the Letters of the Pope might be forged. The firſt is to faſten a falſe Bull to them. The ſecond is to tear the Bull from another Letter, and faſten it to a falſe one, by putting another Thread through it. The third is to cut one of the ſides of the Thread of the Bull, and to faſten it to another Letter, by joining the Thread together again with Flax of the ſame Colour. The fourth is to ſlit the Load in two, and take out of it one ſide of the Thread, and afterwards to join it together again. The fifth is to raze out the writing of the Letters, and change them as we pleaſe. The ſixth is to carry falſe Letters, and to mingle them rightly among the others, and ſo get the Bull faſtned to them. This laſt ſort is the hardeſt to be found out, and cannot be diſcovered but by the Stile, or by the Hand, or by the Parchment; whereas the others might be found out only by inſpection.

In the three hundred and fiftieth he declared, That all Believers might appeal to the Holy See, and that no one ought to act againſt them in prejudice to that Appeal, or to proceed againſt thoſe who would appeal. And in the following he ſays, That no one can proceed againſt a Perſon who is gone to Rome, for this is as it were an appeal in facto, and ought to be more conſidered than a verbal one.

By the three hundred and fifty ſecond he ordered the Biſhop of Ariano to inform about the Election of an Abbot of Benevento, that he might know whether it was fit to confirm it or no.

In the three hundred and fifty third he exhorted the Emperor of Conſtantinople to aid the Holy Land againſt the Saracens, and to labour for the union of the Greek and Latin Churches. In the next Letter he gave the ſame exhortation to the Patriarch of Conſtantinople.

In the three hundred and fifty fifth he exhorted the Kings of France and England to peace, and to furniſh out Troops for the aſſiſtance of the Holy Land.

In the three hundred fifty ſixth he ordered the Magiſtrates, the People, and the Great Lords of the Dutchy of Spoletto to obey his Legate, as being Subjects of the Holy See, to which the Duke of Spoletto had given up his Eſtates. This ſame Letter is alſo written to many other Cities of Italy.

In the three hundred and fifty ſeventh he wrote to the King of England, about a Chappel which the Archbiſhop of Canterbury had newly built, and had a mind to put Canons into, and make his ordinary reſidence at: The Pope is earneſtly againſt this Eſtabliſhment, and exhorted the King of England not to promote it.

In the three hundred and fifty eighth he recommended himſelf to the Prayers of the Abbots met together in the Chapter General of Citeaux, and deſires them to excuſe one of their Brothers whom he employ'd to preach in Sicily.

Pope Innocent's Letters.

In the three hundred and fifty ninth he gave order to the Biſhop of Oſtia to conſecrate ſome Altars which they ſaid were not yet conſecrated, in obedience to a Viſion which a Prieſt ſaid he had ſeen, in which St. Peter appeared to him many times, and ordered him to give the Pope notice that there were a great many Altars which wanted conſecration, and that he was careful to have them conſecrated. Innocent ſays at the end of the Letter, That tho, according to the caution of the Apoſtle, we muſt not believe every ſpirit, yet becauſe in a matter of this nature it is not likely that an Angel of Satan would transform himſelf into an Angel of Light, it is better to believe piouſly than to doubt raſhly; and becauſe the thing is otherwiſe good in it ſelf, tho it had not been revealed, he was reſolved to have it put in execution.

In the three hundred and ſixtieth he juſtifieth his conduct to thoſe of Milan in having excommunicated their Advocate Paſſeguerre, for failing in that reſpect which was owing to the Judgment of the Holy See.

In the three hundred and ſixty firſt he granted the Inhabitants of Monteſiaſcone an abatement of half the Tribute they were to pay to the Pope, upon condition they ſhould maintain ſome Troops of Horſe and Foot for his Service.

In the three hundred and ſixty ſecond he decided the caſe of a Man that was accuſed of Adultery by his Wife, thus; That Judgment could not be given upon an Information that was made lite non conteſtata, and all that could be done was to excommunicate the Man for refuſing to make his appearance.

In the three hundred and ſixty third he ordered the Goods of a Church, which had been alienated from it, to be reſtored.

The three hundred and ſixty fourth is about a Difference between two Iriſhmen for the Biſhoprick of Roſſe: He ſends back his Judgment of it to the Archbiſhops of Armagh and Caſſil, and to the Biſhop of Laom. The three hundred and ſixty ſixth is a Confirmation of the Election of the Biſhop of Laghlin in the ſame Country. And by the three hundred and ſixty ſeventh he order'd a Lord of this Country not to oppoſe this Biſhop in taking poſſeſſion of his Biſhoprick, but to take care about the reſtitution of thoſe Goods which had been taken from his Church.

The three hundred and ſixty fifth is a Confirmation of the antient Cuſtoms of the Society of St. Agathus.

In the three hundred and ſixty eighth he decided a conſiderable Affair about the Chancellorſhip of the Church of Milan. The Pope had given it to a Subdeacon, a Canon of that Church, and had directed the Mandate for it to the Archbiſhop of Milan: he received it, and ſent word back again that he had not given it him, becauſe he had need of the Revenues of it. The next day he changed his note, and declared that he had given it above ten months before to Henry of Lampune; ſtraight the Archbiſhop was cited to Rome before the Pope, and having ſent his Attorney with Witneſſes to Rome, he proved that the Chancellor being dead in the month of January, he had by the application of his friends ſecretly in his Chamber given his place to this Henry, they having promiſed to let him enjoy the Revenues; that he had inveſted him in it by giving him the Book, and had received his Oath of Fidelity, but had not indeed given him the Patent till after having received the Pope's Mandate. This Donation was incumber'd with many Difficulties. 1. The bargain made with his Kindred was unwarrantable. 2. It was made privately. 3. The Inveſtiture was performed with an extraordinary Ceremony. 4. 'Twas maintained that the Chancellorſhip being a ſpiritual Benefice could not be conferred after ſuch a manner. 5. That he on whom it was conferred, not being an ordinary Canon, was not capable of it. The Pope appointed Commiſſioners upon the place to inform about theſe matters, and interdict the Chancellor the right of enjoying it. Upon this he applied himſelf to the Pope, deſiring to have all things reſtored him; alledging, that the Patent had been given him before the receipt of the Mandate. As to the form of the conceſſion, he defended that by maintaining that there was no Simony in keeping of the Income, as well becauſe the Office of Chancellor is not ſpiritual, nor has any ſpiritual Functions annexed to it, as becauſe there was no buying or ſelling in the caſe, and that the Fruits which he had given up had been ſeparated from the Office, and kept back by the Archbiſhop before this Donation; that as for the reſt, he was capable of the Office, being a Canon of the Church of Milan, and having a voice in the Chapter, and a place in the Choir. That laſtly he had had no hand in the bargain which they ſaid his Friends had made, but had been purely and ſimply put into the Chancellorſhip. Upon theſe Allegations the Pope judges that the Archbiſhop was in the fault. 1. In giving different Anſwers. 2. In not providing a perſon more capable. 3. Becauſe he ought not to beſtow a Benefice upon any one, and keep the Income of it to himſelf, nor to make a Bargain to keep them before he will confer the Benefice. For his Puniſhment, he deprived him of the Privilege of conferring the firſt Prebend vacant in his Church. And as for the Chancellorſhip, how great a mind ſoever he had, if he could do it with juſtice, to give it to the Subdeacon whom he had provided, yet he declared he had not found Henry in fault ſufficient to deſerve being turned out, becauſe he had made no bargain: and beſides, it was not proved that the Chancellor had any ſpiritual Functions incumbent on him; the propoſing the Ordainers and the examining of them, and the putting the Abbots and Abbeſſes in poſſeſſion, which was cuſtomary for the Chancellors to do, belonging properly to the Archdeacons, and being done by the Chancellors only by the Commiſſion of the Biſhops. He took off alſo the Interdict which his Commiſſaries had pronounced againſt him, and judged that the trouble of taking two Journys to Rome was puniſhment ſufficient.

The

The three hundred and ſixty ninth is an Order directed to the Magiſtrates and Inhabitants of Caſtellane, to take the Oath of Fidelity to thoſe whom he had ſent on his part to receive it. Pope Innocent's Letters.

By the three hundred and ſeventieth he order'd the Archbiſhop of Canterbury to retake thoſe Goods which had been alienated from his Church, and confirmed the Reunion which he had already of ſome that had been alienated.

In the three hundred and ſeventy firſt he confirmed the Declaration of Richard King of England, importing, that the ſubvention and help which had been granted him by the Clergy of England ſhould be no hurt or prejudice to the Eccleſiaſtical Immunity.

By the three hundred and ſeventy ſecond he approved of the Donation which the Archbiſhop of Louden had made to the Church of Roſchild, on condition that he ſhould enjoy it during his life.

In the three hundred and ſeventy third he confirmed the foundation of ſix Prebends which the Biſhop of Arhuſen had made in his Church.

The three hundred and ſeventy fourth is written to the Archbiſhop of Upſal about the Pallium which he ſent him.

In the three hundred and ſeventy fifth he takes thoſe of Peruſa into his protection, and confirms their Privileges.

The three hundred and ſeventy ninth is a permiſſion to one who had made a Vow to be a Hoſpitaller to enter into the Order of St. Bennet.

In the three hundred and eightieth he declared a Marriage null between a Man and a Woman, becauſe the Woman had before they were married been Godmother to a natural Son which the Man had by another Woman.

In the three hundred and eighty firſt he anſwer'd divers Queſtions which had been propoſed to him by the Archbiſhop of Drontheim: as, Whether an Altar upon which one that was excommunicated had celebrated the Office, ought to be conſecrated anew? If one might communicate with an excommunicated Perſon, who had given ſurety to obey the Church in that which it commanded him, tho he had not yet received abſolution? Who thoſe were that might communicate with excommunicated Perſons? What Puniſhment thoſe deſerve who do it? What is to be thought of thoſe Prieſts that ſtir up others to the Combate, and are Commanders of Navys, tho they do not fight themſelves? The Pope reſolves theſe Queſtions in the following manner: That the Altar need not be conſecrated anew on which an excommunicated Perſon hath celebrated: That we muſt not communicate with an excommunicated Perſon before he hath received abſolution: That they who are excepted from not communicating with them are compriſed in the Chapter quoniam multos: That other Perſons who communicate with ſuch of them as are accuſed, ought to be excommunicated themſelves; and thoſe who communicate with a Perſon who hath been excommunicated with his Accomplices, incur the puniſhment of Excommunication: That thoſe Prieſts mentioned in the Queſtion ought to be depoſed. He adds ſome Anſwers to other Queſtions which were not demanded; namely, That ſuch as reſign their Benefices to Laicks, and take them again out of their hands, ought to be turned out of them: That the Table of an Altar which is conſecrated, loſes its holineſs if it be removed out of the place, or have a conſiderable crack in it: That one may mix Oil that is not conſecrated with conſecrated: That ſuch of the Clergy as are excommunicated or were ordained by ſuch, ought to be depoſed.

The three hundred and eighty ſecond is written to the Archbiſhop of Drontheim, and to the Prelates of Norway, againſt a Prince of that Country who tyrannized over the Church. By the following he deſired the Kings of Denmark and Sweden to take the part of the Churches of Norway againſt this Tyrant; and in the three hundred and eighty fourth enjoined the Archbiſhop of Drontheim to ſuſpend the Biſhop of Berghes for favouring him.

In the three hundred and eighty fifth he determined, That a Clergyman who was guilty of homicide, ought not to be put in again tho he was not puniſhed with death.

In the three hundred and eighty ſixth he warned the Abbot of Montebaſſino, who was Cardinal, to labour for the Reformation of his own manners, and thoſe of his Monaſtry.

In the three hundred and eighty ſeventh he order'd the Magiſtrates of Venice to revoke an Order which they had given to a Lawyer never to appear more at the Court of Venice.

The three hundred and eighty eighth is written for the preſervation of the Liberty and poſſeſſions of the Churches of Hungary: and becauſe ſome of them who had taken an Oath to defend the Church thought to diſpenſe with their keeping of it by appealing to the Holy See, the Pope by the following Letter declar'd, That this Appeal doth not hinder but that they may be proceeded againſt as perjured Perſons.

The three hundred and ninetieth is a Letter of the Archbiſhop of Regio's, wherein he puts this Queſtion to the Pope; Whether, when he was commiſſioned with the Archbiſhops of Capua and Palermo, to judg in the Suit between the Archbiſhops of Montreal and Roſſano about the Tithes, and finding himſelf ſick could not come, the other two could proceed in the Judgment of the

Pope Innocent's Letters.

Suit without him, and condemn the Archbiſhop in prejudice to the Appeal which he had put in to the Holy See after he was cited? The three hundred and ninety firſt is the Archbiſhop of Montreal's Letter upon the ſame Subject. And by the next the Pope determined, That if the caſe was really ſo as it had been made appear to him, the Commiſſioners had done ill to proceed to a Judgment in the caſe, and that all that in conſequence of that Judgment had been taken from the Archbiſhop of Montreal, ought to be reſtored him.

By the three hundred and ninety third he granted to the City of Parma the right of the recovery of thoſe Sums which had been ſtolen from the Cardinal Legate paſſing through their Country, which they had reimburſed to him.

In the three hundred and ninety fourth he order'd that the Religious of the Monaſtry of Feltri of the Order of Citeaux, ſhould not bury where their Oblates did; and that they ſhould give the fourth part of whatſoever they left in their Will to the Churches wherein their Oblates lived: but this without prejudicing the Church's Rights, or the Cuſtoms of the Order of Citeaux.

By the three hundred and ninety fifth he empower'd his Legate Rainier to reform all the Churches which he ſhould paſs through.

In the three hundred and ninety ſixth he order'd the Archbiſhop of Aix to accept the Reſignation of the Biſhop of Frejus, and put another Biſhop in his place.

In the three hundred and ninety ſeventh he exhorted the Earl of Thoulouze to undertake the War for the aſſiſtance of the Holy Land.

By the three hundred ninety eighth he gave leave to the Cardinal Foulques to take Monks and Regular Canons, and employ them in preaching the Goſpel in the Eaſt.

In the three hundred and ninety ninth, addreſſed to all the Prelates of France, he order'd Uſurers to be puniſhed, notwithſtanding all Appeals whatſoever.

By the four hundredth Letter he gave leave to the Archbiſhop of Siponto to turn a Collegiate Church into a Monaſtry of Regular Canons.

In the four hundred and firſt, after having compared the Spiritual and Pontifical Authority to the light of the Sun, and the Temporal and Kingly Authority to that of the Moon, he exhorted the Governors of Tuſcany to be faithful to the Holy See, and aſſured them of his protection.

In the four hundred and ſecond he gives the Archbiſhop of Naples and the Chapter of Averſa till Eaſter to appear at Rome to have their Trial in a difference between them.

In the four hundred and third he ordered the Archprieſt and the Clergy of the Church of Borgo San Donino to obey the Biſhop of Parma.

The four hundred and fourth is written to his Commiſſioners about the Letters of the Pope being charged with an Error. He ſays, That he who made the Charge to put off the Judgment of the Suit, and then could not make it good, ought to loſe his Cauſe.

The four hundred and fifth is about the validity of a Mandate for a Canonſhip in the Church of St. Juvenea of Pavia, granted by the Pope to a Perſon whom they pretended to be unworthy of it: the Pope commiſſions Judges to ſee him put in poſſeſſion if they could not prove his unworthineſs.

In the four hundred and ſixth, to the Archbiſhops of Embrun, Arles, and Aix, and their Suffragans, he recommended it to them to make ſome order in their Provincial Councils for the Proviſion of ſome Relief for the Holy Land.

In the two next he invited an Earl to go to that War.

The four hundred and ninth is written to a Legate who had raiſed Mony for the Holy Land, about the uſe which he ſhould make of it.

The four hundred and tenth is an Act whereby he acknowledges Frederick King of Sicily, upon condition that he ſhould pay Homage and Fealty to the Holy See, and likewiſe ſome acknowledgment.

In the two following he regulates the manner of chooſing Biſhops in the Kingdom of Sicily, according to what followeth. The Epiſcopal See being vacant, the Chapter ſhall give notice to the King of the Biſhop's death: It ſhall then proceed to an Election, and ſhall ask the conſent of the Prince for the Perſon it ſhall chooſe, who ſhall not be enthronized till the King have agreed to it, nor ſhall perform his Office till the Pope have confirmed him.

In the four hundred and thirteenth he order'd all the Prelates of the Kingdom of Sicily to obey his Legate.

The four hundred and fourteenth is written againſt a Clergyman who had Pluralities in the Church of Naples.

In the four hundred and fifteenth he declared, That an Oath taken by a Perſon always to obſerve judiciary Forms, doth not take place in ſuch Cauſes where one is not obliged to obſerve thoſe Forms.

In the four hundred and ſixteenth he forbad the alienation of the Poſſeſſions of the Monaſtries of Naples without leave of the Archbiſhop; and he declared in the next Letter that the Archbiſhop of Naples might ſell the Goods of the Church to pay its debts.

In the four hundred and eighteenth he order'd the execution of a Mandate for a Canonſhip of Poictiers, which the Chapter of this Church would not obey.

In the four hundred and nineteenth he confirmed the Primacy of the Archbiſhop of Lunden over the Churches of the Kingdom of Sweden.

In

In the four hundred and twentieth he order'd the Prelates of Jutland to reeſtabliſh the Canonical Doctrine in their Country, and to put down that Cuſtom which had been introduced of paying but one piece of Mony for ſatisfaction for all ſorts of Crimes. Pope Innocent's Letters.

The four hundred and twenty firſt is a Mandate directed to the Archbiſhop of Lunden.

In the four hundred and twenty ſecond he confirmed that Cuſtom of giving Eſtates to the Church which was uſed in Denmark, by laying a little piece of the Land upon the Altar in the preſence of Witneſſes.

In the four hundred and twenty third he confirmed the Collation of the Provoſtſhip of Strand in Denmark; and in the following order'd the Goods which had been taken from that Church to be reſtored it.

By the four hundred and twenty fifth he confirmed the Privileges and Donations of the Abbey of Sora.

The four hundred and twenty ſixth is an Act by which he takes the City of Todi into the Protection of the Holy See, and confirmed its Privileges.

In the four hundred and twenty ſeventh he gave Judgment in a difference between the Abbey of Calana, and that of Mont-ſacre, and declared that the Abbey and Religious of the former of theſe ſhould lay down all Pretenſions to any right they might have on that of Mont-ſacre, on condition that that ſhould give them up a Church, and pay them every year an acknowledgment of Olives.

The three next are written about the Election of a Biſhop of Cambray. It was ſaid that he whom the Chapter had choſe, was crooked, and had married a Widow, by whom he had had a Son that ſucceeded him immediately in the Provoſtſhip of St. Peter of Douay. The Pope wrote upon this to the Chapter, and commiſſions the Biſhop of Paris and Arras to examine if matters were really ſo, and in caſe they were, he declares this Election null.

By the four hundred and thirty firſt he nominated the Archbiſhop of Senlis to defend the Privileges of the Abbey of Compiegne.

In the five following Letters he condemns the undertaking of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who would build a Church notwithſtanding all the Pope's Commands to the contrary; and order'd that he ſhould reſtore to the Monaſtry of Canterbury all that he had taken from it to endow this new Church with.

By the four hundred and thirty ſeventh he takes Almeric King of Jeruſalem into the Protection of the Holy See.

By the four hundred and fifty ſecond he accepted of the Reſignation of the Biſhop of Urgel; and by the next he order'd the Chapter of that Church to proceed to the Election of a new Biſhop; whom in the four hundred and fifty fourth he recommended to the Archbiſhop of Tarragon.

He determined in the four hundred and fifty fifth, That a Religious Vow made before the year of probation is valid: but that the Abbots ought not to accept of it, and that that of a married Perſon ought not to be accepted, except ſhe likewiſe to whom he is married makes a vow of perpetual continence.

The

Pope Innocent's Letters.

The four hundred and fifty ſixth is written in favour of a Prieſt who had had ſome forged Letters of the Pope's given him, and had made uſe of them, thinking them true. The Pope excuſed him upon account of his ignorance, and order'd the Archbiſhop of Siponto to put him to no trouble upon this matter.

In the four hundred and fifty ſeventh he gave leave to the Abbot and Religious of St. Edmond to get their Church dedicated, and likewiſe to let ſuch Croſſes and Images as were not eaſily taken out remain in their places.

In the four hundred and ninety ninth he commended the deſign which the Archbiſhop of Colocza had of reforming a Monaſtry, and gives him leave to put Regular Canons into it.

In the five hundredth he wrote to the King of Hungary to oblige the Sclavonians to pay their Tithes to the Archbiſhop of Colocza.

In the five hundred and firſt he determin'd, That no one ought to make a Promiſe of a Benefice before it is vacant.

In the five hundred and ſecond he gave permiſſion to the Biſhop of Tripoli to ſtay in that Dioceſs, although he was choſen to the Biſhoprick of Apamea, and had been tranſlated to that of Tripoli without the conſent of the Holy See. In the next he takes off the ſuſpenſion which had been pronounced againſt the Patriarch of Antioch for having made this removal without the Authority of the Holy See.

By the five hundred and fourth he ſuſpended the Biſhop of Langres, accuſed by his Chapter of having waſted the Eſtate of his Church, for not making his appearance at Rome, and commits the examination of this Affair to the Biſhop of Paris.

In the five hundred and fifth he cited the Patriarch of Jeruſalem to Rome, about ſome differences between him and the Patriarch of Antioch.

By the five hundred and ſixth, and five hundred and ſeventh, he confirmed the ſale of ſome Poſſeſſions, and a Tranſlation made by the Templers of Montpellier.

The five hundred and eighth is written to the Biſhop of Syracuſe, and an Abbot of that Country, about the Cruſade to oblige the Prelates and Eccleſiaſticks of Sicily to furniſh out ſums towards the War in the Holy Land, in proportion to their Revenues, and to imploy thoſe of the vacant Churches.

In the five hundred and ninth he exhorted this Biſhop to labour for the converſion of Apoſtates, and to uſe Cenſures againſt them.

In the five hundred and tenth he order'd the Archbiſhop of Colocza, and two other Commiſſioners, to declare null the Elections of the Archbiſhops of Otranto and Spalatro, if they found that they had correſpondence with the Brother of the King of Hungary, who was excommunicated by the Pope.

In the five hundred and eleventh he adviſed the Prelates of Hungary not to excommunicate the Counſellors and Friends of the King, except it were upon ſome publick and neceſſary account.

In the five hundred and twelfth he forbids making any Impoſition upon the Eccleſiaſticks of the Patriarchate of Antioch.

In the five hundred and thirteenth he declar'd that ſuch Witneſſes as were to depoſe concerning the exceptions of a Proceſs, could not be underſtood, nor obliged to give witneſs about the Principal, unleſs one of the Parties deſired it.

In the five hundred and fourteenth he determined, That the Marriage of Infidels with ſuch as were of kin to them could not be diſſolved when they turned Chriſtians.

In the five hundred and fifteenth he declar'd, That Patriarchs and Prelates had no right of taking the firſt Trials of Clergymen who deſired to be tried by their Biſhop.

In the five hundred and ſixteenth he judges, That Perſons who have quitted the Cities where they were ſettled to go and live in others, ought not to pay their Tithes to the Biſhops of the Cities which they left, but to him of the place which they removed to.

In the five hundred and ſeventeenth he declared, That a Man who hath taken the Habit of a Regular Canon, and has made the ordinary Vows, although he has for a long time fail'd of performing them, ought to take his Habit again, and remain in the Monaſtry he belonged to.

The five hundred and eighteenth is Advice mixed with Reprimand to the Patriarch of Jeruſalem, about his carriage to the King and Queen of Jeruſalem.

In the five hundred and twenty ſecond he gave order to the Archbiſhop of Arles to inform himſelf of the State of the Church of Riez and its Biſhop, that he might know whether it was fitting to grant him the Petition which he made to quit his Biſhoprick.

In the five hundred and twenty third he declar'd null the Election of a Man to the Abbey of Luxeu, becauſe he never had been Monk.

In the five hundred and twenty fourth he determin'd, That ſuch as when they were ſick made a Vow to their Prieſts of becoming Monks, although they receive not the Habit, yet are under the obligation of the Vow.

By

Pope Innocent's Letters.

By the four following he appoints and recommends his Legates for the Kingdom of Dalmatia.

The five hundred and twenty ninth is a Mandate for a Prebend of Tripoli.

The five hundred and thirtieth is the Act of the Canonization of St. Homobonus, addreſſed to the Clergy and People of Cremona.

In the five hundred and thirty firſt he declar'd that an Abbot who had ſome forged Letters of the Pope's, without knowing of it, is not in fault.

In the five hundred and ſecond, having proved that a Man who is choſen to a Biſhoprick cannot be removed to another without permiſſion from the Holy See, becauſe the Election is as it were a Chain which faſtens a Man to a Church; yet, through the abundance of his Power, he gives leave to a Man who had been conſecrated Biſhop of Angers, after having been choſen Biſhop of Auranches, to poſſeſs the Biſhoprick of Angers, and takes off the ſuſpenſion of the Archbiſhops of Tours and Rouen who had conſecrated him.

In the five hundred and thirty third he decided a difference between two Competitors to the Priory of St. Savinus in the Dioceſs of Spoletto, in favour of him who had been choſen by the Chapter, againſt him whom the Biſhop had nominated.

The five hundred and thirty fourth is a Confirmation of the Poſſeſſions and Privileges of the Church of Coimbra.

In the five hundred and thirty fifth he determin'd, That the Pallium ought not to be given but to Archbiſhops whoſe Predeceſſors have enjoyed it.

By the five hundred and thirty ſixth, to the Archprieſt and Canons of the Church of St. Peter, he gives them the Revenues of the Seals of Letters granted to ſuch as came to Rome for devotion.

By the five hundred and thirty ſeventh, and thirty eighth, he cites the Biſhop of Leſina upon the Coaſts of Dalmatia, who was called to the Archbiſhoprick of Zara, and ſome Canons of that Church to give an account of this Tranſlation.

In the five hundred and thirty ninth he forbids the Venetians to aſſiſt or furniſh the Saracens with Arms.

In the five hundred and fortieth he named Commiſſioners to judg the Perſons who had cut off and taken away a Letter from the Regiſter of his Predeceſſor Alexander, and afterwards had maimed it. The five hundred and forty ninth is upon the ſame ſubject.

By the five hundred forty ſecond he exhorts the Prior and Religious of Grandmont to receive the ſubmiſſion of a Prior and Religious of a Monaſtry of their Order which was in the Dioceſs of Avignon.

In the five hundred and forty third he declar'd, That a Perſon who had taken twenty days for the execution of a Sentence, or his Appeal from it, could not be admitted to appeal when this Term was paſt.

The five hundred and forty fourth is a Commiſſion about a difference between the Abbot of Felduar, and the Biſhop of five Churches concerning a Privilege.

In the five hundred and forty fifth he confirmed the Judgment given by the Cardinal of St. Lawrence, by which Alberic Prior of St. Lawrence of Spello was turned out.

The five hundred and forty ſixth is a Commiſſion to the Archbiſhop of Strigonia, and to two other Biſhops, to examine into the difference between the Biſhop and Chapter of Varadin.

The five hundred forty and ſeventh, and five hundred forty and eighth, and five hundred fifty and ſeventh, are Confirmations of the Privileges of Monaſtries.

By the five hundred and fiftieth he appointed Commiſſioners for the difference between the Biſhop of Coventry and his Monks, about ſome Exemptions which had been granted them by the Predeceſſor of this Biſhop.

By the five hundred and fifty ſecond he granted the Protection of the Holy See to the Monaſtry of Cerfroy, of the Order of the Trinity.

In the five hundred fifty third he commiſſions the Biſhop of Paris, and Peter of Corbeil, to judg the Biſhop of Langres who was accuſed by his Canons.

In the five hundred and fifty fourth he explained the difference between a General Interdict, and a Particular Interdict; becauſe when the Interdict is general, the Churches which have Privileges of the Holy See cannot celebrate Divine Office, except with the door ſhut, in a low Voice, and without ringing the Bells: whereas in a particular Interdict they pretended to a Privilege of doing it publickly. To avoid any abuſes that might ariſe from this Diſpute, the Pope decides that an Interdict is to be accounted general, not only when a whole Kingdom or Province, but likewiſe when a City or Caſtle are interdicted.

In the five hundred and fifty fifth he recommended it to the Archbiſhop and Chapter of Piſa to perſuade the Piſans to enter into the General Peace of Tuſcany.

In the five hundred and fifty ſixth he frees the King of Navarr from an Oath, which the Kings of Caſtile and Arragon entring with an Army into his Kingdom had forced him to take, of giving his Siſter in Marriage to the latter of them, who was her Kinſman in the third degree.

In the five hundred and fifty ſeventh he order'd the Biſhops of the Kingdom of Sicily to ſtir themſelves againſt Marcovaldus.

In the five hundred and fifty eighth he exhorted thoſe of Capua to a vigorous defence againſt the Troops of Marcovaldus. The three next are upon the ſame ſubject.

In the five hundred and ſixty ſecond, third, fourth and fifth, he declared the Cardinal of St. Mary his Legate and Vicar in Sicily, Guardian to Frederick the young King, and exhorts this Prince and his Subjects to follow his Counſels.

By

By the five hundred and sixty sixth he entrusted the Archbishop of Palermo with the Reform of a Monastry in his Country. Pope Innocent's Letters.

In the five hundred and sixty seventh he exhorted the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem to make use of the methods of Justice, and not of Force, to right themselves in their differences with the Templers.

In the five hundred and sixty eighth, and sixty ninth, he declar'd, That all Churches are bound to pay the right of Procuration to the Legate of the Holy See, and none were exempt from it.

By the five hundred and seventieth he gave his Approbation of the Rules of the Teutonick Order.

In the five hundred and seventy first he order'd that the Bishop of Passaw should judg the Causes of those that were under his Jurisdiction.

In the five hundred and seventy second he gave him Power to absolve the Incendiaries.

The five hundred and seventy third is the Judgment in a Suit about a Living.

In the five hundred and seventy fourth he order'd the Bishop of Hildesheim to remain in the Church where he was, and forbids him to remove to that of Wirtzburg, of which he had taken the Title without the permission of the Holy See.

In the five hundred and seventy fifth he order'd an Earl to keep a strict Guard upon the Prisoners which he had taken of the Party of Marcovaldus.

The import of the five hundred and seventy sixth, to the Bishop of Coimbra, is, That those Clergymen who call themselves Canons of the Holy Cross, or other privileged Orders, and live in their own Dioceſs in a secular Habit, and receive the Sacraments of the Church, are obliged to pay all Episcopal Duties. This Letter, which is the last of the first Book, bears date the 17*th* of February in the year one thousand one hundred and ninety nine.

Monsieur Baluze has added some Letters or Pieces made in the first year of the Pontificate of this Pope.

The two first are Oaths taken to Pope Innocent, the one by the Prefect of Rome, the other by Count Ildebrandin.

The third is the Decree for the Confirmation of a Treaty made between the Church of Penna in Abruzzo, and the Monastry of St. Vit of Fourche.

The fourth, fifth, and sixth, are written in favour of the Monks of Canterbury, concerning the difference which they had with their Archbishop about a Chappel he was building. And the last, which is the five hundred and eighty third in all, is a Letter of these Monks to the Pope upon the same subject.

In the first Letter of the second Book, to the Magistrates and People of Viterbo, the Pope in general forbids all sorts of Persons, in any manner whatsoever, to receive, protect or favour the Hereticks, and declares all that shall so do infamous, unworthy of any Voice active or passive in Elections, to have forfeited their right of Succession, and to be incapable of all sorts of Offices. He adds, that those who converse with Hereticks, whom they know to be so, incur the danger of an Anathema, and order'd that the Estates of Hereticks should be confiscated.

In the second he determined, That the Marriage of a Girl which had been nullified, because it was contracted before she was marriageable, might be renewed with the consent of the Woman after she was to come to that age.

The third is a Confirmation of the Privileges of the Abbey of Lundors in Scotland.

In the fourth he exhorted the Magistrates and People of the City of Jesi, to do all that was possible to bring the rest of the Marquisate of Ancona under the obedience of the Pope.

In the fifth, to the Bishop of St. Andrews in Scotland, he order'd him to provide for vacant Churches if the Patrons did not provide within the time set by the Council of Lateran. In the twentieth Letter he gave the Archbishop of Magdeburg the same orders.

In the next, written to the same Bishop, he gave him leave to build a new Church in his Dioceſs, because those which were already there were not proportioned to the number of his Dioceſans which encreased every day.

By the seventh he declar'd null the alienation of the Fiefs and Estates of a Church which was made in the form required by the Ecclesiastical Constitutions.

In the eighth he order'd the Patriarch of Aquileia to reestablish the Church of Ceneda.

By the ninth he recommended to the King of Marock the Religious of the Order of the Trinity, who imployed one part of their Revenues to buy Pagan Slaves and exchange them for Christians.

In the tenth he approved of the Order made by the Chapter of Xainte, by which the number of their Canons was fixed at forty.

In the eleventh he declares that a Regular Canon could not leave his Monastry to remove into another, without the leave of his Abbot.

In the twelfth he order'd that no one trouble the Camaldolites for Estates which they have had the possession of for forty years.

In the thirteenth, to the Bishop of Modena, he order'd that the Appeal of such as are notorious Criminals, should not stop the Judgment of the Ordinary: because the remedy of an Appeal was never intended to serve the Criminal, but to be a relief to such as were unjustly dealt with.

In the fourteenth he declar'd that excommunicated Incendiaries ought not to be allowed Christian burial; that this is a Case reserved to the Holy See, and that if they could not come to

Pope Innocent's Letters.

Rome no one elſe could give them Abſolution, but upon condition of obeying whatſoever the Holy See ſhould order them.

By the fifteenth and ſixteenth he confirms a Judgment which had been given by the Cardinal whom he had appointed Commiſſary in the Caſe between the Biſhop of Spoletto, and the Religious of the Monaſtry of St. Peter.

The ſeventeenth is a Confirmation of the Privileges and Poſſeſſions of the Biſhoprick of Athonry in Ireland.

In the eighteenth he commanded the Dean and Chapter of Auranches to proceed to a new Election of a Biſhop, becauſe he whom they had choſen was not fit, and the Election beſides had not been made in form.

The nineteenth is a Confirmation of the Privileges of the Abbey of St. Mary of Caſanova.

He ſettled by the twenty firſt the Deanery of Magdeburg upon him who had been choſen to it.

In the following he confirmed the Judgment given by the Archbiſhop of Lion in favour of the Abbot and Religious of St. Rufus of Valence.

The twenty third, twenty fourth, and twenty fifth, are written about the Treaty concluded between the King of England and the King of France, for which he expreſſed a great deal of joy.

In the twenty ſixth he diſcharged the Chapter of Treviſi of anſwering the demand of a Clergyman, who by virtue of a Mandate required their Provoſtſhip.

The twenty ſeventh, to the Magiſtrates and People of Treviſi, is full of Reprimands and Threatnings for the Exorbitances and Crimes which they were guilty of.

In the twenty eighth, which is written to the King of Arragon about a difficulty which he had propoſed to him, concerning an Oath which he had made of keeping the Mony of the King his Father, which was counterfeited and diminiſhed very much in its weight, he determin'd, That he ought not to ſuffer it to be any longer current in his Realm.

In the twenty ninth he order'd the Puniſhment of thoſe who had counterfeited his Letters.

By the thirtieth he appointed Commiſſioners to examine into the Election of an Abbot.

The two following are Confirmations of the Privileges of two Monaſtrys.

The thirty third is a Letter of the Biſhop and Magiſtrate of Caſtellane, who ſend their Tribute to the Pope, and deſire his aſſiſtance.

In the thirty fourth he commanded the Archbiſhop of Embrun to declare the Biſhop of Vence excommunicate, for not obſerving the Suſpenſion which the Holy See had pronounced againſt him.

In the thirty fifth he order'd the Biſhops of Avignon and Tregnier to be no hindrance to the Provoſt and Canons of Ciſteron's oppoſing the forming of a Church of Templers.

In the thirty ſixth he declar'd, That the Order made by the Chapter of Bazas, which fixed their number of Canons at 18, ought not to be obſerv'd if the Revenues of that Church were ſufficient to maintain a greater number; and he commiſſioned the Archbiſhop of Bourdeaux, the Biſhop of Agen, and the Abbot of Sanve Majeur to inform of it, and to ſettle what number of Canons they thought fit therein.

The thirty ſeventh is the Judgment of a Proceſs in favour of the Abbot of St. Donatus of Sezula. And the next is the Judgment of another Suit in favour of the Abbot of Conches.

By the thirty ninth he exhorted the Abbot of Lucedia to procure a Peace between thoſe of Placentia and thoſe of Parma.

The fortieth, forty firſt, and forty ſecond, are written about the Abſolution which he would have given to the Earl of Flanders.

The forty third and forty fourth are written againſt the Earl of Nevers, who did not obſerve the Agreement which he had made with the Earl of Flanders.

In the forty fifth he took Baldwin Earl of Flanders, and the Princeſs Mary his Wife, into the Protection of the Holy See.

By the forty ſixth, and forty ſeventh, he confirm'd the Judgment which had been given in a Caſe about a Prebend of Cambray.

In the forty eighth he determin'd, That when one doth not know the motives and circumſtances of a Sentence, one ought to preſume that it was juſt.

By the forty ninth he declar'd, That a Prieſt cannot celebrate Divine Office, nor adminiſter the Sacrament of Penance, nor any other Sacrament in any Dioceſs, without the conſent and permiſſion of the Biſhop; and that a Metropolitan cannot place a Prieſt in the Dioceſs of any of his Suffragans, without his agreeing to it.

In the fiftieth he determin'd, That though the Marriage between Infidels is diſſolved when one of them is converted to the Faith, yet it is not the ſame thing in reſpect of thoſe who were married while they were Believers, when one of them becomes an Heretick or Pagan.

The fifty firſt is a Mandate for a Canonſhip of Orleans in favour of Peter of Corbeil.

The fifty ſecond is a Commiſſion to the Biſhop of Noctra for the reeſtabliſhment of a Monaſtry.

The fifty third is a Confirmation of the Privileges of the Order of Calatrava.

In the fifty fourth he wrote to the Chapter of Hildeſheim, to nominate a new Biſhop in the ſtead of him whom they had, who would remove to the Biſhoprick of Wirtzburg. In the next he committed the Execution of this Decree to the Abbots of Corbie in Saxony, and of Harvorden, and to the Dean of Paderborn.

In

In the fifty fifth he determin'd, That a Canon Regular of St. Austin, who had been made a Knight of the Hospital, had done well to return to his former Order; because it is not allowable to remove out of a stricter Order into a more remiss, as it is out of a remisser into a more strict. Pope Innocent's Letters.

By the fifty seventh he exhorted the King of England to put the Archbishop of York into possession of the Estate of his Church again, of which he had stript him, and to give him liberty of performing his Functions. The two next are upon the same Subject. And in the sixtieth he declar'd, That all the Presentations made in the Archbishoprick of York without the consent of that Archbishop, upon pretence of his being suspended, were nothing.

In the sixty first he determin'd, That an excommunicate Person, who before he died acknowledged his fault, and designed to come to Rome to receive Absolution, ought not to be denied Ecclesiastical Burial. Here are the words of his Answer, which may very well deserve your attention. "The Judgment of God is always founded on infallible Truth, but the Judgment of the Church "often depends upon an opinion which may be under a mistake: Upon this account it some-"times happens that he who is bound before God, is free before the Church; and he that is free "before God, is bound by an Ecclesiastical Sentence. The Chain wherewith the Sinner is bound "before God, is loosened by a Remission of the Fault; but that wherewith he is bound in re-"spect of the Church, is loosen'd only by Absolution from the Sentence; which appears in the "Resurrection of Lazarus, whom our Saviour first raises again, and then orders the Apostles "to untie him. So the Man, concerning whom he is talking, having promised with an Oath to "obey the Church, and to give signs of his penitence, might very well be absolved in the sight "of God, but not having received Absolution, he is not so in respect of the Church. Yet the "Church could and ought to remedy this, that is, because his penitence was true by the plain "marks he gave thereof while he lived, it could give him Absolution after his Death: And it "signifies nothing that the power of binding and unbinding was not granted the Church in re-"spect of dead men; so that it cannot bind or unbind any but what are upon the Earth, or, as "it is written, cannot communicate with a man that is dead, with whom it did not communi-"cate while he was living; for although it did not communicate with him, yet it ought to have "done it, it not being any ill will to Religion, but an inevitable accident which hindred him "from receiving absolution. And we read in the Canons that the Church has bound and un-"bound the dead. He order'd that this Absolution be desired of the Holy See, the case for which he was to be absolved being a reserved case; that it should be performed with a penitential Psalm, the Lord's Prayer, and the Prayer used upon that occasion; and that his Heirs should make satisfaction.

In the sixty second he order'd a certain Lord to reserve a Treasure which had been found in a Country of the Patrimony of St. Peter, as belonging of right to the Holy See.

The sixty third is written to the Archbishop of Sens, about the Dean of Nevers, whom having been suspected of Heresy, he sends back to him with orders to reestablish him, after he had canonically cleared himself by the witness of fourteen Priests.

In the sixty fourth he confirm'd the Order made by the Bishop of Osma in Spain, to have none but Regular Canons in his Church, and some other Constitutions which he had made.

In the sixty fifth he wrote to the same Bishop, and determin'd that such of the Clergy as were notoriously scandalous in keeping Concubines, ought to be condemned without Witnesses or Accusers; but that such whose Crime was not so notorious but that it might admit of some doubt, could not be condemned but upon the deposition of Witnesses, and not on simple Declarations.

In the sixty sixth he declar'd, That those Laicks who keep any of the Clergy in prison incur excommunication, as well as those who give them ill treatment. That such as communicate with an excommunicated Person so as to partake of or contribute to his Crimes, cannot be absolved of the Excommunication which they incur, but by him who excommunicated the Person with whom they communicated, or by his Superiour. But if they communicated with them only so as to eat or drink with them, or in any other manner without partaking of their Crimes, then they might be absolved by their own Bishop, or any other Priest. Lastly, he determin'd that not only those who have contracted two valid Marriages are to be accounted Bigamous, but those too who have contracted such as were nulled, because that although they were not in facto Bigamous for want of the Sacrament, yet the Intention of being so was the same, and there was a fault committed besides: therefore he would not have a Dispensation granted such, as there is to other Bigamous Persons.

By the sixty seventh he confirm'd the Dean of Toledo in his Benefice, and puts him under the protection of the Holy See.

By the next he confirm'd an Archdeacon in his Benefices.

The sixty ninth is a Confirmation of the establishment of the Abbey of St. Michael of the Order of Premontre.

In the seventieth he order'd that the Saracens should be forced to pay their Tithes to the Parishes.

By the seventy first he nam'd the Bishops of Lincoln and Ely, with the Abbot of St. Edmund, to make up the difference between the Archbishop and Monks of Canterbury, or to give Judgment in it.

Pope Innocent's Letters.

The 72*d*, 73*d*, 74*th*, 76*th*, 79*th*, 89*th*, 90*th*, 92*d*, 93*d*, 98*th*, 100*th*, 101*ſt*, 102*d*, 108*th*, 109*th*, 110*th*, 116*th*, 153*d* and 274*th*, are Confirmations of the Privileges of Monaſtries.

By the ſeventy fifth he order'd the Archbiſhop of Compoſtella to make uſe of Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures to oblige the King of Leon to put away the Daughter of the King of Caſtille, whom he had married, tho ſhe was his kin within the prohibited degrees.

In the ſeventy ſeventh, to the Archbiſhop of Tours, he determin'd, That a Metropolitan who is infirm, or has any other reaſonable excuſe, may commiſſion another Biſhop to conſecrate his Suffragans.

In the ſeventy eighth he order'd the Biſhop of Caſtellane to take off the Interdict pronounced againſt the Inhabitants of his City; becauſe they had ſubmitted and rejected him whom they had choſen Governor of the City without the conſent of the Pope.

In the eightieth he committed to the Abbot of Fertè, and to the Archdeacons of Challons, the ordering of the difference between the Church of Autun, and the Monaſtry of Baume.

The eighty firſt contains the Judgment in a Proceſs between the Monaſtry of St. Owen, and that de la Croix-Saint-Leufroy. His Judgment is in favour of the latter, according to the firſt Sentence in this caſe, tho there had been a ſecond which ſeemed to contradict it.

The ſeven following Letters contain a famous Sentence in favour of the Archbiſhop of Tours againſt the Church of Dol, by which the Biſhop of Dol is declared his Suffragan, and hath the Pallium taken from him.

In the ninety firſt, after having firſt given his Judgment that the Monks of Citeaux had acted raſhly in changing the Abbys of Regular Canons which were in the Iſlands of Hieres, into Monaſtries of their Order, he nominated the Biſhops of Marſeille and Agde to make a Reform among theſe Regular Canons.

The ninety fourth is a Judgment in favour of the Templers againſt the Canons of St. Quentin.

In the ninety fifth he nullifies the Election of a Biſhop by the Chapter of Cambray; becauſe he whom they had choſen was nothing but a ſimple Shaveling before the Election, and had had a Child too by a Widow.

In the ninety ſixth and ſeventh he warned the King of Hungary to reſtore to the Biſhop and Church of Vatz the poſſeſſions he had taken from them.

In the ninety ninth he order'd his Legate in France and the Biſhop of Paris, to look into the caſe of the Abbot of St. Martin of Nevers, who was accuſed of Hereſy; and if he was found guilty, to depoſe him and ſhut him up in a Monaſtry.

In the hundred and third he decides, That the Biſhops of Lisbon and Evora are Suffragans to the Metropolis of Compoſtella, and not to that of Brague. In the hundred and fifth he declar'd, That this Sentence doth not at all prejudice the Rights of the Archbiſhop of Brague. And in the hundred and ſixth he adviſed the Archbiſhops of Brague and Compoſtella to make up the difference which they had about carrying the Croſs, by agreeing that each of them ſhould have it carried before him in the others Dioceſs.

In the hundred and fourth he wrote to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, to hinder the Biſhops exacting any thing for the Holy Chriſm.

In the hundred and ſeventh he declar'd null the Order of the Canons of Tours, who had given four Prebends to ſixteen Perſons, on condition that four ſhould be content with the Revenues of one Prebend among them, till the others were dead, ſo that he who died laſt ſhould have the whole, as contrary to the Laws of the Church, which forbids diviſions or ſucceſſion in Benefices.

The hundred and eleventh, and twelfth, contain a Confirmation of the Election of the Biſhop of Placentia.

The hundred and thirteenth contains a Judgment of a Suit between the Provoſt of the Church of Aquileia, and the Chapter of that Church, about the diſpoſing of the Revenues, wherein he gives the cauſe to the Chapter.

In the hundred and fourteenth, to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, he empower'd him to force all ſorts of Perſons to pay Tithes, notwithſtanding any Appeal.

In the hundred and fifteenth, to the ſame Perſon, he order'd that the Churches ſhould be freed from the new Penſions.

The hundred and ſeventeenth is a Commiſſion to the Biſhop of Toy, the Dean of Zamora, and the Prior of St. Iſidorus of Leon, to enquire into a Suit between the Biſhop of Orenſe, and the Abbot of Cella-Nova.

By the hundred and eighteenth he upholds the Abbey and Religious of Waltham in the right of preſenting to the Livings of their Church. In the hundred and nineteenth he eaſes them from thoſe exceſſive rights of Procuration which the Archdeacons exacted of them, and nullifies the Cenſures which had been made uſe of to force them. By the two next Letters, and by the 126*th*, 127*th*, 128*th*, 129*th*, 131*ſt*, and 132*d*, he confirm'd the Rights and Privileges of this Monaſtry.

The hundred and twenty ſecond is a Letter by which he makes Rainier his Legate in the Provinces of Embrun, Aix, Arles and Narbonne, with Power to reform and ſettle the Monaſtries and Churches, to give Judgment in ſuch Cauſes as preſented themſelves, to abſolve ſuch as were excommunicated for having ſtruck any of the Clergy, provided Homicide did not follow upon it; to encounter the Hereticks, and to have them puniſhed. By the next he order'd the Archbiſhops of theſe Provinces to acknowledg this Legate, and to obey and aſſiſt him.

By the hundred and twenty fourth he order'd the Chapter of Aquileia to put the Provoſt of that Church in again.

In

In the hundred and twenty fifth he upholds a Canon in the Poſſeſſion of the Revenues of his Prebend. Pope Innocent's Letters.

The 133*d*, 134*th*, 135*th*, 136*th*, 137*th*, 138*th*, 139*th*, 140*th*, 143*d*, 144*th*, 145*th*, 146*th*, 147*th*, 149*th*, 150*th*, 151*ſt*, and 152*d*, are written about the accommodation of the differences of the Church of Compoſtella and the Church of Bragus, which was ended by an agreement of the Parties, and about ſome other things relating to the Church of Compoſtella.

The hundred and forty firſt, and ſecond, are written againſt ſome Laicks of Metz, who had private Aſſemblies in contempt of the Church, and there had the Evangeliſts, the Epiſtles of St. Paul, the Morals of Job read in French, and took upon them to dogmatize and preach againſt the Prieſts.

The hundred and fifty fourth and fifth contain a Confirmation of the Reform which the Religious of Pontigny had made in the Abbey of Caduin.

In the hundred and fifty ſixth he gave permiſſion to the Biſhop of Aſſiſi to accept of the offer which the Archprieſt of Perule had made, of clearing himſelf canonically of the Crime of Simony, by the witneſs of three Perſons.

The hundred and fifty ſeventh is a Confirmation of the Archdeaconſhip of Cirenza to him who had been preſented to it.

By the hundred and fifty eighth he takes the Church of St. Michael of Travalde under the Protection of the Holy See.

By the hundred and fifty ninth he advertiſed the Suffragans of the Archbiſhoprick of Cirenza, that he would in a ſhort time ſend them a Metropolitan fit to fill the place, and exhorted them to receive him with all due reſpect; and by the next he gives the ſame notice to the Chapter of Anglone.

In the hundred and ſixty firſt he gives leave to the Archbiſhop of Cirenza to take his Friends into his Church.

The three following Letters are concerning the Immunities of the Canons of Matera and Cirenza.

In the hundred and ſixty fifth he order'd that the Inhabitants of Matera ſhould pay the whole Tithe to the Churches to which it belongs.

In the hundred and ſixty ſixth he wrote to the Biſhop of Aſſiſi that he ſhould not think that thoſe whom he had excommunicated were abſolved, or that they had any Letters of Abſolution from the Holy See, or from its Commiſſaries.

The hundred and ſixty ſeventh and eighth are written about the abſolution of Marcovaldus, and contain the Oath that was taken by him on that occaſion. He did not obſerve it, and the Pope was forced to write againſt him again in the hundred and ſeventy ninth Letter.

In the hundred and ſixty ninth he determin'd, That the Biſhops may abſolve thoſe who are excommunicated for ſtriking any of the Clergy, when they cannot commodiouſly come to Rome, unleſs they had been exceſſively rude indeed.

The two following have nothing remarkable in them.

In the hundred and ſeventy ſecond he determin'd, That he who was choſen Abbot of Gembloux, and whoſe Election they had got confirmed by giving Mony without his knowledg, was not at all in the fault.

The hundred and ſeventy third is the Judgment in a Suit about a Canon's place of the Iſland in Flanders.

In the hundred and ſeventy fourth he order'd the Clergy and People of Regio to receive their Archbiſhop.

By the hundred and ſeventy fifth he forbids the Aretins to rebuild a Caſtle.

The hundred and ſeventy ſixth is a Letter written to the Pope by the King of Dioclia and Dalmatia, by which he recommends and ſubmits himſelf to his Holineſs, and deſires him to write to the King of Hungary to drive the Hereticks out of his Kingdom. The next is ſuch a Letter from the Prince of Servia.

The hundred ſeventy eighth is a Letter written by the Archbiſhop of Dioclia and Antivari, by which he thanks the Pope for the Pallium which he had ſent him, and preſents him with the Orders made by the Legates of the Holy See, and by the Prelates of Dalmatia againſt Simony, about the Celibacy of the Clergy, concerning the payment of Tithes, about the ſecrecy of Confeſſion, againſt thoſe that abuſed the Clergy, or drag'd them before Civil Magiſtrates; about the degrees of Affinity within which it is not allowable to marry; about the Clergys being ſhaved for the preſentation to Benefices, and the preſervation of the Poſſeſſions of the Church; and laſtly, a Prohibition from putting the Children of Prieſts or Baſtards into Holy Orders, and from ordaining any one Prieſt under the age of thirty.

The hundred and eightieth is written by the Pope to the Archbiſhop of Antivari about the Biſhop of Soacino, who, upon ſuſpicion of Homicide, had quitted his Biſhopnick; the Pope order'd that he be allowed wherewithal to maintain himſelf.

In the hundred and eighty firſt he gave notice to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, that he ought not to allow the Secular Clergy to ſit in the ſame place with the Monks at the Cathedral, or to go before them at a Proceſſion.

By the hundred and eighty ſecond he takes an Earl and his Lands into the Protection of the Holy See.

The

Pope Innocent's Letters.

The hundred and eighty third, to the Biſhop of Treviſi, is written againſt ſuch of the Clergy as did not wear Clergymens Habits, nor were ſhaved; he order'd him to ſuſpend them, and forbid the Archdeacon to let them take any higher Orders.

The hundred and eighty fourth is a Letter of Frederick King of Sicily to the Inhabitants of Monteſiaſcone, to make them obey the Sovereign Pontiff.

In the hundred and eighty fifth he declar'd, That a Biſhop elect, who has taken poſſeſſion before the Election was confirmed, ought to be turned out of that Biſhoprick.

In the hundred and eighty ſixth he commiſſions the Biſhop of Fieſoli to give Judgment in a Caſe that concerned a Monaſtry of Camaldolites.

In the hundred and eighty ſeventh he order'd the Metropolitan and the Biſhops of Sicily to redeem the Eſtates of the Kingdom of Sicily which they had alienated.

The hundred eighty eighth is written to the Archbiſhop of Magdeburg, about the divorce of the Duke of Bohemia from his Wife, pronounced by the Biſhop of Prague, without any regard to the Appeal which this Princeſs had put in to the Holy See, in conſequence of which this Duke had married the Siſter of the King of Hungary; he order'd the Archbiſhop to enquire into the truth of the matter, and write him word of it.

The hundred and eighty ninth is addreſſed to the Patriarch of Jeruſalem, to the Biſhop of Lydda, and to the Knights of St. John of Jeruſalem, and of the Temple, to whom he recommends it with wiſdom and fidelity to diſtribute the Alms which he had ſent them, and to make him acquainted with the State of their Country.

In the hundred and ninetieth he order'd the Chapter of Capua to proceed out of hand to the Election of a Biſhop.

In the hundred and ninety firſt he recommends to the People of Saxony, Weſtphalia and Sclavonia, the aſſiſtance of the Biſhop and Clergy of Livonia againſt the Pagans their Enemies.

In the hundred and ninety ſecond, and two hundred fifty and eighth, he order'd the Biſhop and People of Civita to obey the Earl of Chieti, and take him for their Protector.

The hundred and ninety third is a Reprimand for the Chapter of Fondi which had made two faulty Elections, having choſe Men who had not in them the Qualities requiſite for a Biſhop.

In the hundred and ninety fourth he decided, That a Monk who had his Forefinger cut off, was incapable of ſaying Maſs.

The hundred and ninety fifth is a Mandate for a Canonſhip of Poitiers.

The hundred and ninety ſixth is a Commiſſion to the Archbiſhop of Bragne and two Monks, to judg in a Difference between the Biſhop of Coimbra and the Templers.

By the hundred and ninety ſeventh he exhorted the Prelates of France, to whom it is written, to do all that was in their power to bring the King to obey the Holy See, and to put away his Concubine, to take his Wife again.

The two following are Commiſſions about private affairs.

By the two hundredth he made the Archbiſhop of Tarento his Legate in Sicily.

In the two hundred and firſt he empower'd Conrade Archbiſhop of Mentz to confer thoſe Benefices, to which the Biſhop of Hildeſheim had preſented, in the Biſhoprick of Wirtzburg, upon whom he pleaſed, notwithſtanding the Preſentations of that Biſhop.

In the two hundred and ſecond, and two hundred and third, he order'd the Biſhops and People of Italy to receive his Legate, and obey him.

In the two hundred and fourth he commands the Archbiſhops of Magdeburg, Mentz and Treves, and their Suffragans, to publiſh Excommunication againſt the Biſhop of Hildeſheim, who would remove to the Biſhoprick of Wirtzburg without leave from the Holy See.

In the two hundred and fifth he exhorted an Earl of Italy to preſerve that Fidelity which he had promiſed to the Holy See, and to obſerve the Peace.

In the two hundred and ſixth he advertiſed the Biſhop of Autun to provide maintenance for the Jews newly converted.

In the two hundred and ſeventh he exhorted the Magiſtrates of Viterbo to obſerve that Peace which they had made with the Romans.

The two hundred and eighth is a Letter of the Patriarch of Conſtantinople to the Pope, in anſwer to a Letter which he had written to him, wherein he tells him that the name of Univerſal, which he had given to the Church of Rome, puzzled him, and he could not tell the meaning of it. He takes it ill too that he ſhould accuſe the Eaſtern Churches of being Schiſmaticks, ſince they profeſſed the Faith of the Council of Nice, and believed that the Holy Spirit proceeded from the Subſtance of the Father. At the end of this Letter he praiſes the Emperor of Greece. Pope Innocent anſwers this Letter in the two hundred and ninth, and after having been pretty large upon the Primacy of St. Peter, which he proves to be by divine Right from many places of Scripture, he explains in what ſenſe the Church of Rome might be ſtiled Univerſal. He ſays that one doth not mean by this name all particular Churches, but this name we give to a Church that hath all other Churches under it; that it is likewiſe called the Mother of other Churches, not becauſe it is the antienteſt, but becauſe it has the Preeminence over all the reſt. He tells him afterwards that he deſigns to call a General Council for the Reformation of Manners, and invites him to it to ſettle an union and good underſtanding between the two Churches. The Emperor Alexis too writ to the Pope the two hundred and tenth Letter about the Recovery of the Holy Land, and the Reunion of the two Churches, as of a very feaſible thing. The Pope anſwer'd him in the two hundred and eleventh, and ſays much the ſame to him as to the Patriarch of Conſtantinople.

In

In the two hundred and twelfth the Pope writ to his Vicar at Constantinople, not to suffer the Latin Priests to administer the Sacrament of Confirmation, which belonged to none but Bishops to do. Pope Innocent's Letters.

By the two hundred and thirteenth he order'd all the Latin Priests which were at Constantinople to obey his Legate.

By the two hundred and fourteenth, and two hundred and fifteenth, he cites the Prior and Religious of Sainte-Croix in Spain, to appear about the difference between them and the Bishop of Coimbra.

In the two hundred and sixteenth he frees the Canons of Wartzburg from the Oath which the Bishop of Hildesheim had made them take to pay a certain Sum of Money after his death to those as he would leave it to.

The two hundred and seventeenth, and two hundred and nineteenth, are Letters of the King of Armenia to the Pope; and the two hundred and eighteenth, and two hundred and twentieth, are the Pope's Answers to them.

By the two hundred and twenty first he stirs up the People of Sicily to war against Marcovaldus.

The two hundred and twenty second to a private Person, is the Confirmation of a Prebend.

The two hundred and twenty third is a Commission to the Abbots of Lucedia, and St. Saviour of Pavia for the reestablishment of the Monastry of St. Colombanus. In the next he declar'd, That this Monastry shall still enjoy the exemption from the Jurisdiction of the Bishop of Bobio, but not so as to be any prejudice to the Rights of that Bishop.

In the two hundred and twenty fifth he order'd the Punishment of the Man that had killed the Magistrate of Benevento.

In the two hundred and twenty sixth he exhorted the Saracens of Sicily to be faithful to King Frederick, and not take the part of Marcovaldus.

In the two hundred and twenty seventh he determin'd, That a Priest who discovered to some Rogues a Person that they were looking for, and whom they afterwards killed, without knowing what they searched after him for, not being in any fault, might have leave to celebrate Mass which he had been forbidden by the Bishop.

In the two hundred and twenty eighth he order'd the Cardinal Bishop of Verona, to examine whether those that were accused of Heresy were really guilty; and that if he should find after having questioned them that they had no Errors in their Doctrine or Manners, he should declare them Catholicks; and if they had, and were ready to renounce them, he should give them Absolution after having taken the ordinary Oath.

In the two hundred and twenty ninth he declar'd, That such as let their Lands under borrowed names are obliged to pay the Tenths, and that Clergymen are not to be allowed to have any Women live with them except they be of their kindred.

By the two hundred and thirtieth he granted the Bishop of Laghlin in Ireland not to be within the Power of any but the Pope's Excommunication; and in the next, allows him to turn out a Man that had gotten into the Archdeaconry of his Church, and to dispose as he thought fit of the Benefices of his Diocess.

In the two hundred and thirty second he declar'd, That a Woman who had taken upon her a Vow of Chastity to avoid being married, but upon condition of tarrying in her own house, and had afterwards married a Man by whom she had Children, ought to take her Religious Habit again, and observe her Vow.

In the two hundred and thirty third he determined, That a Girl of not above seven years of age could not be engaged by any promise of Marriage.

In the two hundred and thirty fourth he order'd an Abbot to provide for the subsistence of a Jew that was newly converted.

By the two hundred and thirty fifth he appointed the Abbots of Citeaux, Morimond, and la Creste to make strict search after Hereticks.

In the two hundred and thirty sixth he commissioned the Archbishop of Naples, and the Cardinal Legate in that Country, to inform against the Archbishop of Benevento.

In the two hundred and thirty seventh he forbids the turning the Revenues of Abbeys, which were intended for the maintenance of Monks, and the keeping of the Poor, to other uses.

In the two hundred and thirty eighth he forbids all the Bishops of Scotland any ways medling against an Abbey which was immediately subject to the Holy See.

In the two hundred and thirty ninth he judged that the alienation of the Estate of a Monastry by the secular Authority is not to be minded.

In the two hundred and fortieth he gave leave to the Provost of the Chapter of St. Gaudentius of Novara to correct the Faults of the Canons.

In the two hundred and forty first he decided, That such Clerks as are under Interdiction, cannot be chosen to any Ecclesiastical Benefices.

In the two hundred and forty second he declar'd, That all Believers are bound to pay Tithes to their Parish, and that they cannot upon any pretence whatsoever exempt themselves from paying any part thereof.

In the two hundred forty third he order'd the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Bishop of London to pronounce a Sentence of Excommunication against all such as had a hand in the Violences offered to an Abbot who was putting a Sentence of the Pope's in execution.

In

Pope Innocent's Letters.

In the two hundred and forty fourth he ſays, That one ought to provide againſt the Commiſſaries that are appointed, not by way of appeal, but by challenging them.

By the two hundred and forty fifth, to the Prelates and People of Sicily, he appointed a Cardinal Legate in this Kingdom, and order'd them to obey him.

In the two hundred and forty ſixth, to the Canons and Clergy of Brinde, he cites them to Rome to give an account of the Rout which they had made to hinder him that had been choſen of taking poſſeſſion of the Biſhoprick. The two hundred and forty ſeventh is upon the ſame Subject.

The three following Letters, and the two hundred and ſixty third and ſixty fourth, are Confirmations of private Men in their Livings.

In the two hundred and fifty firſt he deſired the King of France to ſend aid to the King of Jeruſalem againſt the Saracens, and to write to the Emperor of Conſtantinople to maintain a Peace with this Prince.

The two hundred fifty ſecond is a Letter of Leo King of Armenia, complaining that the Earl of Tripoli, and the Great Maſters of the Orders of the Templers, and St. John of Jeruſalem, would diſpoſſeſs the lawful Heir of the Prince of Antioch, and deſiring the Pope to protect him, and ſend him ſome aſſiſtance againſt the Saracens. The Pope makes anſwer in the two hundred and fifty third Letter, that he will ſend to his Legates upon the place to judg in all theſe Differences, and that in the mean while he'll order the Earl of Tripoli not to meddle. By the two hundred and fifty fourth Letter, he order'd the Lords and People of Armenia to aſſiſt their King in making war againſt the Saracens; and by the next he ſends him the Standard of St. Peter to encounter the Enemies of the Croſs.

By the two hundred and fifty ſeventh he revok'd a Judgment given by the Biſhop of Sidon in Syria, who was commiſſioned by the Holy See againſt the Templers: And by the two hundred fifty ninth he order'd the King of England to reſtore the Templers a Caſtle which belonged to them.

In the two hundred and ſixtieth he appointed Commiſſaries to inform of the matters for which the Abbot of Pompoſa was accuſed.

In the two hundred and ſixty firſt, to the Biſhop of Roſſano, he anſwer'd divers Queſtions which this Biſhop had propoſed to him, 1. That the Kindred of a Woman might marry the Kindred of her Husband. 2. That although a Husband and Wife are Godfather and Godmother to a Child, yet they do not thereby contract any ſuch Compaternity as can hinder them from living as Man and Wife. 3. That the Latin Prieſts might neither have Wives nor Concubines. 4. That he might force the Abbots and Prieſts to come to his Synod. 5. That the Chaplains of the Caſtle of Roſſano had nothing to do to judg of the validity or invalidity of Marriages.

In the two hundred and ſixty ſecond he gave ſome Lands to the Judg of the Archbiſhop of Fermo's Temporal Juriſdiction, or his Theologal.

In the two hundred and ſixty fifth he order'd, That a Clergyman who had gained a Commiſſion about an Affair that had been decided before by telling a falſe Story, ſhould have no advantage by this Commiſſion.

In the two hundred and ſixty ſixth he gave a Lord notice to receive the Legate which he ſends him with all due reſpect.

The two hundred and ſixty ſeventh is a Mandate for a Canonſhip in the Church of Breuil.

In the two hundred ſixty eighth, and two hundred and ſeventy ſecond, he enjoins the Abbots of Citeaux and Premontre to give the fourth part of the Eſtates of their Abbys towards the Holy War.

By the next two he required of all the Biſhops of Europe ſupplies of Men and Mony for that War; and of all the Faithful the ſame, in the two hundred and ſeventy firſt.

In the two hundred and ſeventy third he appointed the Archbiſhop of Tyre and the Biſhop of Sidon his Commiſſaries to judge in a Suit between the Church of Tripoli and the Knights of St. John of Jeruſalem about a Church.

The two hundred and ſeventy fifth and ſixth are written about the Proceſs concerning the Prebends of the Church of Padua.

The two hundred and ſeventy ſeventh is written about the Election of an Archbiſhop of Capua by two thirds of the Chapter, maugre the oppoſition of the Pope's Legate and ſome Canons: the Pope found no fault in the form of the Election; and becauſe he was not yet ſatisfied that the Perſon elected was thirty years old, he puts off the Confirmation of the Election, and in the mean while till the thing was ſettled, appointed the elected Perſon, who was Subdeacon of Rome, to adminiſter both Spirituals and Temporals.

The two hundred and ſeventy eighth is alſo written about the removal of the excommunicated Biſhop of Hildeſheim, becauſe he would without the permiſſion of the Holy See take the Biſhoprick of Wirtzburg: The Pope gave order to the Biſhop of Bamburg to inform whether he obſerved and was obedient to the Interdict, that he might know whether it was fit to pardon him.

By the two hundred and ſeventy ninth he confirmed the Inſtitution which the Biſhop of Amiens had made of four Religious in a Church.

In the two hundred and eightieth he adviſed the Lords and Magiſtrates of Sicily to labour with his Legate to promote the good of that Realm.

By the two hundred eighty firſt he confirmed an Agreement made between the Templers of Sclavonia and the Monaſtry of St. Coſmus and St. Damianus of the ſame Country.

In

In the two hundred and eighty second he declar'd null a Resignation made for fear of the King of England. Pope Innocent's Letters.

In the two hundred and eighty third he finished a Suit that had been depending at Rome about the Election of the Bishop of Suri.

The four following are the same with some before.

By the two hundred and eighty eighth he confirmed the new Bishop of Hildesheim, who was chosen in the place of him who would remove to Wirtzburg, and declar'd null all the Alienations that the latter had made of the Possessions of the Church of Hildesheim.

In the two hundred and eighty ninth he empowered some Abbots in his name to present to the vacant Prebends of the Archbishoprick of Magdeburg, which the Archbishop and Chapter had neglected to fill within the time appointed by the Council of Lateran.

Monsieur Baluze takes notice after this Letter that this second Book of the Register of Pope Innocent's Letters is not compleat; because Roger of Hoveden quotes a Letter of this Pope's of the year 1199, about Giraudus Bishop of St. Davids, which is not to be found among these; and he adds, for a Supplement, some Letters which he had taken from divers places.

The first, which is the two hundred and ninetieth of this Book, is addressed to the Clergy of the Dioceses of Penna in the Province of Abruzzo, whom he orders to submit to the Jurisdiction and Justice of the Bishop, as well in what respects their Tithes and Incomes, as what concerns the Causes of Marriage and Penance.

The two hundred and ninety first is a Confirmation of the Privileges of the Church of Volterra.

The two hundred and ninety second is a Protection granted to a Priest.

In the two hundred and ninety third and fourth he exhorted all the Princes of Germany to labour for the Peace of the Empire, and for an Accommodation between Otho and Philip.

By the two hundred and ninety fifth he commits to the Bishop of Verceil, and the Abbot of Lucedia, the Judgment of a Process between the Monks and Canons of Milan.

The two hundred and ninety sixth is a Confirmation of the Privileges of the Abbey of Mariadura.

By the two hundred and ninety seventh he takes the Earl of Montpellier into his protection, and tells him in the next that he will send him Legates to labour for the destroying of Heresy.

The two hundredth and ninety ninth, and three hundredth, are written about the Removals of Bishops. He of the Isle of Lesina upon the Coasts of Dalmatia had been required for the Archbishoprick of Zara, and before this Demand was admitted in the Court of Rome, he had forsaken his Bishoprick of Lesina, and had done his Duty in the Archbishoprick of Zara: The Chapter of Lesina had chosen in his place the Bishop of Spalatro. The Pope puts off the execution of the matter till he was fully informed how things were, and appoints Commissaries for that purpose.

The three hundred and first is the Confirmation of a Treaty between the Archdeacon of Paris and the Abbess of Chelles.

The three hundred and second is a Constitution which forbids using any force to make the Jews be baptized, or doing them any injury, or offering them any violence.

By the three hundred and third he granted Indulgences of forty days to the Monastry of Vezelai, in which they say is preserved the Body of St. Mary Magdalen.

The three hundred and fourth is a Confirmation of the Privileges of the Church of Placentia.

The three hundred and fifth and last of the second Book, is a Letter to the Clergy of Normandy, exhorting them to contribute the fourth part of their Revenue towards the carrying on of the Holy War.

Mr. Baluze not being able to recover the third and fourth Books of the Letters of Pope Innocent, has supply'd their place with a very antient Collection of the Decretals of this Pope, made by Rainier, Deacon and Monk of Pomposa: It contains many Letters of the first and second Books, and some of the following ranged under different Titles. We have already made an Extract of the first, and we have nothing left but to do the same with the latter. That which is in the first Title of this Collection is of that number; it contains a Resolution of some Difficulties about the expressions which are used in the Mysteries of the Holy Trinity and the Incarnation. Here he takes notice that the Terms of Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, signify the relative distinguishing Properties of the Divine Persons. He distinguishes in the Father three Particulars, his Innascibility, Paternity, and Emission. Then he examines in what sense Jesus Christ may be called Man; and having scholastically discust that Point, and given the Solutions of it which are given in the Schools, he remarks to the Archbishop of Compostella, to whom this Letter is written, that to answer in an Apostolical manner, which is the plainest and best, one may say that Men in this world cannot comprehend the true nature of God, and have no proper words to express it by, and therefore are forced to make use of Relative Terms.

The second Letter is a writing given to the Ambassadors of Philip Duke of Suabia, by which he sets the Priesthood above the Imperial Dignity, and pretends that it belongs to the Pope to decide the Difference about the Empire; because it was he that brought the Eastern Empire into the West, and crowned the Emperors.

Pope Innocent's Letters.

In the third, to the Emperor Alexis Comnenus, he alſo extols the Sacerdotal Dignity, and tells this Prince that he ſhould not ſuffer the Patriarch of Conſtantinople to ſit at his feet or on his left hand.

The other Letters of this Collection are almoſt all in the firſt and ſecond Book, and have nothing worth notice in them, except ſome under the fortieth Title about Divorces and Poligamy.

In the firſt Letter of the fifth Book, Innocent III. determined that ſuch Nuns as have fought, or have beaten any of their Siſters, or of the Clergy, may receive abſolution of the Biſhop who ſhall give it them in the name of the Pope.

The ſecond is a Confirmation of the Statutes and Privileges of the Order of Grandmont.

The third is a Law made between the Clergy and Laicks of that Order.

The fourth is written to the Piſans againſt Marcovaldus.

By the fifth he gave Judgment in divers differences between the Biſhop of Spoletto, and the Prior and Clergy of the Church of St. Gregory of that City.

In the ſixth he approved of the Tranſlation of the Biſhop of Imola to the Archbiſhoprick of Ravenna.

In the ſeventh he determined that the Son of a Godfather could not marry the Daughter of the Godmother to the ſame Child, although he was born before they baptized the Child. That if theſe two Perſons had married they ought to be parted, and that whoſoever knew of any ſuch thing ought to diſcover it.

In the eighth he wrote to the Cardinal Biſhop of Paleſtrina his Legate in France, to abſolve ad cautelam the Archbiſhop of Magdeburg, whom he had excommunicated for not appearing at Corbeil, whither he had cited him, upon condition that he ſhould promiſe to make his appearance, or ſend his Deputy, if he had not appealed to the Holy See before excommunication.

By the ninth he confirmed the Privileges of a Chapter of Regular Canons of the Dioceſs of Magdeburg, and by the next grants them the Privilege of eating meat, becauſe the Order of St. Auſtin, which they made profeſſion of, did not oblige them to abridg themſelves of it.

The eleventh Letter is to the Archbiſhop of Sens to abſolve the Biſhop of Nevers.

By the twelfth he nominated Commiſſaries to judg the Archdeacon of Chartres, who was accuſed of Simony.

By the next he commiſſioned the Cardinal Biſhop of Paleſtrina, his Legate, with the Abbots of Citeaux and Beaulieu, of the Dioceſs of Verdun, to inform about the matters whereof the Biſhop of Toul was accuſed by his Archdeacon.

In the fourteenth he confirmed the Election of Sifroy to the Archbiſhoprick of Mentz, and rejected the demand of the Biſhop of Worms his Competitor.

The following Letters have nothing in them worth taking notice of.

In the twenty ſecond he declared that when thoſe Perſons, the Judgment of whoſe Cauſes he had commited to his Commiſſiaries, could not ſafely come to the place appointed, they might then appeal to the Holy See, tho the Letters of Commiſſion excluded any Appeal.

The twenty third is written to the Biſhop of Worceſter againſt the Religious, who made uſe of Appeals to hinder the Biſhop from viſiting their Monaſtry, and to avoid correction. He order'd him to take a courſe with them for all their Appeal. He gave the ſame Order to the Biſhop of Verona in the thirty ſecond and thirty third Letters.

The twenty fourth and twenty ſeventh, are written to the Chapters of Chalons and Angers about the Election of their Biſhops.

In the twenty fifth and twenty ſixth he nominated the Cardinal of St. Praxeda to be his Legate in the Eaſt, with him of St. Marcellus, and orders all the Faithful to obey them.

By the twenty eighth he acquainted the Chapter of Prague that he has abſolved their Biſhop.

The thirty fifth is addreſſed to the Archbiſhop of Bourges, the Biſhop of Nevers, and the Abbot of Cluni, whom he commiſſioned to examine the Inhabitants of an Hoſpital who were accuſed of Hereſy, and condemned by the Biſhop of Auxerre, tho they had acquitted themſelves at Rome.

The thirty ſixth is written about a Difference in the Election of a Prior of the Church of St. Auſtrillus of Bourges, which he order'd the Theologal of Orleans to inquire into; and in caſe he ſhould find the two Elections which had been made faulty, to make them proceed to a new Election in the ordinary forms.

By the thirty ſeventh and thirty eighth he recommended to the Prelates and Lords of Sicily, Walter Earl of Braine, whom he ſends into Sicily with his Legates, and a Marſhal, to carry on the War againſt Marcovaldus.

In the thirty ninth, to the Biſhop of Auxerre, who had demanded of him, 1. Whether the Power which he had of diſpoſing of the Eſtate of the Clergy that died inteſtate, extended it ſelf to Canons as well as others; 2. Whether ſuch as left their Eſtates to be diſpoſed of at the will of another, might not be accounted to have died inteſtate: The Pope anſwer'd, That under that name of Clergy were comprehended Canons, and that it was not to be thought that thoſe Perſons made no Will who left other Perſons Maſters of their Eſtates.

The forty firſt is a Confirmation of the Privileges of the Biſhop of Siponto.

The forty ſecond is a Letter of the King of Armenia, complaining of the Templers promiſing to remain in unity with the Holy See, and deſiring him to grant that neither he, nor his Subjects, nor his Country, nor the Latins which were in it, might be excommunicated or interdicted by any other than the Holy See. The Pope grants him his Request by the following Letter. Pope Innocent's Letters.

The forty fourth is a Letter of the Patriarch of Armenia to the Pope, desiring help of him. The Pope promises it him by the next, and exhorts him to keep the Churches of Armenia in union and submission to the Holy See.

The forty sixth is written to the Pope by another Archbishop of Armenia, who asks for a Pallium, which the Pope grants in the next Letter.

The forty eighth is written by the Pope to the Archbishop of Rheims about the Design of Philip King of France to get himself separated from his Wife. He tells him that it's fit the Queen should have liberty to produce her Witnesses and Proofs as well as the King, and that he ought to advise the King not to demand what cannot be in justice granted. In the next, which is written to that Prince about this Affair, he talks with him about that which his Ambassadors had complained of, that he had had harder usage in this case than other Princes had received upon the like occasions; seeing that King Lewis his Father, and the Emperor Frederick, and very lately John King of England had been separated from their Wives by the Judgment of their Prelates and Estates, which the Holy See had without any scruple confirmed. The Pope answers, that they were his Legates who separated the Emperor Frederick, and that King Lewis and the King of England were parted by their Prelates, but that was because there had been no complaint made to the Holy See; which was the very Reason that the Judgment was not revoked, because no body protested against it: but the matter now in hand had been laid before the Holy See; Pope Celestin had revoked the Sentence of Divorce, and had sent his Legates into France, who might perhaps have put an end to the Affair, if he had not eluded their Judgment: that it was in the power of the Holy See, if it would go to the rigour of the business, not only to annul the Sentence, but likewise to use Censures against those that had given it, as Pope Nicholas had done against Gontierus Archbishop of Cologn, and Tetgaudus Archbishop of Treves, for having divorced King Lotharius of Tatberge: that he had offered his Ambassadors to send two understanding Persons into his Kingdom to hear the Witnesses, and to go to Denmark, if there was need, to receive the Queen's Evidence, to the end that they might give a true Judgment in the matter: that he was very willing if the Queen would consent, that he should choose two Persons out of his own Kingdom. In fine, he advises him to observe due form of law in the Sentence, and to use his Queen well.

In the fiftieth he order'd his Legates in Sicily and his Marshal, to make up the Marriage of King Frederick with the Sister of the King of Aragon.

In the fifty first and fifty second, he forbids the Archbishop of Bourges to meddle in a business of separation which had been brought before the Holy See, and says, that an action against a Marriage which has for so long time remained firm, ought not to be easily admitted.

In the fifty third he gives Judgment in a difference about the Archdeaconry of Richmond, in favour of him who had been first chosen by the Archbishop of York. The fifty fourth is about the same business.

The three next concern particular Affairs of some Churches in England.

In the fifty eighth he takes off the suspension of the Archbishop of Milan.

By the fifty ninth he declared that the Deserters of the Order of Cheaux should not be received, tho they had Letters of Reestablishment from the Holy See, except these Letters expressly said that it should be no prejudice to the Discipline of the Order.

The sixtieth contains three Collects, and three Prayers for the Feast of St. Bernard.

The three next have nothing remarkable.

By the sixty fourth and sixty fifth he forbids giving of Benefices to the Children or Nephews of the Patrons.

In the sixty sixth he checks the King of England for the Violences he had done to the Bishop of Lincoln.

The three next are about the Election of a Bishop and two Abbots.

The seventieth is a Confirmation of a Treaty made between the Abbot and Monastry of Dole on one side, and Andrew of Chavigni Lord of Chateaurous on the other.

By the seventy first he confirm'd a certain Person's right to a Canonship.

By the seventy second he commissioned the Archbishop of Arles, and the Abbots of St. Giles and of Vallemagne, to publish the Deposition of the Abbot of St. William, and to get another chosen.

The seventy third is written against the Canons of St. Antonin of Piacenza, who would not receive a Canon who had a Mandate from the Holy See for a Prebend of their Church.

The seventy fourth is written to the Archbishop of Adalbi, to excommunicate all that took the part of Marcewaldus.

By the seventy fifth he forbids turning a Church into a Monastry without the consent of the Bishop.

By the seventy sixth he granted the Monks that lived in the place whither St. Bruno retired, six Livres of Money every year out of the Apostolick Chamber, beside the Subsistence which they had from the Monastry of Sublac.

In the seventy seventh he impoles this Penance upon a Soldier that had cut out a Bishop's Tongue; to go naked, with his Tongue tied with a string fastned about his neck, carrying Rods in his hand; to present himself in this posture at the Church door for fifteen days together, where he should have Discipline given him, fasting all this time only with Bread and Water, and

and then to go for the Holy Land, where he should carry Arms for three years, and fast every Friday with only Bread and Water.

In the seventy eighth he imposes this Penance upon a Man who having been Prisoner among the Saracens, had killed his Wife and Daughter by the command of the Saracen Prince, and eaten of their Flesh; to abstain for the future from eating any meat; to fast every Friday on bread and water, and the Mondays and Wednesdays of Advent and Lent; to eat only one Meal all the other days of Advent and Lent, and on all Vigils; to go naked footed, with a woollen Coat, and a very short Scapulary, carrying a Staff a Cubit long in his hand, taking no more of any person than would just serve him that day, not remaining above two days in one place, never daring to enter into the Church without first having received Discipline, and to recite every day a hundred Pater Nosters, kneeling at every one of them; and after having observed this Penance for three years, to return to the Holy See to desire Absolution.

In the seventy ninth, to the Abbot and Chapter of St. John of Sens, he granted them the Privileges of not being interdicted or excommunicated but upon an evident and reasonable Account.

Hitherto the Letters of the fifth Book go on without any interruption, the rest of it is imperfect, many omissions there are, but those that we have I present you with: namely,

The eighty second, which contains the Rules for the Reform of the Monastry of Sublac.

The eighty fourth about the Affairs of Sicily, to Earl Walter Governour of Puglia or Apuleia.

The eighty ninth about the Death of Marcovaldus, at which he expresses a great deal of joy.

A Fragment of the ninety sixth, by which he annuls the Postulation of the Bishop of Leitour to the Archbishoprick of Auscbe, because this Bishop was troubled with the Falling Sickness.

A Letter by which he checks the Bishop of Penna for several Irregularities.

The hundreth by which he commissioned the Abbot of St. Columbus of Sens, and the Theologal of Orleans, to confirm the League made between the Bishop of Paris and the Abbot of St. Genevieva du Mont, provided it had nothing in it which might derogate from the Authority of the Holy See, upon which the Church of St. Genevieva immediately depended.

The hundred and seventh to the Archbishop of Besanson, about some Persons in his Diocess who carried the Religious of Cisteaux before secular Judges, and obliged them likewise to clear themselves by hot or cold Water, or by Duel. The Pope forbids all such usage of them for the time to come.

The hundred and fifth, which is a Letter of the King of Bulgaria, submitting himself to the Church of Rome. And the hundred and sixth, which is the Pope's Answer to him, wherein after having recounted the usage which the Legates of Pope Adrian met with in Bulgaria, and how the Bulgarians had driven out the Roman Priests to take in the Greeks, which was the cause that the Holy See never sent any more Legates among them, he tells him that at his Request he would send a Legate into his Kingdom, there to act in his name. The hundred and seventeenth, which is a Letter of the Bishop of Zagora in Bulgaria upon the same Subject: And the hundred and nineteenth, which is the Pope's Answer to the Bishop.

The hundred and twenty first, which is an Answer to the Demand of John the old Archbishop of Lions, what Form Christ Jesus could make use of to transubstantiate the Bread and Wine into his Body and Blood, and why these words were added in the Canon of the Mass, the Mystery of Faith, which were not to be met with in any of the Evangelists? Innocent takes notice, 1. That not only these words, but those also, Having lifted up his Eyes to Heaven, and those of the Eternal Testament are not in the Evangelists, but that it is not to be thought that the Evangelists have omitted nothing, and that those omissions are to be supplied from other places of the Holy Scripture. 2. That some Persons have made use of those words, The Mystery of Faith, to maintain an Error, that the real Body of Christ was not in the Sacrament, but only the Appearance and Figure; that these Persons were deceived, because, altho we say that the Sacrament of the Altar is a Figure, we do not thereby deny that it is real, for the Death and Resurrection of Jesus Christ was an Example and Image too, and yet it was real; so that the reason why the Sacrament of the Altar is called The Mystery of Faith is, because we therein believe otherwise than we see: we see for example the Species of Bread and Wine, and we believe the reality of Flesh and Blood, and the virtue of Unity and Charity: that three things are to be distinguished in this Sacrament, the visible Form, Bread and Wine, the reality of the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, and the virtue of Union and Charity; that the first is Sacramentum & non res; the second, Sacramentum & res; and the third, Res & non Sacramentum. 3. He maintains that the Apostles received from Jesus Christ, and delivered to the Church that Form of words which is in the Canon of the Mass. This Archbishop had put another Question to the Pope too; namely, Whether the Water which was mingled with the Wine in the Cup, was likewise turned into the Blood of Jesus Christ? The Pope answer'd, that it is the opinion of some, that as Blood and Water flowed from the side of Jesus Christ, being Figures of the Redemption and Regeneration of Man, so the Wine and Water in the Chalice are changed into these two things: That others believed that the Water being changed into Wine was transubstantiated into the Blood of Jesus Christ, which is contrary to the opinion of Philosophers, who say it may be separated from it: That in the third place it may be said that the Water is not turned into Blood, but remains mingled with the accidents of the Wine, as new Wine doth when it is mixed with consecrated. He doth not condemn this opinion, but he rejects that of those Men who say that the Water is changed into the Phlegm of the Body of Jesus Christ; and embraces as most probable that opinion of the Water's being turned with the Wine into the Blood of Jesus Christ. The third Desire of this Archbishop, is to know how that change came to be made in the Secret of St. Leo: for where one reads in the antient Missals, Lord grant that this Offering may profit the Soul of thy Servant Leo, there the new ones have it, Lord grant that this Offering may profit us by the intercession of St. Leo. Innocent answers, that he doth not know by whom or when this Change was made, but that it was not without reason, because seeing it is an injury to a Martyr to pray for him, all the Prayers therefore that are made for the Saints, ought to be applied to us, or to be understood in this sense, that we pray they may be glorified more and more upon Earth, although there are some that think that the Glory of the Saints may be augmented till the day of Judgment, and therefore the Church may pray for their Glorification. In fine, he leaves him to judg whether the Rule of St. Austin about Prayers for the dead may not be applied here. Pope Innocent's Letters.

The hundred and twenty second to the Emperor of Constantinople, who had written to the Pope, desiring him to hinder the Latins from invading his Estates; to give no Countenance to the Party of Alexis the Son of Isaac the Angel, who was gone to desire help of Philip Duke of Suabia to regain the Throne of his Father; and not to suffer Philip to be Emperor of the West. The Pope answers him that this Alexis had come to Rome to complain of his having deposed his Father, and put out his Eyes, and kept him in Prison: That afterwards he went to Philip and other Christian Princes, promising them that if they would reestablish him, he would assist them in the Conquest of the Holy Land; that he had been consulted about this too, but would give no answer till he had heard his Deputies, tho many had counselled him to favour the Design, because the Greek Church was not yet subject to the Holy See: that he was so far from favouring Philip, that he upheld Otho in his Pretensions: that he exhorted him in token of the respect which he had for him, to labour for a Peace.

The hundred and twenty eighth to William Earl of Montpellier, who had by the Archbishop of Arles desired the Pope to legitimate his Children. Innocent proves therein first of all that the Legitimation of the Holy See is valid, not only in what concerns the Spirituals, but the Temporals too: and because this Earl alledges the Example of the King of France's Children, which Philip had by a Wife whom he took after having left Isemburga, to obtain the same favour for those whom he had had by a Wife that was married in the same manner, Innocent tells him there is a great deal of difference; 1. Because the King of France by his lawful Wife had a Son who was presumptive Heir of the Crown, whereas he had no Son by his lawful Wife. 2. Because the King of France had no more from the Holy See than what concerned the Spirituals, whereas he desired it both for Spirituals and Temporals. 3. Because the King had not left his Wife till he was divorced by the Archbishop of Rheims, and had these lawful Issue by the other Wife before the Holy See had forbid him to live with her, whereas he had observed no Form nor Law in the matter. 4. Because the King acknowledging no Superiour in Temporals, had submitted himself to the Holy See in this case, though perhaps he could have given himself this Dispensation as to Temporals; but as for him who depended upon other Soveraigns, this Dispensation could not be granted him without encroaching upon their Right, and he could not grant it to himself. About the end he begins to establish the Power which he had not over the Temporalty of St. Peter's Patrimony only, but over that of other States. And he concludes that he cannot grant his desire, unless he can prove to him that his Fault is less, or his Authority greater than it was thought.

The hundred and sixtieth to the King of England, wherein he reproaches him for having forsaken the Party of Otho.

The hundred and sixty seventh, to the Holy Soldiers, which is full of Reproaches too about the taking of Zara in Dalmatia, which the Venetians had attacked and taken by storm with the help of these Crosses, and had divided the Booty of with them.

Monsieur Baluze has added to these Letters two Privileges granted by this Pope, the one to the Monastry of St. Lawrence of Aversa, and the other to that of St. Paul and St. Peter of Canterbury, and some other Letters which had never been printed, which serve to clear some of those in this Book; namely, the Letters and Acts about the Accommodation between the Bishop of Paris, and the Abbot of St. Genevieva An Mont, confirmed by the Abbot of St. Columbus of Sens, and by the Theologal of Orleans, in pursuance of a Letter of Innocent's, viz. the hundredth, and by the Pope himself, in a private Letter which Monsieur Baluze speaks of; and the Act of the Legitimation of the Children of King Philip the Beautiful, of which he spoke in the hundred and twenty eighth Letter.

The fifth Book is followed by a Collection of Letters which concern the Contest for the Empire between Philip and Otho, with this Title; The Register of Pope Innocent III. about the Affair of the Roman Empire. There are to be found not only the Letters of the Pope upon that Subject, but those likewise of the two Contenders, and of those of their Parties. There are several considerable Circumstances of this History to be learnt there, and we may by them see the disposition of the Pope and Princes, and the different Motives which made them act on this or that side. At first the Pope seems to be neuter, and to desire nothing else but that the German Princes would agree and live in peace. The first and second Letters. Otho writes him a very submissive Letter. The King of England, and other Princes which were for him, write to the Pope in his behalf. The fourth, fifth, and following Letters. Those who had chosen him give the Pope an account of his Election, and desire his confirmation of it. The tenth Letter. The Pope

anſwers them in general Terms. The eleventh Letter. On the other ſide the Princes of Germany that were for Philip, demand of the Pope four things; 1. That he would acknowledg Philip for King of Germany. 2. That he would do nothing againſt the Rights of the Empire. 3. That he would not refuſe to crown him Emperor, when he ſhould come to Rome for this Ceremony. 4. That he would not make war againſt Marcovaldus. The fourteenth Letter. The Pope anſwer'd them that he is very ſorry for the Differences in Germany, that he has no deſign of intrenching upon the Privileges of the Empire; that he will give the Crown to him whoſe Election he ſhall find to have been according to form; but that he cannot favour Marcovaldus, who is a Rebel againſt the King of Sicily, and who had ſeized upon the Lands of the Holy See. The fifteenth Letter. Philip Duke of Suabia likewiſe wrote to the Pope by Ambaſſadors that he ſends him. The ſeventeenth Letter. And Philip King of France earneſtly recommends his Affair. The thirteenth Letter. The Pope anſwers the Ambaſſadors in a full Conſiſtory, that it belonged to the Holy See to give Judgment in this difference. The eighteenth. Otho who found himſelf the weakeſt of the two, writes very ſubmiſſive Letters to the Pope, and makes offers of peace, and to yield to all that the Holy See ſhould think fit to order. The nineteenth and twentieth. The Pope wrote a Letter to the Princes of Germany, having recounted what was ſaid on one ſide and the other to maintain the Validity of each Election, he lays open to them the miſchiefs that this diviſion might produce, and exhorts them unanimouſly to chooſe one only Prince. In the mean while the Archbiſhop of Mentz having called an Aſſembly at Andernach and at Coblentz, had there made the Princes promiſe that they would execute what ſhould be ordered in the firſt Aſſembly that ſhould be held. The Pope was angry that this was done without his having a hand in it, and wrote thereof to the Archbiſhop in the twenty ſecond Letter.

Hitherto the Pope had not declared himſelf, but now ſeeing that there was a neceſſity of doing it, he weighs the Reaſons and Intereſts that the Holy See might have, and finds that it is moſt for its advantage to declare for Otho. He himſelf has told us his Motives in his Memoir, Intituled, The Deliberation of Pope Innocent upon the three Competitors for the Empire: Frederick, Philip, and Otho. He examines the matter by three Principles: Quid liceat; quid deceat; quid expediat. He ſays that it ſeems to him quod non liceat to reject the Election of Frederick, which was the firſt that the Princes of Germany made; quod non deceat, becauſe he was put by his Father under the protection of the Holy See; quod non expediat, becauſe there was reaſon to fear that when he ſhould become powerful, and ſee that the Holy See had baulk'd him of the Empire, he ſhould caſt its Authority out of Sicily, and not make to it the ordinary Submiſſions, that he might revenge himſelf upon that which had taken the Empire from him. But then he ſets againſt this, that his Election had been gained by force, and an Oath to maintain it had been taken by violence; that he was elected at a time when he was not capable of managing the Empire; and that ſuppoſing he had been choſen in a time that the Empire had been vacant, yet non deceat, becauſe it is not reaſonable that he who is under the Tutorage of others, ſhould command and govern them: that non expediat, becauſe the Kingdom of Sicily would by this means be united to the Empire, and there was reaſon to fear that the King of Sicily being become ſo powerful, would not do homage to the Holy See. For the Election of Philip he alledges, quod non liceat to reject it, becauſe it had been made by the greateſt number: non deceat, for fear he ſhould think that the Holy See minded only to revenge the Injuries done it: non expediat, becauſe he was the moſt powerful. Then againſt his Election he ſays, quod non liceat to approve it, becauſe he had been excommunicated, and elected while he was excommunicated; which is ſo true, that he would ſince have gotten his Abſolution, which was nevertheleſs not given him in due form, becauſe he was a favourer of Marcovaldus, becauſe he had taken an Oath to Frederick, and in the mean while acted contrary to this Oath: quod deceat to oppoſe him in it, becauſe elſe it would ſeem as if the Empire was hereditary, when one Brother ſucceeded another: quod expediat, becauſe he is a Perſecutor, and of a perſecuting Race. Againſt Otho, quod non liceat to acknowledg him, becauſe he was choſen by the leaſt number: quod non deceat, for fear it ſhould ſeem to be out of partiality: quod non expediat, becauſe his Party ſeemed to be the weakeſt. For this Prince, becauſe ſanior pars conſentit; becauſe he is the moſt proper; becauſe God will aſſiſt him. The Concluſion is to counſel the Princes of Germany to agree upon one Perſon, and to adviſe them to declare for Otho. The twenty ninth Letter. After having made this Reſolution, he wrote a Letter to the Archbiſhop of Cologn, and his Suffragans, and to the Princes of Germany, wherein he tells them that it belongs principally and finally to the Holy See to decide all Differences that ſhould ariſe about the Empire, that they might be made up: principally, becauſe 'twas that See that tranſlated the Greek Empire to the Latins; and finally, becauſe 'tis that that gives the Imperial Crown: that he had waited to ſee whether the two Contenders would agree, but ſince that was not done, he had ſent the Cardinal of Palestrina his Legate into Germany, with Philip a Notary, and had order'd Octavian Biſhop of Oſtia his Legate in France to repair thither, if he could, and ſee what was to be done. The thirtieth Letter. He wrote the ſame thing to the Prelates and Princes of Germany. The thirty firſt. In fine, he declar'd openly for Otho, acknowledging him to be King of Germany lawfully elected, made a Declaration of it to the Princes of Germany, and order'd them to obey him. The thirty ſecond, and following Letters. He wrote likewiſe to the King of France to draw him to the ſame ſide with himſelf, and to the King of England to keep him firm on it. The forty ſeventh, and forty ninth Letters.

The

The Princes of Philip's Party, astonished at what the Legate had done, complained of the Court of Rome's meddling in the Election of an Emperor, any more than the Emperor did in the Election of a Pope, which he might pretend to a right of doing. They said that the Cardinal of Palestrina could not do as he had done, either in quality of an Elector, for that did not belong to him; or of a Judg, because he had given Judgment in the absence of one of the Parties, and because he had no power to judg in this matter. The sixty first Letter. The Pope answer'd, That he acknowledges that the right of choosing a King who is afterwards to be made Emperor, lies in the hands of the German Princes, but that he hath a right to see what this Person is, because he is to consecrate and confirm him: That his Legate had acted the part neither of an Elector nor of a Judg, but of a Denunciator, by declaring that Duke Philip was unworthy, and Otho worthy of the Empire: That the Election of Philip was disorderly, &c. The sixty second Letter. Philip King of France complains of the Election of Otho, and tells the Pope that if he still protected him he would take his own measures, and assures him he had no reason to fear any thing from Philip. The sixty third Letter. The Pope answer'd, That he had no design to do any thing that might be a prejudice to France: That he had a greater affection for the King of France and his Subjects, than for all other Kings and States, Utpote in cujus exaltatione exaltari credimus Apostolicam sedem, & in cujus depressione, quod absit, ipsam deprimi crederemus. Then he gave the Reasons why he put by Philip; 1. Because he is of a Family that had been Enemies to the Holy See. 2. Because he is excommunicated. 3. Because one cannot trust him. But as for Otho, he assures him that he had engaged him to follow his Counsels in respect of France: That he is of Kin to Lewis the Son of the King of France: That it's none of his Interest to defend the English, and that he had not assisted them: That if he should take any measures against France, the Holy See would straight oppose him: Usque adeo enim Regni Francorum diligimus libertatem, ut non solummodo contra eum, sed contra omnem hominem qui illud molestare præsumeret, pro cujus immunitate staremus, & ejus defenderemus pro viribus dignitatem. He exhorts him to live in Peace, and touches upon some other Reasons of State, which should keep him from opposing the Empire of Otho. The sixty fourth Letter. The Pope wrote moreover many other Letters to the Princes and Prelates of Germany in favour of Otho, who had taken an Oath to obey the Church of Rome, and to restore it all the Lands which belonged to it, and among others the Exarchate of Ravenna, the Marquisate of Ancona, the Dutchy of Spoletto, the Lands of the Countess Mathilda, &c. The seventy seventh Letter. The Party of Otho growing every day weaker and weaker, the Pope exhorts the two Parties to come to a Treaty that there might be a Peace. The seventy ninth. Otho to get him on his side, promises to make a peace with the King of France. The eighty first Letter. The Report goes that the Pope's a going to leave him. He complains thereof. The Pope assures him that he has not changed his Sentiments; that he had sent no Letters against him, and that those which went about were forged. The eighty fifth and following Letters. On the contrary he excommunicated the Bishops that were against Otho, and exhorts all the Ecclesiastick and secular Princes of Germany to be on Otho's side. Philip, whose Party was very much strengthened, thought that he might at last perhaps gain the Pope; he wrote him a Letter to justify his Conduct, in which he says that his design at first was to keep the Empire for his Nephew Frederick: That the Electors refused to confer it on him: That he received the Empire whether he would or no, without any looking after it, or caring for it: That some Malecontents, corrupted by the King of England's Gold, had chosen Otho: That Lupold had been Canonically chosen Archbishop of Mentz. And he ends his Letter with promises of obedience, and submission, and respect, protesting that it is a falsehood that he was excommunicated by the Pope his Predecessor; that all he wished was to be as certain of not being excommunicated out of the Church Triumphant, as he was of not being so out of the Church Militant.

Within a while after things looked towards a Peace; the Pope sends Hugolin Cardinal Bishop of Ostia, and Leo Cardinal of the Holy Cross, in quality of his Legates into Germany to conclude it. They received Philip's Oath of obeying the Pope in all things for which he had been excommunicated, and gave him absolution after he had taken it. They obliged him to set Bruno of Cologn at liberty, to turn out Lupold, and put Sifroy into possession of the Archbishoprick of Mentz. They made him disband his Army, and enter into a Truce for a year. The hundred and forty second Letter. Philip was killed not long after. You may see the Circumstances of his death in the hundred and fifty second Letter of Cardinal Hugolin. Otho is afraid that some body would dispute the Empire with him: The Pope promises stoutly to maintain him in it, and to hinder any one from rising up against him. The hundred and fifty third Letter. He wrote upon the same Subject to the Princes of Germany. Otho desires him to write in his behalf, and the Pope doth it, and exhorts the King of France too to make peace with him. To strengthen him still more, he empower'd Hugolin to grant a Dispensation for his marrying the Daughter of Philip. He writes him a pretty Letter about the Union which there ought to be between the Sacerdotal Power, and the Imperial: That they are the two Swords which ought to assist one another, and recommends his Legates to him. The hundred and seventy ninth Letter. In fine, Otho being come into Italy to receive the Imperial Crown, takes an Oath to the Pope, whereby he consents to the liberty of Elections, allows of Appeals, renounces all pretence to the Revenues of vacant Churches, leaves the ordering of all spiritual Affairs to the Pope, promises to exterminate Heresy, and to render to the Church of Rome all its Lands; and particularly the Marquisate of Ancona, the Dutchy of Spoletto, the Exarchate of Ravenna, the Estates of the Countess Mathilda, &c. and promises assistance and obedience to the Pope. This Oath was taken in the year 1209. at Spire, the twenty firſt of March; the hundred and eighty ninth Letter: And was confirmed by the hundred and ninety ſecond.

We do not think fit to enter upon the reſt of the Letters contain'd in the reſt of the Books of Innocent's Regiſter, which are about an infinity of private Actions and Affairs, the recital of which would be more tedious than uſeful. There you may find a great many Privileges granted or confirmed to many Abbys; many Confirmations of the Elections of Biſhops; divers Suits brought before the Holy See, and Judgment given in them, or elſe they returned to the Commiſſaries; Mandates for Livings; Letters to animate the Chriſtians to relieve the Holy Land, or to ſet the Catholicks about the exterminating all Hereticks; Advice to Princes and Biſhops; Queſtions about Marriages and Divorces, and particularly about that of Philip King of France, and that of Peter King of Arragon; and the deciſion of ſome Queſtions in the Canon Law. There are ſome too about the Regal Right as well in France as England, of which we ſhall ſpeak in their place. The greateſt part of theſe Letters are written in a formal and practical Stile. This Pope had a wonderful inſight into Affairs, and a very particular Knack of hitting the joints of the Buſineſs in a few words, and of ſetting off the Reaſons both on one ſide and the other in their full force; which he did with ſo much impartiality, that as the Author of his Life takes notice, one can hardly diſcover which ſide he enclines to till he pronounces Sentence.

He compoſed many other Works both before and after his being Pope. Here's a Catalogue of them. A Treatiſe of deſpiſing the World, or of the miſery of Man's Eſtate; in three Books: A Work for Piety much like that of the Imitation of Chriſt, of which there have been many Editions, as at Paris in 1482, and 1594. at Venice in 1538. at Antwerp in 1540. and at Cologn in 1681. A Treatiſe of the Myſteries of the Maſs, divided into ſix Books, printed likewiſe by it ſelf at Leipſick in 1534. and at Antwerp in 1540. A Commentary upon the ſeven Penitential Pſalms, printed at Antwerp in 1550, at Venice in 1578, and at Cologn the ſame year. Three Prayers in honour of the Saints. Sermons for the whole year, and for the Saints days, with four Diſcourſes for the Conſecration of the Pope. A Treatiſe of Almſgiving. A Treatiſe in the praiſe of Charity. Hymns or Proſes in honour of Jeſus Chriſt and the Virgin, and Prayers upon the Paſſion of Jeſus Chriſt. Two Diſcourſes to the ſecond General Council of Lateran. The Acts and Canons of this Council. All his Works were printed with two Books of Letters in Folio at Cologn in 1552, and in 1575. Theſe Works are full of Piety and Spirituality. The Book of the Contempt of the World may be very uſeful, and contains very lively Draughts of the Eſtate and Miſery of Man. The Books of the Myſteries of the Maſs are full of Myſtical Reflections upon the Ceremonies of the Maſs. The Stile of the Sermons is cloſe, full of Diviſions, Antitheſes, Allegories, and many Paſſages of Holy Scripture.

CHAP. III.

The Hiſtory and Writings of the Popes who have been of the Holy See, from the Death of Innocent to the end of the Century.

Honorius the Third.

POPE Innocent dying at Peruſa the ſixteenth of July 1216, Cencius Sabellius, the Son of Almerick a Roman, who had been made Cardinal Deacon by Celeſtin the 3*d*, and Cardinal Prieſt by the Title of St. John and St. Paul by Innocent the 3*d*, was elected Pope the eighteenth of the ſame month, and took the name of HONORIUS the Third. He exhorted the German Princes who had taken upon them the Holy War, to make a Voyage beyond Sea, and order'd ſolemn Proceſſions for the ſucceſs of the Expedition: but for all that it had not the ſucceſs that one could have wiſhed; for the Chriſtians were forced at laſt to give up Damiata which they had taken at the beginning of the Expedition, and to throw up the Deſign. The Pope alſo cauſed war to be made upon the Moors of Spain, and the Albigenſes of Tholouſe, and earneſtly exhorted Philip Auguſtus King of France, and Lewis the eighth his Son, to exterminate them. He died the eighteenth of April 1227.

The Regiſters of this Pope's Letters, and of thoſe of many of his Succeſſors, are in the Vatican Library, but were never yet publiſhed entire: Rinaldus has inſerted almoſt all of them in his Continuation of the Annals of Baronius, and particularly thoſe that have any thing to do with the Hiſtory. Some of them too may be found in Bzovius, and many in the Hiſtory of the Minor Brothers compoſed by Waddingus, who has put all that concern his Order together at the end of every Volume of his Hiſtory. There are ſome of them inſerted in the Bullaries, particularly thoſe which concern the Inſtitution or Confirmation of Religious Orders, and their Statutes; the Canonization of Saints; the Cruſades againſt the Saracens and Hereticks; the Eſtabliſhment, Laws and Privileges of the Inquiſition; the Erection of Univerſities, &c. There are ſome too in the laſt Collection of the Councils; but the moſt conſiderable things in theſe Letters about the Canon Law, were put together in the antient Collections of the Decretals of the Popes, under different Titles, according to the Order which Juſtinian has obſerved in his Codes. There are five famous Collections of theſe Decretals before that of Gregory the Ninth, which is in the Body of the Law.

The

The first, which was made a little while after the Collection of Gratian, was composed by Bernard Provost of Pavia, and Bishop of Fayence, who collected the Constitutions of the Popes since Gratian, and particularly those of Alexander the Third, and Lucius the Third, and ends at Celestin the Third. Collections of the Pope's Decretals.

Some time after three persons undertook to make a Collection of the Decretals of the Popes which were omitted by Bernard, or written since his time: Gilbert, Alanus, and John Gallus of Volterra. That of the last was the largest and best, and it is that which is counted for the second. It contains some Letters of the Popes omitted by Bernard, those of Celestin the Third, and the first of Innocent the Third. 'Tis thought that Alanus's is that which is inserted among the Councils after the third General Council of Lateran.

The third Collection was began by Bernard of Compostella, but the Romans being offended that a Stranger should meddle with that Work, desired Pope Innocent to have it done by his Order. Peter of Benevento, Deacon and Secretary to the Pope, was chosen out for the Business, and composed it out of the twelve first Books of this Pope's Letters, and it was published in the Pope's name.

The fourth Collection was made five years after by the order of the same Pope. It contains the Canons of the fourth General Council of Lateran, and the other Decretals made since that Council. These four antient Collections with their Commentators, have been presented to the publick by Antonius Augustinus, and printed at Paris by Cramoisy in 1621.

The fifth Collection is composed of the Letters of Honorius the Third, of whom we are speaking, who caused it to be made and presented to himself by Tancredus Archdeacon of Bologn, whom he commanded to receive it, and get it received as well in Schools as Ecclesiastical Tribunals. This was published by Ciro Professor of the Canon Law, and Chancellor of the University of Tholouse, and printed in that City with learned Comments in the year 1645.

Monsieur du Chesne had the Manuscript Register of Honorius the Third, some of whose Letters he published in the Fifth Tome of the Historians of France. We find three Letters of this Pope in the Collection of the Councils, in the last of which he abolishes the Avows of Churches. There are three more too in the same place about the Primacy of Tolèdo, and three more which concern the Order of Minor Brothers in the Collection of Vaddingus. Monsieur Baluze too has given us some in the second Tome of his Miscellany Works. Lastly, we find ten Bulls of this Pope in the last Bullary, of which the first is a Confirmation of the Laws of the Emperor Frederick, and the others contain the Confirmation of the Rules of divers religious Orders, and particularly those of the Minor Brothers, and the Carmelites, and of the Privileges of Citeaux, and the Canonization of St. Laurence Archbishop of Dublin.

Cardinal Hugolin succeeded Honorius the Third, and took the name of GREGORY the Ninth; he was of Anagni, descended of the Illustrious Family of the Earls of Signi. He had been made Cardinal Bishop of Ostia by Innocent the Third, and Chief of the Embassy for the Crusade under that Pope, and under his Successor Honorius the Third; an Employ which gained him a great deal of Credit and Authority: so that it was no wonder that the first thing he did after his Election, was to press the Emperor Frederick and the rest of the Crosses to go for the Holy Land, and that he used the Sword of Excommunication against this Emperor for putting off his Voyage. We shall not here repeat what we have before spoken of his dealings with the Emperor, which were at last the cause of his Death, that fell out on the 30*th* of September 1241. Gregory the Ninth.

The Letters of this Pope are much better written than the greatest part of the Letters of any of the Popes of that time. There are a great many about his Differences with Frederick; others against Hereticks; some to St. Louis King of France and the Queen his Mother about the Differences of that Prince with the King of England; against the Albigenses, and in favour of some Bishops of France. This is the Subject of one and thirty Letters of this Pope, which are in the Collection of the Councils. There are ninety seven of his in Vaddingus, and a great number besides in the Ecclesiastical History of Rainaldus, who has amass'd them almost all together. The great Bullary furnishes us with a dozen, among which are the Bulls of the Canonization of St. Francis, of St. Anthony of Padua, of St. Dominick, and of St. Elizabeth. Father Dachery has published thirteen of them in the third Tome of his Spicilegium. Lastly, there are many Fragments of his Decretal Letters in the Collection of five Books of Decretals which he had made by Raimundus of Pennafort, and which he approved of, forbidding the use of any other Collection in the Schools and Ecclesiastical Tribunals, or the making of any other without an express order from the Holy See.

Thirty days after the Death of Gregory the Ninth, Godfrey of Chastillon a Frenchman, Cardinal of St. Sabina, was by his singular Piety and compleat Learning recommended to the Popedom, and took the name of CELESTIN the Fourth: but he enjoyed it but eighteen days, at the end of which he died, overloaded with old Age and Infirmities, so that we must not wonder we have no Letters of his. Celestin the Fourth.

After his Death the Holy See was vacant for about nineteen months, and then Sinibaud Cardinal of the Title of St. Laurence, was chosen Pope the 24*th* of June in the year 1243. and took the name of INNOCENT the Fourth, and was consecrated at Anagni the 28*th* of the same month. He lived in the Holy See three years and some months, and so has left us many Letters written during his Popedom. There are nineteen of them in the Collection of Councils, without counting those four that are in the General Council of Lyons. In the tenth, to his Legate in Cyprus, he resolves divers Questions concerning some Contests between the Bishops of the Greek and Innocent the Fourth.

Way in that Kingdom; and he there determines, 1. That the Greeks ought to obſerve the Cuſtom of the Roman Church in the Unctions of Baptiſm. 2. That yet it may be allowed them to anoint the whole Body of the Baptized. 3. That it ſignifies nothing whether they uſe hot or cold Water in Baptiſm. 4. That none but Biſhops have right to anoint the Forehead of the Baptized with Holy Chriſm. 5. That every Biſhop might conſecrate the Holy Chriſm: That if the Greeks had a mind to follow their own way, according to which the Biſhops are to conſecrate it with their Archbiſhop, and the Archbiſhop with the Patriarch, they might be eaſily allowed it. 6. That Prieſts ought not to give Unction to Penitents, inſtead of Satisfaction. 7. But that extream Unction ought to be given to ſick People. 8. That the Greeks might make uſe of hot Water or cold as they pleaſed in the Sacrifice of the Altar, provided they thought one might conſecrate as well with the one as the other. 9. That they ought not to be allowed to keep the Euchariſt a year, but that it ought to be renewed every five days. 10. That the Greeks might be left to uſe their own Ceremonies in the Maſs, provided they uſed the ſame Form of Conſecration that Jeſus Chriſt did, and did not ſtay till paſt the None Hour. 11. That the Prieſts may call the Hours as they pleaſe, and are uſed, but that they ſhould not celebrate when they had not ſaid Mattins. 12. That the Prieſts ought to be examined to ſee whether they are fit and capable of reading the Office, and celebrating the Maſs. 13. That every Prieſt ſhould offer the Sacrifice in a Chalice of Gold, or Silver, or Tin, with a white clean Linen Corporal, and upon an Altar decently ſet forth. 14. That Women are by no means to be ſuffered to ſerve at the Altar. 15. That though the Greeks would do better if they faſted every day of the Lent, yet they might be left to the way they were uſed to. 16. That married Prieſts who had the care of Souls, ought not to be hindred from taking the Confeſſions of their Pariſhioners, and impoſing Penances on them. 17. That for all that it ſhall be free for the Biſhops to ſettle and appoint Prieſts in their Dioceſſes to take the Confeſſions of Penitents, to enjoin Penances, and to act in their name. 18. That Fornication Soluti cum ſoluta is a deadly Sin. 19. That the Greeks ſhould be obliged to give the ſeven Orders, although they had hitherto neglected it, ſtill omitting the three lower ones. 20. That the Greeks ought not to condemn all third and fourth Marriages. 21. That nevertheleſs Prieſts ſhould not give their Bleſſing upon ſecond Marriages. 22. That they ſhould not marry, ſo as they did, within the fourth degree of Kindred and Affinity. 23. That thoſe Greeks, who acknowledged that the Souls of thoſe who died without being wholly cleanſed from their Sin might exiſt after death, and be eaſed by the Prayers of the Living, were obliged to call this place where they are, Purgatory. 24. That thoſe who die in a ſtate of deadly Sin, ſhall be damned for ever. 25. That the Souls of Infants who are baptized, and of juſt men who have no more ſatisfaction to make, go directly at their Death to an eternal Country. 26. That Abbots and Monks ſhould obſerve the Rules of the Holy Fathers. The thirteenth Letter is a Confirmation of the Laws made by the Emperor Frederick againſt Hereticks: And the eighteenth forbids excommunicating or interdicting the Eſtates of the King of France without particular Orders from the Holy See. Rainaldus recounts many other Letters of this Pope in his Annals. There are ſixteen of them in the Great Bullary, of which ſome are the ſame with thoſe in the Collection of the Councils, and the others are Confirmations or Privileges of Orders, and the Canonizations of Saints. Father Vaddingus has got together 98 which concern his Order. This Pope died the ſeventh of December 1254.

Alexander the Fourth. His Succeſſor was Rainaud of Anagni of the Family of the Earls of Signi, a Kinſman of Innocent the Third's, and Gregory the Ninth's, the latter of which had made him Cardinal. He was elected on the 21*ſt* of the ſame month December, and conſecrated on Chriſtmaſs Day, taking the name of ALEXANDER the Fourth. He was ſix years five months and three days in the Holy See, and writ in this time many Letters. There are no more than three of them in the laſt Collection of Councils, but there are a great many in Rainaldus, twenty four in the Great Bullary, which are moſt of them for the Confirmation or Settlement of Orders, or for the Eſtabliſhment of the Inquiſition, and the perſecution of Hereticks; a Conſtitution for the Iſland of Cyprus, which is in the Addition to the eleventh Tome of the Councils; and a hundred and twenty four Letters in favour of the Order of Minor Brothers, which are in Vaddingus. There are ſix Letters more of this Pope to St. Louis in the ſixth Tome of Father Luke Dachery's Spicilegium, in which he declares that the Chappels of the King cannot be interdicted, nor any part of his Eſtates, without a ſpecial Order of the Holy See; and gives leave to the King and Noblemen to put thoſe of the Clergy into priſon as were guilty of enormous and notorious Crimes; and declares ſuch of the Clergy, as meddle in Merchandiſe or Buſineſs, ſtript of their Privileges. This is confirmed by two Letters of Clement the Fourth, which are related in the ſame place.

Urban the Fourth. The Death of Alexander the Fourth fell out upon the 24*th* of June in 1261, and was followed by a Vacancy of three months and three days, by reaſon there were but nine Cardinals, eight of which that were preſent at the Election could not agree with one another; ſo that at laſt they were forced to bring it to this, that they would look for one out of their own College: They caſt their Eyes ſtraight upon the Patriarch of Jeruſalem, named Simon Pantaleon, a Native of Troies in Champagne, and of a very mean Extraction; but one whoſe merit had raiſed him by degrees to this Dignity, having firſt been Cation of Troies, then Archdeacon of Laon and Leige, and then Biſhop of Verdun. He was choſen the 28*th* of Auguſt in and Philosophy, and has left us some Books in these Sciences, and some Letters written while he was Pope. There's one of them to the King of England in the 10th Tome of the Councils, and many others mentioned by Raynaldus, and four by Waddingus.

Nicolas the Third.

The twenty fifth of November the same year, John Caietan a Roman, of the Family of the Orsini's, was chosen Pope, and named NICOLAS the Third, by the name of the Title of St. Nicolas, of which he was Cardinal. We have a good many of his Letters in Raynaldus, and there are two celebrated ones in the Great Bullary; one against the Jews, and the other against Hereticks. He made a famous Decreet too, by which he reserved to the Holy See the Donation of all things that should be granted to the Order of Minor Friars; leaving them only the Use of fructus, which was repealed by the Extravagante ad Conditorem of John the 22d. Waddingus relates likewise five Letters of this Pope, who died the 22d of August in 1280.

Martin the Fourth.

The Troubles raised by the Intrigues of the Ursini and Hannibaldi put off the Election of a Pope till the 22d of February the next year: when Simon of Brie, Cardinal of St. Cecilia, who before had been Treasurer of the Church of St. Martin of Tours, was elected, and having been consecrated the 23d of March, took, in memory of his former Preferment, the name of MARTIN the Second, commonly called the Fourth. He gave a Token of his Humility at the beginning of his Popedom, by sending back his Brother, who upon notice of his Preferment was come to Rome to meet him, and giving him but just what was necessary for his Journey flying, That what he had did not belong to himself but the Church, and that he ought not to make use of it for the enriching his Kindred. He shewed his Acknowledgments to the Church of St. Martin of Tours, by confirming its Privileges, and granted the Order of Minor Friars the power of preaching and confessing. These are the Subjects of those two Letters of the Pope which are in the Councils. He excommunicated Michael Paleologus the Greek Emperor, who had broken the Treaty of Union with the Roman Church, in the Council of Lyons, and the Letter of his Condemnation is in the Bullary. There are other Letters of this Pope's to be seen in Raynaldus and Waddingus. He died the 25th of March in the year 1285.

Honorius the Fourth.

HONORIUS the Fourth, whose name before was James Savelli, Cardinal Deacon of the Title of St. Mary of Cosmedin, was chosen in his place the second of April 1285, and consecrated the twentieth of May following. He lived but two years after his Election, in which time he writ many Letters recorded by Raynaldus, Bzovius and Waddingus. There are two considerable ones in the Bullary, by one of which he condemns a new Order of Mendicants erected under the name of Apostolick, and by the other declares that the Sons and Grandsons of such as have been punished for Heresy, are not capable of any Living or Ecclesiastical Office.

Nicolas the Fourth.

After the Death of Honorius the Fourth, which happened April the 3d 1287, the Holy See was vacant till the 22d of April in 1288, when it was filled by Jerom of Ascoli, Cardinal of the Title of St. Pudentiana, of the Order of Preaching Friars, who took the name of NICOLAS the Fourth. He made many Statutes in favour of those of his own Order, and was a great encourager of learned Men. He wrote Commentaries upon the Holy Scriptures, and upon the Master of the Sentences, with many Sermons, Works which we have quite lost. His Letters, which are very numerous, compose three Manuscript Volumes in the Vatican Library: Raynaldus, Bzovius and Waddingus afford us a great many of them, and we meet with six in the Bullary; the first against the Jews; the second an Approbation of the third Order of St. Francis; the third a Confirmation of the Declaration of Gregory the Ninth about the Order of Clare; the fourth the Institution of an Holyday; the fifth about the Recovery of the Holy Land; and the last a Privilege for the Order of Mercy. He died at Rome the 14th of April in the year 1292.

Celestin the Fifth.

His Death was followed by a Vacancy of two years three months and ten days; but at last the Cardinals, after not being able for so long time to come to an Agreement, resolved upon Peter of Morrhon, an Hermit of Pouille, the Founder of a new Congregation, which took the name of Celestines, from the name of CELESTIN the Fifth, which was given this Pope. But this good Man, who accepted of the Dignity with much unwillingness, let himself be easily persuaded by Cardinal Benedict Caietan to quit it for a quiet Life; so that he was but a very little while upon the Holy See, having been chosen Pope the 10th of July 1294, and having voluntarily resigned the Dignity the 12th of December the same year. He renewed Gregory the Tenth's Confirmation of shutting up the Cardinals in a Conclave till they had elected a Pope, to hinder the Holy See's remaining so long vacant as it had done before his Election. He made another Constitution likewise, that Popes might have the freedom of resigning the Popedom when they pleased, which might as well have been let alone, no Pope since him having followed his Example, as no Pope before him ever let it him. He solemnly gave his Approbation of the Order of Celestines, which is recorded in the Great Bullary. There are some little pieces attributed to him, which are nothing but Collections of Passages out of the Holy Scripture, the Fathers, the Popes, and the Canonists, upon divers heads; they were printed in his name, and published by Celestin Telesio of Naples, but there's no more certainty of their being the Genuine Works of Celestin the Fifth, than there is that the six Letters and Prayers published by the same Author are his, all which have nothing in them worth taking notice of. Benedict Caietan, who got him to resign, got himself chosen in his place under the name of BONIFACE VIII. We shall have occasion to speak of this Pope in the next Century.

CHAP. IV.

The Lives and Writings of the Authors that flourished in the West in the Thirteenth Century.

THE great number of Authors which wrote in the Thirteenth Century of the Church, seems to promise a great variety of very diverting matters. And therefore no doubt it will be a Surprize to find nothing in this Chapter almoſt but juſt the Names, the Imployments, and the Time of the greateſt part of the Authors, with a ſimple Catalogue of their Writings. But if one conſiders the nature of the Works, and the manner of their Compoſition, he muſt confeſs that we have uſed them as we ought, ſeeing the Extracts that might have been made of them would have been neither uſeful nor pleaſant: and therefore we ſhall content our ſelves in making ſome general Reflections upon the different ſorts of Subjects which buſied the Authors of the Thirteenth Age, and upon the manner of their writing. A Judgement upon the Works of the Thirteenth Century.

The moſt conſiderable are the Commentaries upon the four Books of Sentences of Peter Lombard Biſhop of Paris, whoſe Work was then in ſuch requeſt, that it was the only Divinity that was taught or learnt in the Schools. But inſtead of purſuing his Method, and ſolving the Queſtions which he has propoſed by paſſages out of the Fathers, they make uſe of nothing almoſt but Philoſophical Principles, and Metaphyſical Niceties: they don't think it enough to explain the ſort of the Book of the Maſter of the Sentences, but they muſt take his Queſtions, and handle them after a different manner. So that this cannot ſo properly be called a Commentary as another Work. They have added many other Queſtions to thoſe of the Maſter of the Sentences, which are either inſerted in the Commentaries, or are treated of in ſeparate Pieces, which are commonly called Quodlibetick Queſtions. Some Divines finding themſelves too much confined in the Method of the Maſter of the Sentences, and being willing to give themſelves more ſcope, left off following his Model, and made a new one of their own in their Works, to which they commonly gave the name of A Sum of Theology. There they beat about an infinite number of Theological or Philoſophical Queſtions, they ſet out the Reaſons on one ſide and the other, and moſt commonly decide the Queſtion by Philoſophical Reaſonings and Teſtimonies, making uſe very often of the Authority of Ariſtotle, and now and then of that of the Fathers, whoſe Paſſages they commonly get upon truſt out of the Maſter of the Sentences, Gratian, or the ordinary Gloſs, ſo that their Quotations are very often nothing to the purpoſe, becauſe they are taken upon the Credit of another body, becauſe they never had recourſe to the Original it ſelf, and becauſe they very much wanted Criticks. The Stile of theſe Works is ordinarily dry and barbarous, and ſeldom wants obſcurity.

Their manner of delivering the Word of God to the People had got a tang of this Scholaſtick Method: the Sermons were full of Diviſions, and Diſtinctions upon Diſtinctions, and pitiful mean Compariſons; it's very rare to find any Points of Morality explained in their full Extent, ſet in their true Light, founded upon ſolid Principles, and enforced with Eloquence. But if they do meddle with them, 'tis only to propoſe them drily, to explain them after the common rate, and to ſtrengthen them with ſome Paſſages of Scripture brought in to prove what their natural ſenſe will not bear.

The Commentaries upon the Holy Scripture are of two ſorts; the one called Poſtillæ, are ſhort Notes, for the moſt part giving Grammatical Explications of the words, and taking notice of every little Trifle; the other larger, compoſed of Allegories and myſtical Thoughts.

Some of their ſpiritual Works about Piety, tho plain, yet are pretty ſolid; but then again ſome of them are ſo myſtical that they are not intelligible.

The Authors that wrote about the Rights and Ceremonies of the Church have made it their buſineſs to find out, or elſe to invent ſome myſtical Reaſons for them, with which they have ſtuffed their Works.

The Collections of and Commentaries upon the Decretals of the Popes, took up the time of thoſe that ſtudied the Canon Law. And they have in this Labyrinth of the Laws found Work enough for to exerciſe their Pens, and matter enough to fill great Volumes.

Antient Hiſtory, eſpecially that of the Church, lay extreamly neglected in this Age; yet ſome of its Authors have pretended to give us Abridgments and immethodical Collections of Univerſal Hiſtory. Many of them have made particular Chronicles of their own Churches or Monaſtry, which they filled with things that did not deſerve notice: Others have writ the Hiſtory of the Cruſades of their Times, or Relations of the Journeys into Paleſtine; and theſe are the moſt conſiderable of all the Hiſtorians of that age. The Lives of the Saints are rather Panegyricks than Hiſtorical Narrations.

I ſhan't ſpeak of the prodigious multitude of Commentaries upon Ariſtotle, and the many other Works in Philoſophy, in which the greateſt Men of this Age very uſefully ſpent their time and pains: becauſe, beſides that theſe matters do not belong to my buſineſs, no body now makes any account of theſe Books, which are no more look'd after or made uſe of, except it be to make the Shelves of great Libraries groan under the weight of their numerous Volumes.

Joachim. JOACHIM, a Native of Calabria, a Monk of the Order of Cisteaux, afterwards Abbot of San-Giovanni, in the Diocese of Flora in Calabria, and at last Abbot of Flora in the same Country, the Founder and Institutor of a Congregation, Sanctified from the year 1189, or the year 1200, which some will have to be that of his Death; but it is more probable that he lived some years after that time. He was a Man of great Piety, and Learning, and Reputation for Sanctity. He composed some mystical Commentaries upon the Holy Scriptures, in which he gave divers Prophecies of things which he thought must happen in that State which he saw in his Time. Some of his Predictions deceived posterity, and others failed as to the Event.

John Belethus. JOHN BELETHUS, a Divine of Paris, who lived in the Twelfth Century, and was Chancellor of the Church of Paris, and Author of a Treatise of Divine Offices, and of a Book of Ecclesiastical Offices, in which he treats of the Feasts of the Church, and of the Ceremonies used in celebrating them.

Peter Chanter. PETER CHANTER of the Church of Paris, who flourished in the Year 1180, was one of the Successors of Peter Comestor in the Chancellorship of that Church. He was a Person among the Authors of his time of Great Learning, and Reputation for Sanctity. He wrote a Book called Verbum Abbreviatum, which is a kind of Moral Commentary upon the Holy Scriptures, and a Book called Summa de Sacramentis & Animæ Consilium, which is a Treatise of Divinity, and a Book called Distinctiones Dictionum Theologicalium, which is a kind of Theological Grammar, for Divines, very necessary for the understanding of the Holy Scripture

He compoſed a Treatiſe of Diſtinctions: A Piece about ſome Miracles: Three Books of Sacraments: and Sermons, of which Trithemius makes mention. In Libraries are to be ſeen ſome Gloſſes of his upon the Books of the Bible, and a Collection of Caſes of Conſcience.

GUIBERT or GILBERT, whoſe Sirname was MARTIN, taken by him upon the account of a particular reſpect he had for that Saint, and becauſe he had lived ſome while in the Monaſtry of St. Martin of Tours, was a Monk of Gemblours, whence he was called to the Abby of St. Florin, and afterwards choſen Abbot of Gemblours in the year 1194. But ten years after he reſigned this Abbey, and retired into the Monaſtry of Villiers, from whence he took a Journy to Tours, and at laſt returned to die at Gemblours very old, after having been Prieſt 63 years. He has written many pious Letters to divers Perſons: A Hiſtory in verſe of the Life and Miracles of St. Martin, dedicated to Philip Archbiſhop of Cologn: Eleven Letters to the ſame Archbiſhop, and others to Hervæus Abbot of Marmouſtier, and to the Religious of that Monaſtry; and ſome others to St. Hildegardus and other Perſons. All theſe Letters have never been printed; but Father Mabillon who had the ſight of them in Manuſcript, has given us an Extract of them in his ſecond Tome of Analecta, with a Letter of HERVARDUS Archdeacon of Leige to a Canon of Laon, deſiring him, in Guibert's name, to make a Poem in honour of St. Martin, as he had in honour of St. Servatus. Gilbert Martin. Hervardus.

One of the firſt Schoolmen of the Thirteenth Century, is WILLIAM of Segnelay, Biſhop of Auxerre, who had been Profeſſor of the Univerſity of Paris, and was tranſlated by Honorius III. to the Biſhoprick of Paris. He died at St. Cloud the 23*d* of November 1223, and was interred in the Abbey of Pontigny. He compoſed a Sum of Theology, and a Work about Divine Offices. The laſt hath not yet ſeen the light: The Sum of Theology has been printed at Paris in 1500, and once ſince. William.

ROBERT of Corceon an Engliſhman, who was made Cardinal by Innocent the Third, flouriſhed about the beginning of this Century, and held a Council in quality of a Legate in 1212 at Paris: He was one of the neateſt Divines of his time, and compoſed a Sum of Theology, which may be ſeen in Manuſcript in the Library of St. Victor of Paris, and is quoted by Monſieur De Launoy, and other Authors. Robert.

ALANUS of Liſle in Flanders, flouriſhed in the Univerſity of Paris, where for a long time he taught Divinity from the beginning of this Age, till towards the end. He was called the Univerſal Doctor, becauſe he was equally excellent in Divinity, Philoſophy and Poetry. He wrote many Works both in Proſe and in Verſe: thoſe that are printed are, A Commentary upon the Song of Songs to the praiſe of the Virgin, printed at Paris in 1540: A Sum of the Art of Preaching: A Penitential with this Title, The Corrector: A Work upon the Parables, which has been printed a great many times: A Book of Sentences or memorable Sayings: A Work in Verſe about an honeſt and perfect Man in all ſorts of Virtue, Intituled, Anticlodianus, printed at Baſil in 1536, and at Antwerp in 1621: A Piece with this Title, The Complaint of Nature againſt the Vice of Sodomy: Two Books againſt the Albigenſes and Vaudois: Eleven Sermons: Six Books of the Wings of the Cherubims, falſly aſcribed to St. Bonaventure: Two Proſes, one upon the Incarnation, and the other upon the weakneſs of Human Nature. All theſe Works were collected by Charles Viſch, and printed at Antwerp in 1653, to which in 1656 he added two more Books of this ſame Author againſt the Albigenſes, Vaudois, Jews and Pagans. There's a Manuſcript Work of this Author's too, which is a Sum of Moral Theology, intituled, After how many manners, becauſe he there diſcourſes in an Alphabetical Order, in how many manners things may be taken well or ill. This is plainly that Work which Trithemius calls, The Sum of Virtues and Vices. Trithemius mentions likewiſe a Treatiſe upon the Sentences: A Treatiſe called, The Eye of the Scripture: A Treatiſe of Learning: Two Commentaries upon the five Books of Moſes; About Myſtical Equivoques; Of the nature of Animals: A Book of Letters and Commentaries upon many Books of the Holy Scripture, all compoſed by Alanus. You muſt take care not to confound this with the Alanus Biſhop of Auxerre who lived in the Century before, and there is reaſon to doubt whether this were ever a Citeaux Monk as the former was. The Commentary upon the Prophecies of Merlin, and the Treatiſe of the Philoſophers Stone, the former printed at Franckfort 1608, the latter at Leyden 1600, under the name of Alanus, are two forged Pieces. Alanus.

SIMON a Prieſt of Tournay taught Divinity too about the beginning of this Age with no ſmall Reputation in the Schools of Paris. Henry de Gand, and Trithemius take notice that having himſelf up to the Doctrine of Ariſtotle, he has fallen into ſome Errors: We have none of his Works printed, but they may be found in Manuſcript in Librarys. Theſe are the moſt conſiderable of them: A Theological Sum upon the Sentences: Divers Queſtions: An Expoſition of the Athanaſian Creed: A Commentary upon Boethius's Book of the Trinity, and of Inſtitutions upon the Holy Scripture. The Engliſh claim this Author for their Countryman, and accordingly a great many of his Works are to be found in England. Simon.

PETER of Corbeil, Doctor in Divinity of the Faculty of Paris, was Profeſſor there a great while with great Reputation. He had for his Scholar Lotharius, Son of the Earl of Signi, afterwards Pope with the name of Innocent III. who in one of his Letters counts it an honour to have ſtudied under him, and in acknowledgment gets him the Archdeaconry of York, and ſome time after the Biſhoprick of Cambray, and at laſt the Archbiſhoprick of Sens, which he entred upon in the year 1200. He died the third of June in 1222. His Sum of Theology is not printed, whereof the late Monſieur De Launoy had a Manuſcript. This Archbiſhop had a great name in Peter.

his Time. He wrote a Commentary upon the Epiſtles of St. Paul, and upon many other Books of the Holy Scripture; with Sermons, and divers Treatiſes.

Abſalom. ABSALOM a Regular Canon of St. Victor of Paris, and afterwards Abbot of Spinkerbac in the Dioceſs of Treves, flouriſhed at the beginning of this Century. He has left us fifty Sermons upon the Feaſts of the year, printed at Cologn in 1554, by the care of Daniel of Silinga Abbot of Spinkerbac.

Wernerus. WERNERUS Abbot of St Blaize in the Dark-Foreſt of the Dioceſs of Conſtance, flouriſhed about the year 1210. He made a Collection of Sermons compoſed of divers Paſſages of the Fathers, which are called by the name of Poſtillar Sermons: they were printed at Baſil in 1549.

Tagenon. TAGENON Dean of Pavia, who flouriſhed about the beginning of this Age, has wrote a Hiſtory of the Expedition of the Emperor Frederick Barbaroſſa in Paleſtine, publiſhed by Freherus in his Collection of the German Hiſtorians.

A nameleſs Hiſtorian. There's an Anonymous Hiſtorian too of the ſame time in the fifth Tome of the Antiquities of Caniſius, who wrote upon the ſame Subject.

Walter, William, and Richard. The Expedition of Richard King of England in Paleſtine, was wrote by WALTER Biſhop of Lincoln, and afterwards Archbiſhop of Rouen; by WILLIAM the Pilgrim an Engliſhman, and by RICHARD Canon of London, who accompanied him in the Voyage.

Albert. ALBERT Patriarch of Jeruſalem, Reſident at Acre, after the taking of that City by the Saracens, made about the beginning of this Century an Order for the Carmelites of Syria, publiſhed by the Bollandiſts in the Month of April.

Dodechin. DODECHIN a German Prieſt of the Church of Logenſtein, and afterwards Abbot of St. Diſibode, flouriſhed about the year 1200. He wrote at the deſire of Conon Abbot of St. Diſibode, a Relation of the Voyage which he had made into the Holy Land, and continued on the Chronicle of Marianus Scotus to the year 1200.

Andreas Sylvius. ANDREAS SYLVIUS Monk, and at laſt Abbot of Marchiennes in the Dioceſs of Tournay, compoſed about the year 1200, at the deſire of Peter Biſhop of Arras, a ſhort Hiſtory of the Kings of France of the race of the Merovingians, printed at Douay in 1633. He likewiſe wrote two Books of Miracles of St. Rictruda, publiſhed by the Continuers of Bollandus to the 12*th* of May.

Baldwin. BALDWIN Earl of Flanders, and Emperor of Conſtantinople, has writ a long circular Letter, being a Relation of the taking of Conſtantinople by the Latins in 1204; wherein he takes care to forget nothing that may render the Greeks odious. It is to be met with in the Annals of Rainaldus, and in a Collection of ſome Pieces by Aubert de la Mire.

Geoffrey. GEOFFREY Lord of Villehardwin near Troies in Champagne, compoſed in French the Hiſtory of the taking of Conſtantinople by the Latins, where he himſelf aſſiſted: It is written in an old Stile, but after a noble and impartial manner.

Gonthier. GONTHIER a Monk in the Monaſtry of Paris in the Dioceſs of Baſil, who flouriſhed about the beginning of this Century, has left us the Hiſtory of the taking of Conſtantinople by the Latins, the Circumſtances of which he had from Abbot Martin an Eye-witneſs. It was publiſhed by Caniſius in the firſt Tome of his Antiquities.

Arnold. ARNOLD Provoſt of the Church of Hildeſheim, and afterwards Abbot of Lubeck, flouriſhed in the Reigns of the Emperors Philip and Otho IV. He is the Author of the Continuation of the Chronicle of the Sclavonians made by Helmoldus from the year 1171, to the year 1209. This Work was printed at Lubeck in 1659, larger than in the firſt Edition of Helmoldus at Franckfort in 1556, which contains only the nine firſt Chapters. Yet this wants the four laſt Chapters, which have been publiſhed by Meibomius with the Opuſcula Hiſtorica, and printed at Helmſtadt in 1660. Voſſius's Remarks upon this Author is, that he is to be credited in what relates to the Hiſtory of the Sclavonians, but not in what he has written of the Hiſtories of Italy, Sicily, and Greece.

Gervais. GERVAIS, Sirnamed of Tilbury, from the name of the Town where he was born, which is in England upon the Thames, of the Family of Henry the II. King of England, and Great Marſhal of the Kingdom of Arles, flouriſhed much about the year 1210, and wrote divers Hiſtorical Works: among others, An Univerſal Hiſtory of the Kingdoms of the Weſt, with the Title of Otia Imperialia: An Hiſtory of England, and ſome others which are kept up in Libraries, out of which there's no great likelihood of their quickly being ſet free.

Walter Mapes. WALTER MAPES an Engliſhman, diſtinguiſhed himſelf by his Wit under Henry II. John, and Richard Kings of England. Though he was Canon of Salisbury, Chanter of Lincoln, and afterwards Archdeacon of Oxford; yet he could not forbear making Satyrical Verſes upon the Popes, Cardinals, and other Eccleſiaſticks, wherein he very freely cenſures their Irregularities. You may ſee theſe Poetical Pieces themſelves in the firſt Tome of the memorable Leſſons of Voltius, and a Catalogue of them here; The Revelation of Prieſt Golias: Four Pieces againſt diſorderly Eccleſiaſticks: and one againſt the Irregularities of the Court of Rome.

Wilbrandus. WILBRANDUS of Oldenburg, Canon of Hildeſheim, in the year 1211, made a Voyage into the Holy Land, whereof he has given us a Relation, a part of which was publiſhed by Allatius in his Collection of Pieces, printed at Cologn in 1653. Allatius commends this Author for a learned and curious Man; his Stile is cloſe and Hiſtorical, but he dos not make uſe of many barbarous words.

ROBERT a Regular Canon of the Order of Premontre in the Monaſtry of St. Marianus of Auxerre, compoſed a Chronology from the beginning of the World to the year 1212, the time of his Death. It was publiſhed by Nicholaus Camuzarus Canon of Tours, and printed at Troies in 1608, with a Continuation of it by HUGH Canon Regular of the ſame Monaſtry. Robert and Hugh.

LAMBERT of Leige a Benedictine Monk of St. Laurence of Dnitz, is thought moſt probably to have flouriſhed at the beginning of this Age. He wrote the Life of Herbert Archbiſhop of Cologn; ſome Hymns, and ſome Epigrams. Lambert.

About the ſame time the Life of St. William Abbot of Roſchild, who died in 1202, was wrote by an Anonymous Author. A nameleſs Author.

PETER a Monk of the Valleys of Cernay, of the Order of Citeaux in the Dioceſs of Paris, accompanied his Abbot Guy, afterwards Biſhop of Carcaſſonne, in his Voyage to Languedock to encounter the Albigenſes, he being one of the 12 Abbots appointed by Innocent III. for this purpoſe. Peter by the Order of Innocent III. has wrote a Hiſtory of the Albigenſes, printed at Troies in 1615, and in the Library of Citeaux, publiſhed by Father Tiſſier. We ſhall have occaſion to talk of him when we come to the Hiſtory of the Albigenſes. Peter.

About the ſame time WILLIAM of Puilaurent wrote a Chronicle of the Hereſy of the Albigenſes, printed at Thoulouſe in 1623, and among Ducheſne's French Hiſtorians. William.

JOHN of Oxford, Dean of Salisbury, flouriſhed about the beginning of this Century, and wrote a Hiſtory of England, and a Relation of his Voyage into Sicily. John of Oxford.

About the ſame time with him lived JOHN Abbot of Fordeham, Confeſſor to John King of England. He wrote the Life of St. Wolfrick, the Actions of King John, and a Chronicle of Scotland. John of Fordeham.

About the year 1214, JOCELINE BRAKELONDE an Engliſh Monk of the Monaſtry of York, compoſed a Chronicle of his Monaſtry; a Treatiſe of the Election of Hugh, and the Life of St. Robert, Martyr. Joceline of Brakelonde.

JOHN GRAY Biſhop of Norwich much about the ſame time wrote a Chronicle, as did Adam of Barking. John Gray.

HUGH WHITE a Benedictine Monk of Peterborough, has wrote a Hiſtory of his own Monaſtry, and of the Foundation of the Church of Mercy. Hugh White.

PREPOSITIVUS a famous Divine of Paris, flouriſhed about the year 1225. He compoſed a Sum of Scholaſtical Divinity, which has not yet been printed, but is very common in Manuſcript in Libraries. St. Thomas ſometimes quotes it in his Sum. Prepoſitivus.

CESAIRE Monk of the Order of Citeaux in the Monaſtry of Heiſterback, into which he was entred in 1199, and was afterwards made Priot of that of Villiers in Brabant, compoſed a great Work in 12 Books, Dialogue-wiſe, in imitation of St. Gregory; containing an account of the Miracles and Viſions that happened in his time, particularly in Germany. He aſſures us in the Preface that none of it is his own Invention, but all that he wrote he had from others but yet he is not to be excus'd for his too eaſily crediting thoſe who did not deſerve it, and upon their relation heaping together as he has done in this Work a great many idle and forged Stories. He likewiſe compoſed in 1226, three Books of the Life and Paſſion of St. Engelbert Archbiſhop of Cologn: and Homilies upon the Sundays and Holidays of the whole year. Theſe Works have been printed, viz. His Hiſtory of Miracles at Cologn in 1591, and in Father Tiſſier's firſt Tome of the Writers of the Order of Citeaux. The Life of St. Engelbert in the Month November of Surius, and at Cologn in 1633, with the Notes of Gelenius; and the Homilies publiſhed by Andrew Coppenſtein, with the Title of A Collection of Moral Diſcourſes, printed at Cologn in 1615. He alſo was the Author of other Sermons and other Works, whereof there is a Catalogue in a Letter of his which Andrew Coppenſtein has publiſhed at the beginning of the Collection. Ceſaire.

STEPHEN of Langton, tho an Engliſhman, after having gone through the courſe of his Studies at Paris, was choſen Chantellor of that Univerſity, and Canon of Paris, where he for a good while profeſſed Divinity, explaining the Holy Scripture with no ſmall reputation. He was afterwards made Dean of Rheims, and at laſt ſent for to Rome by Innocent III, who made him Cardinal. The Archbiſhoprick of Canterbury falling, he was choſen by ſome of the Canons, and conſecrated by the Pope at Viterbo the 17th of June in 1206; but John King of England would not acknowledg him, as not having been choſen by the beſt and wiſeſt part of the Chapter, nor ſuffer him to enter into poſſeſſion of the Church. Stephen ſtraight has recourſe to Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures, and interdicts the Kingdom of England: The King did not think himſelf obliged to ſubmit to the Interdict; but at laſt the poor condition of his Affairs having forced him to yield to the Pope, he was likewiſe obliged to acknowledg Stephen for Archbiſhop. This Prelate was not long faithful to him, but took part with Lewis Son of Philip King of France, and remain'd his Friend till the Death of John, after which he found a way to get himſelf for a Sum of Mony diſcharged from the crime of Rebellion. He died the 9th of July in 1228, in his Houſe in the plane of Slindon in the County of Suſſex. Stephen of Langton.

There are in the Libraries of England and other places, a great number of Manuſcript Commentaries of this Author upon the Holy Scripture, but there are not any of them printed: We have only his Hiſtory of the Tranſlation of the Body of St. Thomas at the end of that Archbiſhop's Letters, printed at Bruſſels in 1682. The latter which he wrote to King John, and that Prince's Anſwer, in the third Tome of Father Dachery's Spicilegium; and eighty eight Orders made in the Council which he held at Oxford in 1222, of which we ſhall have occaſion to ſpeak.

Alexander Neckham. ALEXANDER NECKHAM, an Engliſhman, Native of Hertford, after having ſtudied in England, perfected himſelf in the Academys of France and Italy, and returning into his own Country, was made a Regular Canon of St. Auſtin at Exeter, and afterwards Abbot of the Monaſtry in that City in 1215, and died 1227. He is the Author of divers Works which have not yet ſeen the light, lying buried in the obſcurity of ſome Engliſh Libraries; among others, A Commentary upon the four Goſpels: An Expoſition of Eccleſiaſtes: A Commentary upon the Song of Songs: The Praiſes of the Divine Wiſdom: A Treatiſe of the nature of things: The Clearing of a Library, which contains an Explanation of many places of the Holy Scripture.

Helinand. HELINAND a Monk of the Abby of Froimont, of the Order of Citeaux in the Dioceſs of Beauvais, flouriſhed about the beginning of this Century, and died in 1227. He compoſed a Chronological Hiſtory from the beginning of the World, to the year 1204, the four laſt Books of which were publiſhed by Father Triſſier in the 8*th* Tome of his Library of the Writers of the Order of Citeaux, with ſome Sermons, and a Letter to Walter an Apoſtate Monk about the Recovery of a Man fallen into that condition. He has likewiſe written the Martyrdom of St. Gereon, and his Companions related by Surius, in the tenth of October. The Verſes upon Death, publiſhed by Loiſel, are aſcribed to him. In the Library of Longpont there's a Manuſcript Treatiſe of this Author's upon the Apocalypſe, and in other Libraries a Treatiſe in praiſe of a Monaſtical Life, and another of the Government of Princes. Trithemius and others ſpeak well of this Author; but for all that there is more of Labour in his Hiſtory than of Judgment: for 'tis nothing but a Collection from other Authors made without any diſcretion. His other Works are but little worth.

Conrade. About the ſame time flouriſhed CONRADE of Litchtenau Abbot of Urſpurg in the Dioceſs of Augsburg, who compoſed a Chronicle from Belus King of Aſſyria, to the year 1229, taken from divers Authors: It contains many remarkable things about the Hiſtory of Germany in his time, and the foregoing Centuries. He was made Abbot of Urſpurg in 1215, and died in 1240.

St. Francis. St. FRANCIS born in the year 1182 at Aſſiſi, Founder of the Order of Minor Friars, or Minims, died in 1226. He not only by his Example taught us Humility, Patience, Submiſſion and Freedom from the Cares of the World, but likewiſe by his Writings which are the Picture of his Vertues. Here's a Catalogue of thoſe that were publiſhed under the name of this Saint by Father de la Haye, and printed at Paris in 1641, with the Works of St. Antony of Padua: Sixteen Letters, Advice to thoſe of his Order, containing twenty ſeven Chapters: An Exhortation to Humility, Obedience and Patience: A Treatiſe of the Virtues of the Virgin, and of every Soul: A little Piece of true and perfect Joy: An Explanation of the Lord's Prayer: The Praiſe of the Lord God Moſt High, eleven Prayers: His Will: Two Orders for his Religious: A Rule for the Monaſtrys: The Statute of the third Order: Twenty eight Conferences: The Office of the Paſſion: Three Songs upon the Love of God; of Apothegms; of familiar Diſcourſes; of Parables and Examples; of Benedictions; of Oracles and common Sentences: There are likewiſe ſeven Sermons, giving the Reaſons for the eſtabliſhing of this Order of Minor Brothers, and a little Treatiſe of the ten Perfections of a true Religious, and of a real Chriſtian.

St. Antony. St. ANTONY, Sirnamed of Padua, becauſe he died in 1231 in that City, was born at Lisbon in Portugal. After having profeſſed Divinity at Thouloufe, Bologn and Padua, he became St. Francis's Diſciple, and entred into his Order. He applied himſelf particularly to preaching, and was in his Time accounted a very neat Preacher, tho his Sermons ſeem to us now very plain and empty. They have been printed at Paris in 1521, at Venice in 1575, and ſince at Paris again in 1641, by the care of Father de la Hay, who has alſo preſented us with a myſtical Expoſition of this Author upon the Holy Scriptures, and five Books of moral Concordances upon the Bible: And laſtly, Father Pagi has added a Supplement of ſome Sermons upon the Saints and other matters, which he got printed at Avignon in 1684.

Ricerus. RICERUS an Italian of the Marquiſate of Ancona, one of the Companions of St. Francis of Aſſiſi, has wrote a little Treatiſe to teach the means of coming eaſily to the Knowledg of the Truth. It was printed at Louvain in 1554.

Roderick Ximenes. RODERICK XIMENES of Navarre was raiſed in 1208 to the Archbiſhoprick of Toledo. The next year he perſwaded Alphonſus King of Arragon to eſtabliſh the Academy of Palenza, which in 1239 was tranſlated to Salamanca. He went in 1215 to Rome, where he made a fine Diſcourſe in the Council of the Lateran. He died in 1245. He wrote nine Books of the Hiſtory of Spain from the coming of Hercules into that Country, to the year 1243, publiſhed by Father Andrew Scot in the ſecond Part of his Hiſpania Illuſtris; A Hiſtory of the Oſtrogoths from the year 453, to 555. A Hiſtory of the Huns and Vandals to the ſame time: The Hiſtory of the Arabians from 570, to 1150: A Hiſtory of the Romans from Janus to the year 708, which are to be found in the place above-mentioned. Juſtus Lipſius gives him the Character of a good Author for his time. His Tomb is in a Monaſtry of the Order of Citeaux in Arragon, call'd Horta, with this Inſcription: Mater Navarra, Nutrix Caſtella, Schola Pariſius, Sedes Toletum, Hortus Mauſolæum, Requies Cœlum.

Henry. HENRY Earl of Kalwa Abbot of Richenou, wrote about the year 1220 the Life of St. Pirminus firſt Abbot of that Monaſtry, and afterwards Biſhop of Meaux or Metz.

About

About the ſame year CONRADE Prior of Schur in Bavaria, wrote the Hiſtory of his Monaſtry, and the Lives of his Abbots. Conrade.

ECKERARD Dean of St. Gall, wrote about the ſame time the Life of St. Notgerus Begue, which is to be ſeen in the ſixth Tome of the Antiquities of Caniſius. Eckerard.

WILLIAM Monk of St. Dennis in France is put by Trithemius among the Authors that flouriſhed under the Reign of Frederick II. about the year 1220. He aſcribes to him three Books of Hiſtory, and many Letters. William.

RIGORD Phyſician and Hiſtoriographer of Philip Auguſtus King of France, compos'd the Hiſtory of that Prince under the Reign of Lewis VIII. his Son, to whom it is dedicated: It was printed at Francfort in the year 1596, with the Philippid of WILLIAM the Britain, which is likewiſe the Life of Philip Auguſtus in Verſe, and the Hiſtory of St. Lewis and Philip the Hardy, by WILLIAM of Naugis, a Monk of St. Dennis, who flouriſhed about the beginning of the next Century. Rigord and William. William.

FABIAN HUGELIN of the Order of Minor Brothers, wrote about the year 1230, the Life of St. Francis and his Companions, printed at Cologn in 1623. Fabian Hugelin.

CONRADE Abbot of Everback of the Order of Citeaux, wrote a Treatiſe of the Origin of that Order, divided into ſix Books, publiſhed by Father Tiſſier, in the firſt Tome of his Library of the Writers of the Order of Citeaux. It's thought this Author wrote about the year 1230. Conrade.

JOHN GAL Abbot of Fontenelle hath left us the Life of St. Vulfran Archbiſhop of Sens, related by Surius in the 20*th* of March. He flouriſhed about the year 1230. John Gal.

ALBERT Prior of the Monaſtry of Mont des Vignes at Pavia, wrote about the year 1230, the Lives of St. Beatrix, St. Aldegonda, and St. Amandus. Albert.

About the ſame time two Anonymous Authors wrote, one the Life of the bleſſed Joſeph Herman of the Order of Premontre, recorded by Surius in the 7*th* of April; and the other that of St. Anthony of Padua, recorded by the ſame Surius in the 13*th* of June. Two Anonymous Authors.

In the ſecond Tome of Father Luke Dachery's Spicilegium, there are five Letters of MAURICE Archbiſhop of Rouen, the three laſt of which are the Interdict which he pronounced againſt his Dioceſs, becauſe King St. Lewis had ſeized upon the Revenues of his Archbiſhoprick. It is remarkable that he interdicts all the Chappels and Churches which the King had in his Dioceſs, except that where the King and Queen ſhould aſſiſt in Perſon. This Archbiſhop died the next year. Maurice.

WILLIAM Abbot of Andres in the Dioceſs of Terouane, wrote a Chronicle of his Monaſtry from the year 1082, to the year 1234, which may be ſeen in the ninth Tome of Father Luke Dachery's Spicilegium. William.

JOHN ALGRIN of Abbeville, a Pariſian Divine, Chanter of Abbeville, and Dean of Amiens, was made Archbiſhop of Beſanſon in 1225, and nominated Cardinal Biſhop by the Title of St. Sabina in 1227, by Gregory the Ninth, who had been before acquainted with him in the Univerſity of Paris, and had ſent him into Spain to preach the Cruſade, and afterwards to the Emperor Frederick II. to treat of a Peace with him. He died in 1236, and had while he lived the Reputation of a good Preacher, and made Sermons upon the Sundays and Holidays of the year, in which after he has in a few words explained the meaning of the Text, he makes a long Diſcourſe full of ſuch a vaſt quantity of Scripture, that one can ſcarce imagine how he could collect it all or get it by heart. This is what Henry of Gand, and Trithemius ſay of him. They may be met with in Libraries, but no body has thought them worth publiſhing. They have printed nothing but his Notes upon the Song of Songs at Paris in 1521, with the Commentary of St. Thomas of Citeaux upon the ſame. John Algrin.

JORDAN, born at Borterge in Saxony in the Dioceſs of Mentz, entred himſelf into the Order of Preaching Brothers (or Jacobines) in the year 1220, and ſucceeded St. Dominick in the Generalate of his Order in 1222. He compoſed a Hiſtory of the beginning of this Order of Preachers: Some Letters of advice to his Religious; and many Sermons. The firſt of theſe works hath been printed at Rome with the Notes of Maffeus, and Bzovius hath given us the Circular Letter which he wrote upon the Tranſlation of the Body of St. Dominick. You muſt take care not to confound him with another Jordan, of Saxony too, ſirnamed, of Quedelimbourg, a Hermit of St. Auſtin, of whom we ſhall ſpeak hereafter. To the former of theſe is aſcribed likewiſe a Treatiſe intituled, The Crown of the Virgin Mary: But there is no likelihood that that belongs to either of theſe Jordans. Jordan.

WALTER CORNU Son of Simon Cornu, Lord of Ville-Neuve near Montereau-faut-Yonne, Dean of the Church of Paris, and made Archbiſhop of Sens in 1223, was choſen by St. Louis with Bernard Biſhop of Amecy, to go in the year 1239 to receive the Crown of Thorns of our Lord, which he had recovered out of the hands of the Venetians, to whom it had been engaged by Baldwin II. Emperor of Conſtantinople. He hath wrote the Relation of this Hiſtory, printed among Ducheſne's French Hiſtorians. Walter Cornu.

The ſame Hiſtory was likewiſe written by Gerard a Monk of St. Quentin of Liſle, who alſo compoſed the Life and Office of St. Elizabeth of Thuringen. Henry of Gand ſpeaks of this Author. Gerard.

HUGH, a Regular Canon of the Order of Premontre in the Abby of Floreff in the Dioceſs of Namur, wrote about the year 1230, by order of his Abbot, the Life of St. Ivetta, a Widow and Recluſe of Huy, that died in 1227, publiſhed by Bollandus in the 13*th* of January, Hugh.

and thoſe of St. Ida of Nivelle, and of St. Ida of Leurve, two Nuns of a Monaſtry of the Order of Citeaux in Brabant.

Conrade. CONRADE of Marpurg a Religious, a German of the Order of Preaching Friars, wrote about the year 1230, a Hiſtory of the Life and Miracles of St. Elizabeth Princeſs of Thuringen, whoſe Confeſſor he had been, dedicated to Pope Gregory IX. publiſhed by Allatius in his Collection of Pieces, printed at Cologn in 1653.

Philip. PHILIP of Greve, Profeſſor and Chancellor of the Univerſity of Paris, flouriſhed about the year 1230. He compoſed 300 Sermons upon the Pſalms of David, which were printed at Paris in 1523, and at Breſſe in 1600. They were mightily lookt upon in their time, and the Preachers made a common uſe of them to that degree, that there was a Sum made out of them which is in Manuſcript in Monſieur Colbert's Library: In the Libraries of England are likewiſe to be ſeen two Commentaries of this Author, one upon Job, and the other upon the Goſpels.

Thomas. THOMAS de CELANO, of the Order of Minor Friars, compoſed about the year 1235, a Book of the Life and Miracles of St. Francis, approved by Gregory IX.

James. We have already ſpoken in the foregoing Century of JAMES of Vitry, and his Hiſtory of the Eaſt and Weſt: all that we are to obſerve now is, that beſides this Work, and the two Letters there mentioned, he compoſed Sermons upon all the Epiſtles and Goſpels of the year, upon the Feaſts, and upon the different Eſtates of Men, part of which were printed at Antwerp in 1575, and that he likewiſe wrote the Life of St. Mary of Oignies related by Surius in the 23*d* of June.

Luke. LUKE Deacon of the Church of Tuy in Spain, after having travelled into Italy, Greece, and Paleſtine, and gained the Friendſhip of Cardinal Hugolin, afterwards Pope, under the name of Gregory IX. was at laſt made Biſhop of that Church. He compoſed three Books of Controverſies againſt the Albigenſes, printed at Ingolſtadt in 1612, and in the laſt Bibliotheca Patrum; and a Hiſtory of Spain from the beginning of the World to the year 1274 of the Spaniſh Æra, that is according to our account 1236, into which he inſerts the Chronicle of St. Iſidorus, which he continues down to his time, and makes divers Additions to and Alterations in. Laſtly he is the Author of St. Iſidore's Life, related in Bollandus in the 4*th* of April, and in the ſecond Benedictine Age of Father Matillon. He was no more than Deacon when he wrote his Chronicle, which plainly ſhows he was not made Biſhop till after 1236, but how long he remained ſo, or when he died we cannot tell. We ſhall have occaſion to ſpeak of this Author's Works againſt the Albigenſes, when we treat of thoſe Hereticks.

Godfrey. GODFREY Monk of St. Pantaleon of Cologn compoſed an Hiſtorical Chronicle from the year 1162, to the year 1237, which is in the Collection of the German Writers by Freherus.

St. Edmond. EDMOND RICH born at Abington in England, after having gone through his Studies at Oxford, gave himſelf wholly to Divinity and Preaching, and taught Philoſophy with applauſe in the Univerſity of Oxford. He was then made Canon of Salisbury, and laſtly Archbiſhop of Canterbury in 1234, by the recommendation of Gregory IX. When he came to his Dignity he thought it was his Duty vigorouſly to check the Irregularities of the Courtiers, which procured him the hatred of them, and of King Henry the third to that degree, that he was fain to get himſelf to Rome for ſecurity from them. He did not there meet with all the ſatisfaction he could deſire, and ſo returning into his own Country, he went into a voluntary Exile ſome while after, and in 1240 retired to the Monaſtry of Pontigny in France, and two years after into the Houſe of Regular Canons at Soiſy, where he died on the 16*th* of November 1246. He was canonized the next year by Innocent IV. He wrote a Treatiſe of Piety, intituled, The Mirror of the Church, printed in the Bibliotheca Patrum. He treats therein of a ſpiritual Life, and of the Perfection of a Chriſtian; of the Articles of the Creed; of the ſeven Sacraments; of the ſeven mortal Sins; of the ſeven Beatitudes; of the ſeven Gifts of the Holy Spirit; of the four Cardinal Virtues; of the ſeven Works of Mercy; of the ſeven Petitions in the Lord's Prayer; of the Myſteries of our Lord; of the Godhead, and of the Trinity; of the different degrees of Contemplation; of the Love of our Neighbour, and of Humility. He ſpeaks of all theſe things without entring upon any Controverſy, in a very edifying way, and proper to inſtruct ordinary Believers. Linwood has given us twelve Eccleſiaſtical Conſtitutions of this Archbiſhop.

Robert Groſtead. ROBERT GROSTESTE or GROSTEAD, born at Stratbrook in the County of Suffolk, after having ſtudied at Oxford and Paris, was made Archdeacon of Leiceſter, and in the year 1235 ſucceeded Hugh of Velles in his Biſhoprick of Lincoln. He ſtoutly oppoſed the Deſigns of the Court of Rome, and of the Monks about the Juriſdiction of Ordinaries, and had a conſiderable Diſpute with Innocent the Fourth, about a Mandate which that Pope had granted to a young Italian named Frederick of Lavania, his Nephew, who was under age, for the firſt Canon's place that ſhould be vacant in the Church of Lincoln. This Mandate was directed to the Archdeacon of Canterbury, and to Innocent the Pope's Secretary in England, who ſent to Lincoln and gave notice of it to Robert, who by a Letter anſwered them, that he would with all ſubmiſſion and reſpect obey the Orders of the Holy See; but that he would oppoſe whatſoever was contrary to Orders that were truly Apoſtolick, and that no one could account thoſe Apoſtolick Orders, which were contrary to the Doctrine of Jeſus Chriſt and his Apoſtles, as the things contained in the Letter to him manifeſtly were: Firſt, "Becauſe the Clauſe non obſtante "which was in this Letter, and many others of the like nature, was an Inundation of Uncertain-"ty, Boldneſs and Temerity, and an Inlet to Falſhood and Deceit. Secondly, That there was "no

" no greater crime in the World, ſetting aſide that of Lucifer and Antichriſt, nor any thing Robert
" more contrary to the Doctrine of the Goſpel and of the Apoſtles, nothing more diſpleaſing to Groſtead.
" Chriſt Jeſus, more deteſtable and abominable, than deſtroying Souls by robbing them of " the care of their Paſtors; which is done when ſuch People receive the Incomes appointed for
" the ſubſiſtence and maintenance of Paſtors, as are not capable of executing their Offices;
" that it was impoſſible that the Apoſtolick See, which had received all power of Jeſus Chriſt
" for edification and not for deſtruction, ſhould order ſo horrid and pernicious a thing to hu" mane kind, becauſe this would be a manifeſt Abuſe of its Power; that therefore one is ſo far " from being obliged to obey ſuch Commands as theſe, that it is ones duty to oppoſe them, tho
" they were publiſhed by an Angel from Heaven, and that it is really an Act of Obedience not " to receive them; and therefore that the Commiſſaries of the Holy See could do nothing here" in againſt him. In one word he concludes, " That the Power of the Holy See being given " only for edification and not deſtruction, and the things hereby ordered tending manifeſtly to " deſtruction, and not edification, it was impoſſible they ſhould be granted by the Holy See.
This Letter of Robert's related by Matthew Paris, being carried to Rome, put the Pope in ſuch a paſſion that he could not forbear expreſſing himſelf in very hard Terms, if we may believe the above-mentioned Author, who makes him ſpeak thus; " What a doting, old, deaf, impertinent
" Fellow is this, that dares thus raſhly and impudently call my Conduct in queſtion: By St. Peter
" and St. Paul, were it not for the reſpect I have for his Ingenuity, I would ſo utterly confound
" him, that he ſhould become the Talk and Aſtoniſhment, and Example of all the World, and " ſhould be lookt upon as a Prodigy. Is not his Maſter the King of England, who can with the " leaſt ſign of Ours caſt him into priſon, and cover him with Shame and Infamy, Our Vaſſal,
" or rather Our Slave? But the Cardinals (ſays the ſame Author) repreſented to him how un-
" fitting it was to act any thing againſt this Biſhop; that what he ſaid was true, and could " not be refuted; that he was a true Catholick, and a very holy Man; that he had more Piety
" and Religion than the beſt of them; that he was of ſo exemplary a Life, that there was not " a Prelate of greater merit than he; that all the Churches of England and France could bear
" witneſs to this; that the truth of his Letter, which was already no ſecret, might raiſe the " Court of Rome a great many Enemies; that he had the name of a great Philoſopher, a Man
" well read in Greek and Latin, zealous for the Truth, and had profeſſed Divinity, and preach" ed it with no ſmall Reputation; that his Life was blameleſs, and that he was a Perſecutor of
" Simoniacks. Upon theſe accounts they adviſed the Pope to let it paſs, and make as if he had never ſeen the Letter. But another Engliſh Hiſtorian, named Henry of Knighton, ſays, that the Biſhop was excommunicated: But let it be how it will, he remained ſteddy to his opinion, and died in it on the 9*th* of October 1523, giving this Character of it to Maſter John of St. Giles a Dominican, that it was a Hereſy and an Opinion contrary to Holy Scripture, to think that the Cure of Souls might be entruſted with a Child, or that the Vices of the great ones were not openly to be reproved. He compoſed many Diſcourſes, in which with a great deal of Liberty he checks the Vices and Diſorders of the Clergy: and ſome Letters which Mr. Brown has taken care to have printed in the ſecond Volume of Faſciculus Rerum expetendarum, printed at London in 1690. There was likewiſe printed at London in 1652, a Work of this Author's about legal Obſervations. He made a Commentary upon the Works of St. Dionyſius the Areopagite, where-of that which belongs to the Book of myſtical Divinity was printed at Strasburg in 1502. He likewiſe tranſlated into Latin the Teſtament of the twelve Patriarchs, printed at Paris in 1549, and in the Bibliotheca Patrum. In the Libraries of England there are many other Works of this Author to be met with; among the reſt, A Treatiſe about Confeſſion; another upon Marriage; a Work of the Paſtoral Care; Conſtitutions about Penance: A Work of Piety with this Title, The Moral Eye; another with this, The Doctrine of the Heart: A Book of Meditations: A Treatiſe upon the Articles of Faith; Another upon the Precepts of the Decalogue, &c. Letters and Sermons, not to ſpeak of his profane Works, as his Abridgment of the Sphere, printed at Venice in 1508, and his Commentary upon Ariſtotle's Analyticks, printed likewiſe at Venice in 1504, 1537, and 1552. By what we have ſaid of the Life and Writings of this Author, it is plain enough what his Genius and Character was, and that he had great Learning and Knowledg joined with an ardent Piety, and a Zeal for the heat of it, perhaps hardly excuſable.

WILLIAM a Native of Auvergne, choſen Biſhop of Paris in 1228, died in 1240, is one William. of the moſt conſiderable Authors of this Age for true Knowledg and ſolid Parts. He has ſufficiently ſhewed them both in his Works, by keeping cloſe to that which regards Piety, and the Conduct of human Life, without running out upon Queſtions of meer ſpeculation. This is the Scope to which his Principles tend, and the Deſign which he propoſed to himſelf in the greateſt part of his Works.

The firſt of which is a Treatiſe, intituled, Of Faith and Laws, in which after having ſhewn that the Knowledg of true Religion is the moſt excellent of all Knowledg, and the moſt uſeful; he demonſtrates Faith to be the Foundation of all Religion, which conſiſts in the Belief of thoſe things which God hath revealed to us, although they be not evident. Then he diſcovers the Cauſes of Error and Impiety, which are, 1. The ignorance of the true extent of human Knowledg. 2. The diſtance of it from the things which we ought to believe. 3. The ſubtilty of thoſe things. 4. Their height. 5. The folly of Men who would fain by the natural Force of their Parts comprehend that which is incomprehenſible. 6. The want of Proofs. 7. The neglect of begging help and neceſſary aſſiſtance of God. Then he diſtinguiſhes two ſorts of Ar-

William of Paris. ticles of Faith; namely, thoſe which he calls Radical and Primitive, which are the Belief of the Exiſtence of a God, and the Trinity of Perſons; and thoſe which he calls conſequential and derivative, which comprehend all the Articles of Chriſtian Faith which God has revealed to his Church. Then he paſſes on to Laws, and after having ſpoken of the Law of Nature, he with ſome largeneſs treats of the Law and Commandments of God in the Old Teſtament. He refutes by the by the Laws and Religion of Mahomet, and ſets upon the Opinion of thoſe that hold that any one may be ſaved in his own Law and his own Religion; he ſtoutly encounters the different ſorts of Idolatry, and paſſing on to what concerns the Chriſtian Religion, he ſhows the neceſſity of a new Law, and what the Spirit and Worſhip therein required is. This Treatiſe is followed by a long Work upon the Virtues, in which after having ſpoken of natural Virtues, he ſhows that they are not ſufficient for Salvation, and according to the Principles of St. Auſtin, demonſtrates that the real and true Virtues are the Gifts of God, and the Effects of Grace and Charity. He treats in particular of the Virtues and Paſſions, of the Union of Virtues, and of the Increaſes and Decreaſes incident to them.

The ſecond part of his Treatiſe of Virtues is intituled, Of Manners. He there brings in all the Virtues one after another, each of them making a Panegyrick upon them, and deſcribing their Advantages and Effects.

The third part is of Vices and Sins, where he treats largely of Original Sin.

This is followed by a Treatiſe of Temtations, and of the means of reſiſting them; another of Merit, and the Rewards of good Works in this Life; another of the Rewards of the Saints, wherein he treats of their State and Bleſſedneſs; and another of the Immortality of the Soul, which he proves by Philoſophical Arguments. The Proof of this brings him neceſſarily to talk of the Soul of Beaſts, which he will have to be material, becauſe its Original is from, and its Operations depend upon Matter, and becauſe it is deſtroyed with the Body.

All theſe Treatiſes are one Work, and are tied one to another by Tranſitions.

That of Divine Rhetorick or Prayer is a ſeparate Treatiſe, and full of very ſolid Precepts and Maxims about that Duty; the diſpoſition of mind requiſite thereto; the manner in which it ought to be performed, and the wonderful Effects of it.

The Treatiſes of this Author upon the Sacraments are not near ſo ſcholaſtical as thoſe of the other Authors of this time upon the ſame Matters. The greateſt part of what he meddles with have ſome relation either to Morality or Practice, and for the Reſolution of the Queſtions which he handles, he makes uſe of Principles fetch'd from the Holy Scripture, the Fathers, the Uſage of the Church, and Morality.

The next Treatiſe about the Cauſes of the Incarnation of Jeſus Chriſt, the matter neceſſarily requiring it, is more ſcholaſtical.

That is followed by a Treatiſe of Penance, which is wholly moral, and abounds with very uſeful Rules.

The great Work of the Univerſe is a General Treatiſe of univerſal Knowledg, divided into two parts, each of which is again ſubdivided into three others. In the firſt he treats of the Principles of this World, of its Creation, and of created Beings, of its duration, of Eternity, of Judgment, of the happineſs of the Saints, and the pains of the Damned, and of God's Providence in governing the World, which is the Subject of the third part of this firſt Book. His Diſcourſe in the ſecond is of the ſpiritual World; of the Angels, of the Devils, of Souls; of their Natures, Operations, Names, Diviſions, and Apparitions, &c. All theſe Works mentioned, are in the firſt Tome of the laſt Edition, and had been printed before in the Venetian one of 1591.

The ſecond Tome conſiſts of four Treatiſes of this Biſhop's, newly publiſhed by Monſieur Le Feron Canon of Chartres, and Doctor of the Sorbonne, from a Manuſcript of the Church of Chartres.

The firſt is a Treatiſe of the Trinity, and of the Divine Attributes, quoted by him in his Treatiſe of the Univerſe.

The ſecond is a Treatiſe of the Soul, wherein he diſcourſes of its Exiſtence, its Nature, and Qualities, and the difference of a Man's Soul from a Beaſt's: He makes no doubt that this is mortal; and yet he does not ſcruple to call it ſpiritual, though it depend upon Matter both as to its Exiſtence and Operations. He confutes the opinion of thoſe that think the Souls of Beaſts only Accidents, that is, that they conſiſt only in a certain diſpoſition of Particles of Matter. He diſcuſſes many other Queſtions about the Nature and Operations of the Soul. Theſe two Treatiſes are more ſcholaſtical than any other of the Biſhops, and therefore there is reaſon to doubt whether they belong to him or no, eſpecially that of the Soul, where the Stile and Doctrine about the nature of the Soul of Beaſts do not agree with thoſe of the Treatiſe of the Soul in the firſt Volume.

This is not the Caſe of the third Treatiſe which is about Penance, for that is nothing but the latter part of the Treatiſe about Penitence in the former Tome, in which he diſcourſes of Confeſſion and Satisfaction.

The laſt of the four Treatiſes is about the Collation of Benefices. He therein treats of the Call of thoſe that are to enjoy Livings, of the ſincerity wherewith they ought to enter on them, of the Duty of Paſtors, and other Beneficiaries, and of the Plurality of Benefices. He declames againſt the Neglect and Irregularities of the Beneficiaries of his time, againſt ſuch as entred upon the Miniſtry without a Call, who conſidered Livings only as Places, and looked after nothing but the the Revenues of them; and against the Collators, who out of a temporal and carnal Prospect gave them to such as were unfit for them: He shows that their Duty is to make use of the Power which they have of conferring Ecclesiastical Dignities, to the honor and good of the Church, by putting in Persons capable of performing all the Duties of them, such as should be of age to acquit themselves in their Station, whose Life should be blameless, and who designed to live regularly and like Clergymen. He compares a Canonical to a Monastical Life, and shows that the Canons are no less obliged to lead a Life conformable to their Station, than Monks are to observe the Rules of their Order; and that as an Abbey is to be accounted vacant when possessed by a false or secular Monk, so likewise a Canon's place should be accounted vacant when enjoyed by a Man that lives not like a Clergyman; that it was the intention of the Founders that only such should enjoy the Incomes of the Church as were Men of a spotless Life, and those who possessed them and yet lived disorderly, were Usurpers and enjoyed them against Right and Justice. As for Pluralities he says, that only the doubt whether they were lawful or not, should be sufficient to deter People that had any care for their Conscience, from venturing upon more Cures than one, because our Salvation is not to be risqu'd, and because in a doubtful Case one is obliged to take the safest side. He then opposes it with many Arguments, 1. Because those who defend the Affirmative speak for their Interest, whereas those who maintain the Negative, put themselves out of a Capacity of ever after enjoying more Livings than one. 2. Because he who labours not according to the Apostle, is not worthy to eat; therefore he who labours not doubly and triply ought not to eat doubly and triply; that is, to have two or three different Livings which demand two or three different Services. 3. Because it is the Intention of the Founders of Prebends that there should be as many Prebendaries as Titles, for which reason there can be no one allowed to have two Prebends in one Church, and if not in one Church, much more not in two, where the distance of the places renders a Man less capable of satisfying his Duty. 4. Because this Plurality of Benefices in the same Person, took away a great many Members from the Church, and deprived it of a great number of Ministers. 5. Because it is not Charity, but Covetousness and Ambition that made Men desire more Benefices than one. 6. He says that it is as impossible that a Man should have two Benefices, as that the same Member should assist two Bodies at once, or the same Tree be planted in two places. He answers an Objection that came naturally in his way: namely, that seeing there are Livings, the Revenues of which are far more considerable than those of others, it seemed as allowable to have many little ones with a small Revenue, as one great Living which was worth ten or twelve others: He says that this Thought proceeds from a false Opinion that one is in Livings only to look upon the Revenue without regarding the Charge and Offices; for every Living, tho of never so small Revenues, having a particular Office which the Person that enjoys it is obliged to perform, it is irregular to have any more Persons in it than one; that the Livings which are not sufficient to maintain one Man, either do not require a particular Service, or if they do, the Revenue of them is augmented by the addition of some other: That if any one shall alledg that there are some Livings which do not require residence, he is deceived; because all Benefices do by their Establishment and Foundation oblige to Residence, and that the contrary is nothing but an evil Custom introduced by the Wickedness of the Clergy. Lastly he says, that if any one pleads against him the Dispensations of the Pope; he answers, That those are things above him, and that if any one throughly considered them he would find them to signify nothing; that whatever Virtue the Dispensations which the Pope granted certain Persons to enjoy more Livings than one might have, yet he could not dispense with their Covetousness, with their Ambition and Greediness; he could not grant them Indulgences for their Vices, or give leave for such Irregularities, nor was it his intention that the temporal Estate of the Church, appointed for the entertainment of God's Servants, and dedicated to the Lord to be employed in his Service, should ever be perverted to the nourishment and maintenance of wicked Men. 'Twas upon these Reasons that William of Paris founded that Order which he got passed within a while after he was Bishop by the Doctors of the Faculty of Paris, that it should not be allowable to enjoy more than one Living, when that was sufficient for the provision and maintenance of one Person, which it was supposed then to be when the Revenue amounted to 15 Paris Livres. William of Paris.

The Sermons ascribed to William of Paris make another part of the second Volume of his Works: But there's some reason to doubt whether they are really his, or not rather William Perrault's, a Religious of the Order of Preaching Friars of Lions, with whose name they are to be seen in some Manuscripts, and were printed at Paris in 1494, at Lions in 1567, and at Cologn in 1629; tho in many other Manuscripts, and in the Tubingen Edition of 1499, and the Paris one of 1638, they have the name of William Bishop of Paris affixed to them: but it is most likely that they by right belong to the former, 1. Because they are not in the other's Stile, but in a more dry, concise and compact one. 2. Because the Author of them quotes the Fathers, and particularly St. Austin, oftner. 3. Because they are quoted with the name of William of Lions, by William a Dominican of Paris, who lived three hundred years ago, in a Postille upon the Epistles and Gospels of the year, printed at Paris in 1509, and at Strasburg in 1513, and 1521. 4. Because all those that speak of William Perrault ascribe these Sermons to him. 5. Because they are full of Passages and Thoughts out of the Holy Scripture, the Character which Gerson gives of the Works of William Perrault.

The Dialogues of the seven Sacraments, printed at Leipsick in 1512, and at Lions in 1567, under the name of William of Paris, are not certainly his; because the Author himself tells us,

That

William of Paris. That he took part of his Work from St. Thomas and Peter of Tarentaise, which makes me think that it is William the Dominican of Paris's, of whom we spake before.

William of Paris was the Author of many more Books which Trithemius mentions, and particularly of Commentaries upon the Psalms, upon the Proverbs, upon Ecclesiastes, upon the Gospel of St. Matthew, and upon the Song of Songs, of Letters and other Treatises: The Commentaries upon the Song of Songs, and upon the Proverbs may be seen in Manuscript in the Library of the Abbey of Longpont in the Diocese of Soissons, as Oudin tells us, who also would have the Commentary upon St. Matthew, printed in the Edition of St. Anselm's Works at Cologn in 1630, under the name of that Saint, to be William of Paris's, notwithstanding that Father Gerberon ascribes them to one Hervæus a Monk of the City of Dol; and indeed the Author of this Commentary in the 6*th* Chapter quotes a Treatise which he had written of the Virtues and Vices, and William of Paris seems to refer to this Commentary in his Treatise upon the Manners in the 10*th* Chapter: besides, that in the Catalogue of Hervæus's Writings made by the Monks of his Monastry, in the Circular Letter about his Death, there's no mention of this Commentary upon St. Mathew; so that what Father Gerberon says of the Commentaries attributed to St. Anselm, is to be understood only of the Comment upon St. Paul's Epistles.

The Stile of this Author is plain, intelligible, natural, and not near so barbarous as that of the greatest part of the Schoolmen of his time; yet it hath nothing of a fine delicacy in it: He doth not run out upon Metaphysical Notion near so much as the other Divines of his time, and particularly keeps close to what concerns Morality, Discipline, and Piety. He sometimes confutes Aristotle, and makes use of the Principles and Arguments of Plato. He very well understood the Opinions of the profane Philosophers, throughly read and digested the Holy Scripture, but he was but meanly versed in the Fathers. We took notice before that his Works were printed at Venice in 1591, and some years ago there was a new Edition of them printed at Orleans in 1674, which is that that we have here all along followed.

Vincent of Beauvais. VINCENT, Sirnamed of BEAUVAIS, because he lived in that City, was a Burgundian, and a Religious of the order of Preaching Friars. He undertook in the Reign of St. Louis, who was at the expence of it, a sort of Encyclopedia of Science in a great Work, intituled, The Mirror. It is divided into four parts, which are four quite distinct Works: The Doctrinal, which comprehends the Principles of all Sciences, beginning at Grammar and ending at Divinity: The Historical, containing a Universal History from the beginning of the World to the year 1244: The Natural, which treats of natural things, as of Plants, Birds, &c. and The Moral, which treats of the Passions, of Law and Grace, of the Virtues and of the Vices. These Works are nothing but a Collection out of divers Authors, as he acknowledges in his Preface. The last of them is almost word for word the same with the second Second of Thomas Aquinas's Sum, which is very hard to be reconciled with the Chronology of these two Authors; for St. Thomas not dying before 1274, and his Sum being one of his last Pieces, it is not easy to imagine how Vincent of Beauvais, who is supposed to have died in 1256, should have copyed from it. The Criticks divide upon the Resolution of this Difficulty; some say that perhaps Vincent did not die till 1264, and St. Thomas might before that have composed his second Second, which might have been communicated to Vincent: others say that this Book of Morals is not the Work of Vincent; but that this Author not having meddled with them, or what he wrote therein being lost, some body put in these Extracts of St. Thomas to make Vincent's Works compleat. These Opinions are not very probable; for first, almost all Authors that have spoken of Vincent of Beauvais make him die in 1256; and if one should suppose that he lived till 1264, it is pretty hard to imagine how he should copy a Work which was then neither published nor finished. Besides, it cannot be thought that Vincent of Beauvais did not compose a Moral Treatise, because he in his Preface tells us, that this is one of the parts of his Work, and because the old Authors, such as Henry of Gand and Trithemius, make mention of this very one, which begins with the very words that are related by Trithemius for the beginning of Vincent of Beauvais's Work of Morality. But then on the other side, it appears that the Sum of St. Thomas is all in the same Stile, and he quotes the second Second in his other Works; whereas the Work of Vincent of Beauvais is a Rhapsody taken from different Authors, and it is likewise said that he quotes the Sum of St. Thomas in his Natural Treatise. These are the Difficulties that occur, and the Conjectures that are brought on each side, upon which I shall leave the Reader to make what Reflections he shall think fit, not seeing any thing sufficient to determine me on one side or other.

The entire Work of Vincent of Beauvais is a vast Collection that showeth the laborious diligence of the Author more than his Judgment and Palate. His Historical Mirror was printed separately at Nuremberg in 1473, and at Mentz in 1474. The Moral Part at Nuremberg in 1485, and at Venice in 1493. The Doctrinal at Nuremberg in 1486, and all the four Parts at Basil in 1481, at Venice in 1484, and in 1591, and at Douay in 1624, with the Title of, The Library of the World. Trithemius mentions some other Works of Vincent of Beauvais; namely, a Treatise of Grace, or of the Redemption of Jesus Christ: A Discourse in praise of the Virgin, and another in praise of St. John the Evangelist: A Treatise about the Instruction of Kings Sons, and a Consolatory Letter to St. Louis upon the Death of one of his Friends, and some other Letters. These two last pieces were printed at Basil in 1481.

RAIMOND of Pennafort or Rochfort, born in 1175 at Barcelona, ſtudied in the Univerſity of Bologn, and after having taken his Degrees, did there teach the Canon Law. He was afterwards recalled to Barcelona by his Biſhop, and made by him Canon and Provoſt of his Cathedral. He left this Dignity in 1218, to enter into the Order of Preaching Friars, and was in a ſhort time after choſen by John Algrin Cardinal of St. Sabina Legate in Spain, to accompany him in his Embaſſy. Pope Gregory the Ninth being acquainted with his Merit, invited him to Rome, made uſe of him in his Affairs, and made him his Chaplain, his Penitentiary, and his Confeſſor. He refuſed the Archbiſhoprick of Tarragon, but being obliged to return by the advice of his Phyſicians to Barcelona, he was choſen third General of his Order in 1238, and reſigned that Dignity within two years to live a ſimple Monk. He was nevertheleſs induſtrious for the rooting out the Vaudois and Saracens, perſwading James I. King of Arragon to ſet up the Inquiſition in his Realm. He died in 1275, being a hundred years old. He was canonized by Clement VIII. in 1601. 'Tis he that was the Author of that Collection of five Books of Decretals which is in the body of the Law, which he made by the Order and with the Approbation of Pope Gregory the IX. who recommended it to the Doctors and Students of the Univerſity of Bologn in his own name, to ſerve them for a Rule in their Schools, and a Law in their Judgments. He likewiſe made a Sum of Caſes of Conſcience, which was printed at Rome in 1603. It is divided into three parts: In the firſt he treats of Sins committed againſt God: In the ſecond, of thoſe againſt our Neighbour: In the third, of Irregularity, of Hindrances to the taking of Holy Orders, Diſpenſations, Canonical Purgations, Sentences, Penances, and Abſolutions; to which is joined a Treatiſe in reference to Matrimony. The greateſt part of theſe Caſes he decides by the Authority of the Holy Scriptures, the Canons, the Decretals, or the Fathers, and very rarely by their own Evidence. An Example which all that wrote after him upon theſe Matters ought to have followed. Some Authors take notice of a Treatiſe of his about the Viſitation of Dioceſſes and the care of Souls; and another of War and Duelling; and another concerning the means of trading without Injuſtice. But theſe we have none of. Raimond of Rochfort.

GILES of Aſſiſi, a Companion of St Francis, is Author of a little piece, intituled, Words of Gold, printed at Antwerp in 1534, and of many other little Works which are no where but in Manuſcript. He died in 1262. Giles of Aſſiſi.

ALEXANDER, ſirnamed of Hales, from the place where he was born, which is in Glouceſterſhire in England, after having gone through the Courſe of his Studies in his own Country, came to the Univerſity of Paris, where he followed Divinity, and the Canon Law, and gained ſuch a Reputation in them, that he was ſirnamed the Irrefragable Doctor, and the Fountain of Life. In 1222 he entred into the Order of Friars Minims, and made Paris the place of his Reſidence, where he died in 1245, on the 27th of Auguſt. Alexander of Hales.

By the Order of Innocent the IV. he made a Commentary upon the four Books of Sentences, or a very ſubtile Sum of Divinity, which hath been printed at Nuremberg in 1482, at Baſil in 1502, at Venice in 1575, and 1576, and at Cologn in 1622; for we muſt not make two diſtinct Works of his Commentary, and of his Sum, as ſome have done: It is one and the ſame Work, as is plain in the Manuſcript of the Library of St. Victor where it is, with the Text of the Maſter of the Sentences, and this Title, A Sum and Commentary upon the Maſter of the Sentences: So that the Commentary upon the Sentences printed at Lions in the year 1515 with Alexander of Hales's name to it, is not really that Author's. And I doubt too whether the Sum of the Virtues, printed at Paris in 1509, or the Treatiſe intituled, Deſtructorium Vitiorum, which was printed at Nuremberg in 1496, and at Venice in 1582, ought to be aſcribed to him. It is certain that he compoſed a Poſtille upon the whole Bible; but the Commentary upon the Pſalms printed in his name at Venice in 1496, in right belongs to Hugh of St. Charus: and there's reaſon to doubt whether the Commentary upon the Revelations publiſhed under the name of Alexander of Hales, and printed at Paris in 1647, is really his. The Commentary upon Ariſtotle's Phyſicks belongs to Alexander of Alexandria, Doctor of Barcelona, who flouriſhed about 1313. We can give no Judgment of the Commentaries upon the Prophets, upon the four Evangeliſts, and upon all the Epiſtles of St. Paul, which go under this Author's Name, and are to be met with in the Libraries of Milan and Oxford. We have loſt the Commentary which he made upon the Statutes of the Minor Friars, and a Treatiſe of the Harmony of Divine and Human Law, which Trithemius mentions. Laſtly, we have none of the Lives of St. Thomas of Canterbury, or of Richard King of England; nor have we a Treatiſe againſt Mahomet, which ſome Authors ſay he wrote: and indeed we have none of his Works left us, that we can certainly ſay are his, except his Sum, which diſcovers that he had more ſubtilty than skill in the Antiquities of the Church.

JOHN of Rochelle of the Order of Minor Friars, a Companion of Alexander of Hales, if we may believe Trithemius, compoſed a Treatiſe upon the Sentences; a Sum of Virtues and Vices; and a Treatiſe of the Soul. Some Commentaries upon the Holy Scripture, and ſome Sermons are likewiſe aſcribed to him. John of Rochel.

ALBERT the Great (ſo called becauſe of his vaſt Learning) deſcended from the Lords of Bolſtadt, was born at Lavingen in Suabia, according to ſome Authors in 1193, and according to others in 1205. In 1221 he entred himſelf into the Order of Preaching Friars, and having ſignalized himſelf by his profound Knowledg, upon the Death of Jordan General of his Order, he was choſen in 1236 to govern it in quality of Vicar, which he did two years; and by many Votes was nominated General, as was alſo Hugh of St. Charus, but neither of them was choſen: Albert was Albertus Magnus.

Albertus Magnus.

made Provincial of his Order in Germany, and made his abode at Cologn, where he taught Divinity with no small Reputation. Pope Alexander IV. chose him in 1260 for Bishop of Ratisbon; but he was soon weary of a Dignity which he never sought, and within three years resigned his Bishoprick that he might retire into his Monastry at Cologn, where he died November 15. in the year 1280.

There is no Author that hath more Works printed under his name than this, for they make one and twenty Volumes in Folio, published at Lions in 1651. We have nothing to say of what is in the six first, because they are only Logick and Physicks.

The five next are Commentaries upon the Holy Scripture, viz. the seventh, A Commentary upon the Psalms; the eighth, upon Jeremy, Baruc, Daniel, and the twelve Minor Prophets; the ninth, upon the Gospels of St. Matthew and St. Mark; the tenth, upon the Gospel of St. Luke; the eleventh, upon the Gospel of St. John, and the Revelations.

The twelfth Tome contains Sermons for all the year, and for the Saints; Prayers upon the Gospels of all the Sundays in the year; two and thirty Sermons on the Eucharist which are among the Works of St Thomas too; but, 'tis more likely, belong to Albert: and a Discourse upon a Woman of Fortitude.

The thirteenth is Commentaries upon the Books ascribed to St. Dionysius the Areopagite, and an Abridgment of Divinity in seven Books.

The three next Volumes are Commentaries upon the four Books of the Master of the Sentences.

The seventeenth and eighteenth contain a Sum of Divinity.

The nineteenth is a Work, intituled, A Sum of the Creatures: In two Parts, the second of which is of Man.

These that have been mentioned are, no body doubts, the Works of Albert the Great, but the twentieth Volume hath many in it which are doubtful, or forged: The first is not of that number; it is a Discourse in honour of the Virgin, with the Title of Marialis, upon these words of the Gospel, The Angel Gabriel was sent, &c. but the twelve Books of the Praises of the Virgin which follow it are RICHARD's of St. LAURENCE, a Penitentiary of Rome, about the year 1240, if we may credit the Manuscripts. And there's as much reason to doubt whether the Bible of Mary, the Author of which applys to the Virgin whatsoever is contained in the Scripture, which had been printed at Cologn before, belongs to Albert the Great.

Richard of St. Laurence.

The twenty first contains some Works which are not without suspicion: A Treatise of the Sacrifice of the Mass, and the Sacrament of the Eucharist: The Paradise of the Soul; or, A Treatise of Virtues: and the Treatise of cleaving to God. It is not certain that these are really his.

St. BONAVENTURE, surnamed the Seraphick Doctor, was born at Bagnarea in Tuscany, in the year 1221. He entred himself in 1243 into the Order of Minor Friars, and studied in the University of Paris, where he afterwards taught Divinity, and took his Doctors Degree with St. Thomas Aquinas in 1255. The next year he was chosen General of his Order, and reformed its Discipline, and regulated its Habit. 'Tis said that he introduced the Custom of making a Prayer to the Virgin after Compline, and of ringing the Bell to call the Faithful together, and that he was the occasion of the Institution of Confreries, after the example of that which he settled at Rome in 1270. 'Tis reported that it was he who, when the Cardinals could not agree about the Election of a Pope after the Death of Clement IV. proposed to them the choosing of Theobald Archdeacon of Leige, who took the name of Gregory X. This Pope in acknowledgment made him Cardinal Bishop of Albanor in 1274, some while before the second General Council of Lions, at the first Session of which he assisted on the 7*th* of May, but died before it rose, on the 15*th* of July the same year. He was Canonized by Sixtus the 4*th* in 1482.

St. Bonaventure.

See the Judgment that Gerson gives of this Author and his Works in his Treatise about the Books which Monks ought to read: "In my opinion, says he, one of the best Authors that a "Man can read is Enstachius, for so one may translate his name of Bonaventure; he is the Man "of all the Catholick Doctors, not to derogate from the rest, that seems to me the most proper "and safe for the enlightning of the Judgment, and inflaming the Heart. To be convinced of "this one need not read any more than two of his Works; I mean his Breviloquy and his Itinerary, which are written with so much art and brevity, that nothing can be beyond them; and "though they are more difficult and scarce than his other Works, yet all Christians ought to "search and examine them, Mystical Theology being proper for the Faithful. In another place (in his Book of the examination of Doctrines) he says, "That if any one should ask him "which of the Doctors he thought most proper for the instruction of the Faithful; his Answer "should be, without detracting from the rest, St. Bonaventure: because he is solid, safe, pious, "just and devout, and keeps as far as he can from Niceties, not meddling with Logical or Physical Questions, which are alien to the matter in hand, disguised under Theological Expressions, as too many do: and because by clearing the Understanding, he sets off Religion and "Piety in their true Colours; which is the reason, adds he, that the indevout Schoolmen "which, the more is the Pity, make the greater number, cast him by, though there is nothing "more noble, more divine, more conducive to Salvation, and fitter for Divines than the Doctrine "of this Author. Trithemius makes almost the same Judgment of him in these words: "St. Bonaventure wrote many very deep and devout Works: all his Expressions are full of heat, and

"inflame

" inflame the Hearts of those that read him, as well as inlighten their Minds by a holy Light; " for his Works surpass all those of the Doctors of his time in their usefulness, the Spirit of the " Love of God, and of Christian Devotion shining through them: He is deep without Prolixi- " ty, subtile without Nicety, eloquent without Vanity; his words are full of spirit, yet not " bombastick; which is the reason that such as are touched with the Love of God read him with " the more safety, understand him with the greater ease, and remember him with the greater " profit. Many Authors teach Doctrine, and others preach Devotion, but there are very few " to be met with who have joined these two things together in their Writings: But in St. Bona- " venture they are united, for his Devotion instructs in Doctrine, and his Doctrine inspires with " Devotion: So that whoever desires both Knowledg and Devotion cannot do better than apply " himself to the reading of his Works. Much of the same opinion is St. Antoninus, who re- marks, That such as desire Divine Knowledg more than Aristotelical Vanity, find his Works easy to be understood. Indeed the greatest part of St. Bonaventure's Works are mystical and spiri- tual: they make eight Volumes, printed at Rome in 1588. St. Bona- venture.

The first contains Commentaries upon some Books of the Old Testament, viz. A sort of Preface, intituled, Principles of the Holy Scripture: Thirty three Sermons upon the Six days Work, or the Creation of the World: Explications or Postilles upon the Psalms, upon Eccle- siastes, upon the Book of Wisdom, and upon the Lamentations of Jeremy.

The second Volume contains Commentaries upon the Gospels of St. Mathew, St. Luke, and St. John, with Conferences upon the last of them.

The third is Sermons of time and of the Saints.

The fourth and fifth are Commentaries upon the four Books of the Master of the Sentences.

The sixth Tome contains the first and second parts of his Opuscula, the Titles of which are, Of the reducing of Arts to Divinity: The Breviloquy: The Centiloquy: The Quiver: An Explanation of the Terms of Theology: An Abridgment of the Books of the Sentences: Four Books of Sentences in Verse: Of the four Cardinal Virtues: Of the seven Gifts of the Holy Spirit: Of the three Ternaries of Sins: Of the Resurrection from Sin to Grace: The Diet of Salvation: Of the Hierarchy of the Church. Those of the second Part are the Soliloquy: Meditations upon the Life of Jesus Christ: Of the seven Degrees of Contemplation: Of the five Feasts of the Child Jesus: The Office of the Passion: The Elogy of the Cross: The Wood of Life: The Mirror of the Praises of the Virgin: The Crown of the Virgin: The Compassi- on of the Virgin: The Nightingale of the Passion of our Lord, fitted to the seven hours: On the seven Words of our Saviour on the Cross: The Great Psalter of the Virgin: The Little Psalter on the Salutation of the Angel, and the Salve Regina.

The seventh Tome contains the third Part of his Moral Opuscula, which are, Of the order- ing of a Christian Life: Of the Government of the Soul: The Mirror of the Soul: Of the ten Commandments: Of the degrees of Virtues: The Itinerary of the Spirit of God: Of the seven Paths of Eternity: The Spur of Divine Love: The Fire of Love: The Art of loving: The Book of Spiritual Exercises: The Fasciculary: The five and twenty Memorials: The Confessional: Of the manner of confessing: Of Purity of Conscience: Of the Priests Prepa- ration for the Mass: An Explication of the Mass: Of the six Wings of the Cherubims, and the six Wings of the Seraphims.

The eighth Volume contains the Opuscula which concern the Religious, the Catalogue of which I shall set down: A Treatise of the threefold Estate of Religiouses: The Mirror of Discipline for Novices, which some call in question: The twenty steps of Novices: Of Advancement in Religion: Of the Contempt of the World: Of the Reformation of the Spirit: The little Alphabet of a good Monk, which is Thomas a Kempis's: Of the Perfection of a Re- ligious Life: An Explanation of the Rule of the Minor Friars: Questions about this Rule: Why the Minor Friars preach: Of the Poverty of Jesus Christ: That Jesus Christ and his Apo- stles went barefoot: An Apology for Evangelical Poverty: A Treatise against the Reviler of the Order of St. Francis: An Apologetick against the Adversaries of the Order of Minor Friars: A Treatise intituled, De non frequentandis quæstionibus: Conferences to the Brothers of Tholouse which are not St. Bonaventures: A Treatise of the Reform of the Minor Friars, ad- dress'd to the Provincials of the Order. In this Tome there is an Appendix containing, An A- bridgment of Theology; Treatises upon the Essence, Invisibility and Immensity of God, and a Work of Mystical Divinity.

The Life of St. Francis related by Surius in October 4. is likewise ascribed to St. Bonaventure.

St. THOMAS of Aquino, Sirnamed the Angelical Doctor, of the House of the Earls of Aquino, descended from the Kings of Sicily and Arragon, was born in 1224 in the Castle of Aqui- no, which is in the Country of Lavoro in Italy. After having been educated in the Monastry of Monte-Cassino, he was sent to Naples, where he studied Humanity and Philosophy. He entred in 1241 into the Order of Preaching Friars, notwithstanding all his Mother could do, who laid hold on him and kept him close up in a Castle; but nothing could conquer his Resolution, for finding means to escape out of his Confinement, wherein he was kept for two years, he came to Paris in 1244, and from thence went to Cologn to study under Albert the Great. Returning again to Paris, he took the Doctor of Divinity's Cap in 1255. He went back into Italy in 1263, and after having gone through most of the Universities, teaching Scholastical Divinity, he settled at Naples, the Archbishoprick of which City offered him by Clement the IV. he refused. In 1274, Gregory the X. called him to the Council of Lions, and parting from Naples on his Thomas Aquinas.

Thomas Aquinas.

Journy thither, he fell ſick by the way in the Monaſtry of Foſſa-Nova near Terracena, and there died, being fifty years old, on the ſeventh of March the ſame year.

The number of St. Thomas's Works is prodigious. They make ſeventeen Volumes in Folio, and were printed at Venice in 1490, at Nuremberg in 1496, at Rome in 1570, at Venice in 1594, and at Cologn in 1612. The five firſt Tomes are Commentaries upon the Works of Ariſtotle: The ſixth and ſeventh, a Commentary upon the four Books of the Sentences: The eighth, Theological Queſtions; namely, ten Queſtions about the Power of God, ſixteen Queſtions about Evil, one Queſtion about ſpiritual Creatures, another about the Soul; a Queſtion of the Union of the Word; a Queſtion of Virtue in general; a Queſtion of Charity, another of brotherly Correction: A Queſtion of Hope, another of the Cardinal Virtues, and nine and twenty of Truth, and twelve Quodlibetick Queſtions. The ninth contains the Sum of the Catholick Faith againſt the Gentiles, divided into four Books: The tenth, eleventh, and twelfth, are a Sum of Divinity, with the Commentaries of Cardinal Cajetan: The thirteenth is compoſed of many Commentaries upon the Old Teſtament: namely, A Commentary upon the Book of Job: A literal and myſtical Explanation of the five firſt Pſalms: An Expoſition upon the Song of Songs, which they ſay he dictated upon his death-bed to the Monks of Foſſa-Nova: Commentaries upon the Prophecies of Iſaiah and Jeremiah, and on the Lamentations, which the beſt Criticks think rather belongs to the Engliſh Thomas than this. The fourteenth Volume contains Commentaries upon the Goſpels of St. Matthew and St. John, but that upon St. Matthew was made by Peter Scaliger, Dominican of Verona. That upon St. John was put into Method by Renaldus a Companion of St. Thomas, from an Explanation which he heard of it from the Mouth of St. Thomas. The fifteenth is a Chain upon the four Goſpels taken from the Fathers, and preſented to Pope Urban IV. The ſixteenth contains a Commentary upon the Epiſtles of St. Paul, and Sermons. The ſeventeenth Volume contains divers little Pieces of Divinity; namely, A Treatiſe againſt the Errors of the Greeks, to Pope Urban IV. An Abridgment of Divinity, to Renaldus a Monk of his Order, which ſome with a great deal of probability aſcribe to Ulric of Strasburg: An Explanation of ſome Articles againſt the Greeks, Armenians, and Saracens, addreſſed to the Chanter of Antioch: A Treatiſe of the two Precepts of Charity, and of the ten Commandments of the Law: An Explication of the Lord's Prayer: An Explication of the Salutation of the Angel: An Anſwer about the hundred and eight Articles taken out of the Works of Peter of Tarentaiſe, to John of Verceil, General of the Order of Preaching Friars, which is commonly thought to be none of St. Thomas's: Another Anſwer addreſſed to the ſame Perſon, about the forty two Articles: An Anſwer about ſix and thirty Articles, to the Reader of Venice: Another Anſwer about ſix Articles, to the Reader of Beſanſon: A Treatiſe about the difference between the Divine Word, and the Human Word: A Treatiſe about the Nature and Origin of the Word of the Underſtanding: A Treatiſe about ſeparate Subſtances, or of the Nature of Angels: A Treatiſe of the Unity of the Underſtanding, againſt the Averroiſts, who hold that all Men have but one Underſtanding: A Work againſt ſuch as diſſuade Men from entring themſelves into a Religious Order: A Treatiſe of the Perfection of a ſpiritual Life: A Treatiſe, intituled, Againſt thoſe that oppoſe the Worſhip of God and Religion, wherein he defends the Orders of Mendicants againſt the Books of William of Holy Love: Four Books of the Government of Princes, which cannot be St. Thomas's, becauſe they talk of Adolphus ſucceeding Rodolphus in the Empire, and Albert, Adolphus, which was not till many years after the Death of St. Thomas; beſides, that the Stile is different from that of St. Thomas's Works: A Treatiſe of the Government of the Jews: A Treatiſe of the Form of Abſolution: An Explanation of the firſt Decretal: Another Explanation of the ſecond: A Treatiſe of Spells: Another of Judicial Aſtrology: A Treatiſe of the Eternity of the World: A Treatiſe of Deſtiny: Thirty ſeven other Treatiſes of Logical and Phyſical Matters, which it is not worth while to make a Catalogue of here: Seven Books of the Education of Princes, which are only in the Roman Edition: The Office for the Feaſt of the Holy Sacrament, compoſed by Order of Pope Urban the Fourth, the Inſtitutor of that Solemnity. There is reaſon to doubt whether St. Thomas was wholly the Author of this, or whether he made uſe therein of an Office for that Feaſt, which had been before compoſed by John a Clerk of Leige: which is proved by the Teſtimony of the Author of the Life of St. Juliana the Virgin, who aſſures us that this John did make ſuch an Office, which conſiſted of Hymns, Anthems, Reſponſes, Leſſons, Chapters, and Collects; and by the antient Books of the Church of St. Martin of Leige, among which is found a piece of this Office of the Holy Sacrament which is aſcribed to St. Thomas. Father Alexander the Dominican on the other ſide maintains that it is St. Thomas's, and proves it by the Authority of William of Toco an Author contemporary with St. Thomas, who puts it in the Catalogue of his Works, and Ptolomy of Lucques, Biſhop of Toricelli, a Scholar of St. Thomas's, and St. Antoninus; but I believe it is pretty eaſy to reconcile theſe two Opinions, by ſaying that St. Thomas made uſe of the Office compoſed by John Clerk of Leige, and inſerted part of it in that which goes under his name; for it is true that ſome of that Office is his own, and he reduced it into the Form it now is in; which is the reaſon that in the Hiſtory of the Tranſlation of the Body of St. Thomas, it is only ſaid that it was he that digeſted, ordinavit, the Office of the Holy Sacrament: A Treatiſe of the Holy Sacrament of the Altar in two and thirty Chapters, which Trithemius makes Albert the Great Author of, and which is to be found among his Works divided into many Sermons: Another Treatiſe of the Sacrament of the Euchariſt, which is not St. Thomas's, at leaſt not beyond exception, any more than all the following Treatiſes: Of the Humanity of Jeſus Chriſt:

* Of

Of the Love of Jesus Christ, and one's Neighbour: Of Divine Manners: Of Blessedness: Of the manner of Confessing: Of purity of Conscience: Of the Office of a Priest: Of the Mass: of buying and selling for a time, attributed by some to James of Viterbo: A Letter concerning the manner of acquiring Divine and Human Knowledg: A Treatise of the Vices and Virtues: Of Concordance: Of Usury, not to speak of the two Commentaries upon the Books of Boetius; the one upon his Treatise of Weeks, the other upon that concerning the Trinity, which is thought to be St. Thomas's. There is likewise at the end of this Volume a Commentary upon the four Books of Sentences, which some call in question. Thomas Aquinas.

Under St. Thomas's name some other Commentaries upon the Holy Scripture have been printed by themselves, viz. upon Genesis, upon the Prophecy of Daniel, upon the Books of the Maccabees, upon the Canonical Epistles, and upon the Revelation; but these are not his, the greatest part of them belonging to the English Thomas. Lastly, there is a Commentary of St. Thomas upon the Books of Boetius of the Consolation of Philosophy, printed at Lovain in 1487, and at Lions in 1514, which we may very well allow to be his.

There have been some Difficulties raised in our Age about St. Thomas's Sum, which have made it doubted whether it be really his. We have already spoken to one of them, which arose from the second Part of the Second of that Work, being found in Vincent of Beauvais. Monsieur De Launoy has proposed another from the silence of Pope Clement the VI. who doth not mention this Work in that exact Catalogue of St. Thomas's Works, which he makes in the Panegyrick upon that Saint, spoken some time after his Canonization. But Father Alexander has vindicated this Work by the Testimony of contemporary Authors, or such as lived not long after him, as William of Toco one of those that solicited his Canonization, who made a Catalogue of St. Thomas's Works, at the head of which stands this Sum. William de la Mare of the Order of Minor Friars, who about the end of the Thirteenth Century wrote against the Doctrine of St. Thomas in a Book, intituled, Correctorium Operum Fratris Thomæ, and takes most of the Points which he opposeth out of his Sum of Theology, as out of his principal Work: Giles a Roman, the Scholar of St. Thomas, who defended him against William de la Mare: John the German, and Nicholas Trivet, who about the beginning of the next Century made a Catalogue of St. Thomas's Works: St. Antoninus and many others, not to mention Demetrius Cydonius, who translated this Sum into Greek, with not a few Praises of the Author of it; so that the silence of Clement VI. will scarce do any thing against the Testimony of so many Authors, and those so antient, and so much more antient too than that Pope. St. Thomas did not finish his Sum, but the end of the last part was added by Peter of Auvergne, a Scholar of his, about 1280, who took the greatest part of this Supplement out of the other Works of St. Thomas, and particularly out of his Commentary upon the Master of the Sentences. This Author likewise wrote many Commentaries upon the Books of Aristotle which we shall not here speak of, but shall conclude this Article of St. Thomas with a General Scheme of his Sum.

In the first Part, after having in the first Question spoken of the sacred Doctrine in general, he treats of God; of his Essence; of his Attributes and Operations; of Blessedness; of the three Divine Persons; of their Processions and Relations: And lastly, he considers God in relation to the Creatures as their Creator and Preserver.

In the first Part of the second Part he treats of the Motions of a reasonable Creature towards God, of its ultimate end, and of the Actions conducing thereto; of their Principle; of Virtues and Vices in general; of Laws, and of Grace.

In the second Part of the Second, he in particular treats of the Theologal and Moral Virtues, and of whatsoever may have any relation to them.

In the third part he treats of the means of coming to God, viz. the Incarnation of Jesus Christ and the Sacraments, and they make the Subject of this Part, which ends in Questions about the four ends of Man.

HUGH the Cardinal was of Barcelonette in Dauphine, and not of Barcelona in Spain, as some Authors have made him. He was surnamed of St. CHARUS or St. THEODORICK, and entred into the Order of Preaching Friars. He studied in the University of Paris, and there took the Degree of Doctor in Divinity; Authors do not agree whether before or after his professing it. He was sent by Pope Gregory IX. to Constantinople, to labour for the reuniting the two Churches, and created Cardinal by the Title of St. Sabina in 1243, by Innocent the IV. and afterwards employed in many Legations. He died the 19th of March 1260. They say he expressed about the latter end of his Life, no small Grief for his having been raised to the Cardinal Dignity, confessing that he had rather have lived a simple Religious in his own Order, than have had the weight of a Cardinal's Hat on his head. He compoled Postilles; that is to say, short Notes or Glosses upon the whole Scripture, wherein he explains the Text according to the four Senses that it might bear. He wrote a larger Commentary upon the Psalms, which some ascribe to Alexander of Hales, but St. Antoninus assures us it is Cardinal Hugh's. Under his name there are some Sermons printed too, and a Work with this Title, The Priest's Mirror: But the most useful thing that ever he did, and which will eternize his Memory, is the Concordance of the Bible, of which he was the Inventor, and which he made many Monks of his Order labour at; who made a Concordance of all the Names and all the Verbs in the Bible. CONRADE of Halberstadt added the indeclinable Particles to it, and a while after it was perfected. The Postilles of Hugh upon the Bible were printed in 1504 at Basil, in 1548 at Paris, and in 1600 at Venice; His Sermons were printed in 1479 at Zuvol, and the Priest's Mirror Hugh of St. Charus. Conrade of Halberstadt.

Mirror at Lions in 1554. Conrade of Halberſtadt was likewiſe the Author of ſome other little Works, of Sermons and Commentaries upon the Bible, which Trithemius mentions.

William Perrault. WILLIAM PERRAULT a ſimple Monk of the Order of Preaching Friars in the Monaſtry of Lions, and not Archbiſhop of that City as ſome have made him, had the Reputation of a good Preacher, and a good Divine. He made a Sum of the Virtues and Vices, which was in good eſteem that Age and the next, and is quoted with an Encomium by Gerſon, who ſays, That this Author did not heap together ſtuff out of his own head, but took what he wrote from the bottom of the Holy Scriptures; and that if one ſhould go to compare the new Fancies of ſome with this Doctrine, he would ſoon ſee that they had neither ſolidity nor truth on their ſide. This Sum has been printed a great many times, and among others at Venice in 1492, and 1497, and Baſil in 1497, at Lions in 1551, and at Paris in 1629. He likewiſe was the Author of many Sermons, and 'tis not without reaſon thought that thoſe which go under the name of William of Paris belong to this Author. Trithemius mentions a Work of his for the Inſtruction of Religious. This Author was contemporary with William of Paris, and St. Thomas of Aquino, and died as 'tis thought in the year 1275.

Thomas of Chantprè. THOMAS of Chantprè born at Leuwe or Loo near Bruſſels, was at firſt a Regular Canon in the Monaſtry of Chantprè near Cambray, whence he removed into the Order of Preaching Friars; and after having ſtudied at Cologn under Albert the Great, about the year 1255 he was made Subprior and Reader of the Dominicans of Louvain, and laſtly conſecrated Biſhop, to ſerve as a Suffragan and Aſſiſtant to the Biſhop of Cambray. The year of his Death is not certainly known; Juſtus Lipſius places it on the 15*th* of May 1263. Others ſome years after.

The principal Work of this Author is a Book, intituled, The Univerſal Good, or, The Bees; becauſe he therein makes uſe of the Figure of Bees to give us Precepts about the Carriage and Duty as well of Superiours as Inferiours. This Work was printed at Douay in 1597, 1607, and 1627. The laſt of theſe Editions publiſhed by George Colvenerius a Dominican, Doctor and Chancellor of the Univerſity of Douay, is the perfecteſt. In this Work Thomas makes mention of another Work of his about the nature of things, in compoſing which he ſpent fifteen years. He likewiſe wrote the Lives of St. Chriſtina, of St. Lutgarda, and of St. Mary of Oignies, related by Surius in the 16*th* and 23*d* of the Month June, and that of St. Margarita of Ypres, printed by it ſelf at Douay in 1618. 'Tis ſaid that he underſtood the Greek, and that he made a Latin Verſion of the Works of Ariſtotle at the deſire of St. Thomas of Aquino, who made uſe of it for his Commentaries upon that Philoſophy; but others will have the Verſion which St. Thomas uſed to be more antient. Be it how it will 'tis a very vitious Tranſlation, and ſome believe it was not made from the Greek of Ariſtotle, but from a Greek Tranſlation, from an Arabick Tranſlation of him.

Roger Bacon. ROGER BACON of an illuſtrious Family, born about the year 1206, at Ilcheſter in the County of Somerſet in England, was ſirnamed, The Admirable Doctor, for his extenſive Knowledg and penetrating Wit: But tho he was a Religious of the Order of Minor Friars, yet he applied himſelf more to the ſtudy of the Mathematicks, Phyſicks, and Chymiſtry, than of Divinity, and had entred ſo far into the Secrets of them that he was more than once accuſed for a Conjurer, and thereupon referred to his General, who condemned him in 1278. He was likewiſe next year put in priſon by order of Pope Nicholas IV. He is the Author of a great many Works of which ſome are in print, and the reſt in Manuſcript; but as they are all Phyſical or Mathematical, except one Abridgment of Divinity not printed, 'twill be of no uſe to make a Catalogue of them here. He died in 1284.

Peter de Vignes. PETER de VIGNES a German, Secretary of State, and Chancellor to Frederick II. defended bravely the Rights of the Empire, and the Cauſe of his Prince againſt the Aſſaults of the Popes; he was deputed by his Maſter to the Council of Lions in 1245, and there did his utmoſt to hinder his Condemnation; but his Services were but ſcurvily rewarded, for being accuſed the next year of unfaithfulneſs, Frederick put out his Eyes, and kept him in priſon at Capua, where he died in 1249. We have ſix Books of Letters written by him to divers Perſons about the Buſineſs of the Empire, printed at Baſil in 1566, and at Augsburg in 1609, and a Diſcourſe containing the Complaints of the Emperor Frederick for his Depoſition againſt the Pope and Cardinals, compoſed in 1230, and printed at Haguenau in 1539.

Humbert. HUMBERT, Sirnamed of Romans, from the place of his Birth, a Town of Dauphine, took his Degrees in the Univerſity of Paris, and made profeſſion in 1225 in the Convent of Jacobines of that place, where he taught Divinity. He was in 1254 choſen fifth General of his Order; voluntarily reſigned that Charge in 1263, and retired to Lions, where he died a ſimple Monk in 1277. He is Author of the following Works: The Mirror for Religious, or ſix Books of ſpiritual Inſtructions for a religious Life, printed at Louvain in 1575, and at Paris in 1622. A Letter about the three Vows of Religion, and the Virtues that ought to accompany them, printed with Sermons at Haguenau in 1508, and at Venice in 1603. A Commentary upon the Rule of St. Auguſtin, printed at Coſma in 1605, and at Mons in 1645. Two hundred Sermons printed as we ſaid before at Haguenau and Venice: Two Books for the inſtruction of Preachers, which Trithemius calls the Preachers Sum, printed at Vicenza in 1604, and at Barcelona in 1607. Some attribute to him the Hiſtory of the Riſe and illuſtrious Men of the Order of the Preaching Friars, intituled, The Lives of the Brothers: But this Work belongs to GERARD de FRACHET a Native of Limoges, a ſimple Monk, who compoſed it by the Order of Humbert his General.

Gerard de Frachet.

General. This Work was printed at Douay in 1519: Gerard de Fracher likewiſe compoſed a Chronicle from the beginning of the World, to the Coronation of Charles King of Sicily; that is, to the year 1266, which may be ſeen in Manuſcript in many Libraries. He died the 4th of October 1271.

BARTHOLOMEW of Breſſe Profeſſor and Interpreter of the Canon Law, who flouriſhed about the year 1240, compoſed divers Treatiſes of the Law: namely, A Repertory of the Decree divided into three Books, five Books upon the Decretals, divers Letters, and a Chronicle of the Cities of Italy. We have none of theſe Works. He died in the year 1258, being 84 years old. Bartholomew of Breſſe.

GODFREY the Bald Archbiſhop of Bourges is Author of the Life of St. William Biſhop of St. Brieux, related by Surius in the 29th of July. He flouriſhed about the year 1240. Godfrey the Bald.

WILLIAM a Monk of St. Martin of Tournay, made about the year 1246 a Collection of Sentences, or Flowers taken out of the Works of St. Bernard, printed at Paris without a name in 1499, and at Lions in 1556. This we find in Manuſcript with the name of this Monk to it, in the Library of Citeaux. William of St. Martin.

GILES a Monk of Orval of the Order of Citeaux in the Dutchy of Luxemburg, compoſed about the year 1246, a Hiſtory of the Biſhops of Leige, publiſhed by Chapeaville, and printed at Leige in his Collection in the year 1613. Giles of Orval.

BERNARD Prieſt and Sacriſt of the Church of Compoſtella was in favour with Pope Innocent VI. who made him his Chaplain. He compoſed a Commentary upon the firſt Books of the Decretals, printed at Paris in 1516, and a Treatiſe of notable things, and Caſes upon the five Books of Decretals, printed at Nuremberg in 1493, and at Strasburg in 1498; not to ſpeak of his Collections of the Popes Bulls, and of the Chronicle of the antient Kings of Spain, which is in the fourth Volume of Hiſpania Illuſtris. Bernard of Compoſtella.

CONRADE Biſhop Coadjutor, or Vicar of the Archbiſhop of Mentz, compoſed a Chronicle of the Hiſtory of Mentz from the year 1140, to the year 1250, printed at Baſil in 1535, 1569, and among Urſtitius's Hiſtorians of Germany. He likewiſe made a Chronicle of the former times, printed at Francfort in 1584. Conrade.

ALBERT a Monk of Stade in the Archbiſhoprick of Bremen was choſen Abbot of that Monaſtry in 1232; but deſiring to put in execution a Bull which he had obtained of Pope Gregory IX. for the Reform of it to the Order of Citeaux, and the Monks refuſing to comply with him therein, he removed into the Order of Minor Friars in the year 1240, of which he was afterwards General. He made a Chronicle from the beginning of the World to the year 1256, taken from the beſt Authors, whoſe Words he relates, and clears from a great deal of falſe Hiſtory, which the Authors of that Age uſed carefully to collect. This Work was publiſhed in 1587, by Reinerius Reineccius, and printed at Helmſtadt, and ſince reprinted at Wittemberg in 1608. Albert.

DAVID of Augsburg of the Order of Minor Friars, flouriſhed about the year 1250. He is the Author of three little Pieces of Piety; the firſt intituled, The Novice's Formula for the Reformation of the outward Man; the ſecond, A Formula for the inward Man; and the third, A Mirror of the ſeven ſteps of Religious: The two firſt were printed by themſelves at Augsburg in 1593, and the laſt under the name of St. Bonaventure at Antwerp in 1591. They are all three, with the name of David of Augsburg to them, in the Library of the Fathers, of Cologn, and in the laſt. Trithemius aſſures us that this Author made many Sermons, which have not yet ſeen the light. David of Augsburg.

ALBERICK VERUS or VERE of the Family of the Earls of Oxford and Clare, a Regular Canon of St. Auſtin, flouriſhed about the year 1250. He compoſed a Treatiſe of the Euchariſt, the Life of St. Oſithus, and the Antiquities of his Monaſtry, which bore the name of this Saint. The Life is in Surius in the 7th of October. Alberick Verus.

WALTER of the Order of Minor Friars and Biſhop of Poictiers, flouriſhed about the year 1250. He compoſed a Sum of Theology upon the Books of the Maſter of the Sentences, quoted by St. Thomas in his Sum of Quodlibetick Queſtions, and Sermons for the whole year, written by order of Pope Alexander IV. Walter.

ROGER wrote a Hiſtory about the year 1250 of the piteous Eſtate of the Kingdom of Hungary ruined by the Tartars, which is at the end of the Chronicles of Hungary. Roger.

CONSTANTINE of Orvieto flouriſhed about 1250. There's no other Work aſcribed to him but the Life of St. Dominick. Conſtantine.

ENGELBERT Abbot of the Order of Citeaux who flouriſhed about the ſame time, wrote the Life of St. Edwiga related by Surius in the 15th of October. Engelbert.

ROBERT RICH of Abington, Monk of Pontigny, and ROBERT BACON an Oxonian Doctor, wrote the Life and Hiſtory of the Tranſlation of St. Edmond Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who died in 1240. Their Work was written ten or twelve years after: It is in Surius in the 16th of November. Robert Rich, and Robert Bacon.

JOHN de DIEU a Spaniard, Doctor in the Canon Law in the Univerſity of Bologn, and Canon of that City, flouriſhed about the middle of this Century, and compoſed many Treatiſes of the Canon Law, and a Penitential addreſſed to the Biſhop and Chapter of Bologn. None of theſe Works have been yet printed. The late Monſieur Le Feron Canon of Chartres, and Doctor of the Faculty of Paris, whoſe Learning and Piety are well known to the Learned World, had a Manuſcript of it, from which Monſieur Petit the Publiſher of the Penitential of Theodore took thoſe Extracts which he hath put at the end of it. 'Tis likewiſe in Manuſcript in the Cambridg Library. The other Works that Trithemius mentions of this Author are, His Sum of John de Dieu.

litigious Cauſes: The Judges Sum: The Tables of the Decree, and the Decretals: The Agreement of theſe two Works, and divers Canonical Queſtions. They ſay that ſome of theſe Works may be met with in Libraries.

John Colonna. JOHN COLONNA a Roman of the Order of Preaching Friars, was made Archbiſhop of Meſſina in 1255 by Pope Alexander the IV. who the ſame year appointed him to be his Legate and Governor of Taormina. He compoſed a large Hiſtorical Collection in ſix Books, intituled, The Sea of Hiſtories, which Trithemius, St. Antoninus, and many others mention.

A nameleſs Author. An Anonymous Author of the Life of St. Clare, related by Surius in the 12th of Auguſt, compoſed this Life by order of Pope Alexander IV. about the year 1255.

Ranier Sachon. RAINIER SACHON of Placentia, who from a Miniſter of the Waldenſes, became after his Converſion a Religious of the Order of Preaching Friars, and Inquiſitor againſt the Sect he had himſelf been of, flouriſhed about the year 1254, and died about the year 1260. He is Author of a Treatiſe againſt the Waldenſes, and other Hereticks of his time, publiſhed by Gretſer, and printed at Ingolſtadt in 1613. He treats therein of the Origin of theſe new Sects, the Marks by which one may diſtinguiſh thoſe that are of them, their Manners, and how they are to be examined and puniſhed. There is at the end of this Treatiſe an Addition about Hypocrites, whom he calls Stertzers, and whoſe extravagant Errors he relates. Gretſer will not have this Work to be Rainier's.

Matthew Paris. MATTHEW, ſirnamed PARIS, whether from his having been born or having ſtudied in that City, flouriſhed in England from the year 1220, to the year 1260. He took a Religious Habit in the Monaſtry of St. Alban in 1217, and lived ſo regularly, that the Pope made choice of him to make a Reform in the Monaſtry of Holm in Norway. By order of Henry III. King of England, who honoured him with his familiar Friendſhip, he undertook a Hiſtory of England, and that he might make a compleat Body of it, he copied that which had been compoſed by Richard of Wendower Prior of Beauvoir in the Dioceſs of Lincoln, from the time of William the Conqueror to the year 1235, and continued it to the year of his death 1259, though at firſt he deſigned to carry it no farther than 1250. It hath been continued to 1273, by William of Riſhanger. WILLIAM of Riſhanger Monk of St. Alban. Matthew Paris made afterwards a good many Additions or Supplements to his Hiſtory, and an Abridgment of it. He likewiſe wrote the Life of the two Offas Kings of Mercia, Founders of the Monaſtry of St. Alban, and the Lives of the twenty three firſt Abbots of that Monaſtry. The Stile of this Author hath a Tang of the barbarouſneſs of the Age he lived in, but he hath a great deal of good Senſe and Judgment. He ſpeaks very freely of the Powers of his time, relates matters fully and exactly, and confirms what he ſays by Letters and original Acts. The great Hiſtory of Matthew Paris was printed the firſt time at London in 1571, and at Baſil in 1606; and afterwards with a great many Lections, and the Lives of the Offas, and the Abbots of St. Alban, and the Additions of Matthew Paris, and the continuation of Riſhanger, at London in 1640, by the care of William of Wat, who put notes to it, and a Gloſſary of the barbarous words. This Edition was reprinted at Paris in 1644, and at London in 1684. The ſhort Hiſtory was never yet printed, but it is to be ſeen in Manuſcript in ſome Libraries in England, where is likewiſe in his name, An Univerſal Hiſtory from the beginning of the World to the Reign of William the Conqueror, which is very little different from that of Matthew of Weſtminſter.

Henry of Suſa. HENRY of Suſa was made Archbiſhop of Embrun about the year 1258, and Cardinal Biſhop of Oſtia in 1262, whence he got the Sirname of Oſtienſis, the name by which he is commonly known and quoted. He was accounted the ingenioueſt Man of his time for the knowledg of the Canon and Civil Law, and merited the name he had of The Fountain and Glory of the Law. He compoſed a Sum of the Canon and Civil Law, which commonly goes by the name of The Golden Sum, which hath been printed at Baſil in 1537, and 1573, and at Lions in 1588, and 1597. He likewiſe made a Commentary upon the Book of Decretals by order of Pope Alexander the IV. printed at Rome in 1470, and 1473, and at Venice in 1498, and 1581. Theſe Works are in great eſteem with the Canoniſts, and may paſs for Originals, which thoſe that came after did nothing but copy. Authors cannot agree upon the year of his death, ſome place it in 1267, others put it off till 1281; but Meſſieurs De St. Martha by very good Reaſons prove that he died in 1271.

John Semeca. JOHN SEMECA Provoſt of St. Stephen of Halberſtadt flouriſhed from the year 1250 to the year 1267, in which he died. He is Author of the common Gloſs upon the Decree of Gratian, which hath often been printed with its Text.

A nameleſs Author. The Life of the bleſſed Godeberte written by an Anonymous Author about the year 1260, is in Surius in the 11th of April, but in another Stile.

John of Parma. JOHN of Parma born in the Territory of Bologn, of the Order of Minor Friars, after having taught the Maſter of the Sentences at Paris, was choſen General of his Order about the year 1250, and depoſed in 1256, retiring into a Hermitage near Rieti, where he lived thirty years after. He compoſed a Treatiſe upon the Maſter of the Sentences; two Books of the Life of Religious; a Writing with this Title, The Converſation of the bleſſed St. Francis with Dame Poverty, and a Treatiſe of the Benefits of the Creator. otherwise, A Sum of the Government of Life: The Ordinary; &c. The Alphabet of [illegible] gious Life: A fuller Discourse of the Worth and Abuse of Philosophy: Another Discourse of the four Cardinal Virtues of the antient Princes and Philosophers: An Abridgement of the Life of the famous Philosopher, printed at Louvain in 1511: A Sum of Confidences, printed at Paris in 1516, and 1561. The Morals to the Fathers of Ovid, printed at Paris in 1505, are to [illegible] the second Collection of Decretals which we have already mentioned. There are many other Manuscript Works of this Author.

Gilbert of Tournay. GILBERT or GUIBERT de Tornaco of the Order of Minor Friars, flourished in the University of Paris about the year [illegible]. He wrote, at the desire of John, Bishop of Tournay, the Life of St. Eleutherius the first Apostle of their Country, published by Ballerini in the 10th of February. There are in the Library of the Fathers two Treatises of this Author's, one of the Functions of a Bishop, and the Ceremonies of the Church, and the other of the peace and tranquillity of the Soul. He is likewise the Author of many Sermons printed at Paris in 1534. Lastly, Henry of Ganda assures us that this Author made the History of the first Voyage of St. Louis into the Holy Land. He died before the year 1293, for Henry of Ganda who died in that year mentions his Death.

Ralph Bocking. RALPH BOCKING of Canterbury, a Monk of the Order of [illegible], wrote about the year 1270, the Life of St. Richard Bishop of Chichester, the Abridgement of which is in Surius at the 3d of April, and was published by the Bollandists on the same day in the Continuation of some Scriptors.

John Genes. JOHN GENES de la CAILLE of the Order of Minor Friars, wrote a Book of the Life of the City of Jesus Christ, printed at Avignon in 1505, and at Rome in 1523. He flourished about the year 1270.

William of Sandwich. WILLIAM of Sandwich, an Englishman, of the Order of Carmelites, composed about the year 1270, a Chronicle of the antiquity of the Carmelites in Syria and Palestine, of the rise of their Monasteries in that Country, and their removal into Europe. He there [illegible] upon Mount Carmel, and in the Holy Land, and did not return into England till after the [illegible] of Sicily, or Vespers by the Sicilians, which fell out in 1251. The Carmelites have got to put this Author in the Collection of the Historians of their Order, which [illegible] four Volumes in Folio, with the Title of The Mirror of the Carmelites, printed at Antwerp in 1680; and the Bollandists have put him in their Historical Treatise of the Patriarchs of Mount Carmel, which is at the beginning of the 3d Tome of the Month March. He answers, as we believe Wilhelmus, compiled a Commentary upon the Masses of the Sundays throughout the Year, the Rule of his Order, and a Collection of Decretals for the Religious.

William Guarren. Trithemius among the Sacred Divines of the [illegible] ces WILLIAM GUARR, or GUARRE, an Englishman, of the Order of Minor Friars, who says was Scotch by Nation, and very expert in [illegible] the Modern Divines. He wrote a Commentary upon the [illegible]

Thomas Spott, and William Thornus. [illegible] at Canterbury, about the year 1267 wrote the Lives of the Abbots of his Monastery, and were also written some time after by WILLIAM THORNUS, Monk of the same Monastery, who copied his Author [illegible]

Thomas of Lentini. THOMAS of Lentini a Sicilian of the Order of Preaching Friars, after having accomplished a Voyage into the Holy Land, was made Archbishop of Cosenza, and sent again into the East in 1272 by Pope Gregory X. in quality of his Legate, to govern the Patriarchate of Jerusalem. He died there about the year 1277. He wrote the Life of [illegible] which was published by the Bollandists in the 1st Volume of April.

Martin. MARTIN [illegible] Penitentiary [illegible] the year of [illegible] named to the Archbishopric of [illegible] and died at [illegible] from the Birth of Jesus Christ to the year 1278. We find [illegible] Pope. Many Additions have been made to this Chronicle, and [illegible] the 5th Pope Joan, which are in the 3d Edition of [illegible] But these Additions are retrenched in the Edition of John Herold [illegible] Order of Preachers, from an old Manuscript of that [illegible] Some Authors attribute [illegible] of a Sum of the Canon Law made by [illegible] Treatise of the [illegible] things of Rome.

NICHOLAS

NICHOLAS de Hanapo, so named from a Village in the Diocese of Rouen where he was born, was of the Order of Preaching Friars. He performed the Office of Penitentiary at Rome about the year 1270, and was made Penitentiary of Jerusalem in 1281, by Pope Martin the IV. and died at Tolentino in 1295. He wrote an Historical Collection of Examples of Miracles and Wonders, upon the Holy Scripture, in 24 Chapters, commonly called, The Poor Man's Bible. Some have falsly ascribed this to the Franciscans, and among the Works of St. Antonin: But the Manuscripts give their Testimony for Nicholas of Hanapo, and it hath been printed under his name at Tubingen in 1533, at Venice in 1537, at Paris in 1547, and at Basil in 1550. Nicholas of Hanapo.

BONAVENTURE BROCARD Native of Strasburg, of the Order of Preaching Friars, made the Voyage of the Holy Land about the year 1280, and has left us a very exact Description of it; one part of which hath been published by Canisius in his fresh Tome of Antiquities. Bonaventure Brocard.

Gretser, who made use of it for the making his Map of the Holy Land, affirms us that this Description is extant in a Manuscript of the Library of the Cordeliers of Cologn. They ascribe to him the Annals of the Actions of the Emperor Frederick II. in the Holy Land, which Wolfangus, Lefaus, and Sinderus mention.

MARK PAUL, a Venetian, Son of Nicholas Paul, after having travelled for a long time, wrote in Italian a Relation of his Travels, which hath been translated into Latin and printed at Basil in 1532, and 1551, and at Helmstat in 1584. Mark Paul.

MATTHEW of Vendome, so named from his Country, Abbot of St. Denys, Regent of Matthew of Vendome. under the Reign of St. Lewis, and was one of those to whom this Holy King left the Administration of his Kingdom, when he went his second Voyage to the Holy Land, and also Man agers, and Executors of his Will. He governed the Abbey of St. Denys for five Years, and died in the year 1286, in which he died. They ascribe to him a Poem in Elegiack Verse, containing the History of the Tobiet, dedicated to Bartholomew Archbishop of Tours: It is well esteemed, considering the time it was written in, and very frequent; it hath been printed at Basil in 1496, at Basil in 1563, and at Bremen in 1642.

GEOFFREY of Beaulieu of the Order of Preaching Friars, and Confessor to St. Lewis, Geoffrey of Beaulieu. assisted at his Death, wrote the Life of that King by order of Pope Gregory X. William of Chartres. and Book of the Life and Miracles of that Saint. These two Books are printed in the Duchesne's Collection.

JOHN PECKHAM of the County of Suffex in England, entered himself into the Order of Minor Friars, after having studied at Oxford he went to perfect himself at Paris, and returned into his own Country, called to the chief Dignity in the Realm: but he was a good Servant for it to the Pope, and he had great Differences with the Archbishop of Canterbury, he peaceably enjoyed his Archbishoprick, and enriched, and raised his Kindred, who were low and of mean Extraction. He died in 1291. He composed a Book, intituled, Collectiones, Constitutiones Regionum, printed at Paris in 1506, and at Cologn in 1548. We have some Provincial Ecclesiastical Constitutions of this Archbishop, and in the Libraries of England many other Treatises of his in Manuscript, as, A Book of the Trinity; Considerations for all the Days in the year; Meditations upon the Body of Jesus Christ; Disputes between St. Thomas and this Author. John Peckham.

WILLIAM DURANTS born at Puy in Languedoc, a Scholar of Polens of Sales in Provence, studied at Bologn, and having there taken the Doctor's Cap, he taught the Canon Law at Modena, from whence Pope Clement IV. called him to be his Chaplain, and Auditor of the Palace. He was by Gregory X. first Legate to the Council of Lions in 1274, and after Bishop of Mende in 1286. He afterwards refused the Archbishoprick of Ravenna offered him by Pope Boniface VIII. but he accepted the Legation of the Signiory of Lucca, and having gone thither, he died at Rome in the Island of Corsica on the 6th of July in the year 1296. He was so eminent in Learning in his time, that he was surnamed, The Father of Practice. He hath left us a Book, intituled, The Mirror of the Laws, in three Parts, dedicated to Cardinal Bonifac, afterwards Pope Boniface V. The Repertory of the Law taken out of this Work, and the Exercise of Divine Offices; A Commentary upon the Canons of the Council of Lions, and an Abridgment of the Decrees, and the Text of the Canon Law. The Mirror and the Repertory of the Law have been printed with the Rationale, at Lions in the year 1516, and 1551. The Mirror was likewise printed by it self at Basil in 1474, and at Strasburg with the Repertory in 1502. The Rationale William Durants.

charitable to the Poor, to whom he distributed almost all the Revenues of his Archbishoprick. He very much studied the Works of St. Austin, and had made an Abridgment of him. He also composed a Version of the Bible into the Italian Tongue.

GUY of Munois in the Diocess of Auxerre, was Monk of the Abbey of St. Germain of Auxerre, and afterwards Abbot thereof in 1279. This Dignity was disputed with him, and he was forced to go twice to Rome to plead his Right to it, where after eight years he at last gained his Cause. In 1289 he voluntarily resigned his Abbacy, and retired into a private Cell, where he died in 1313. He studied Divinity and the Canon Law at Orleans, and at Paris for nine years. Another Work is published in the Library of the Fathers, de Scriptoribus Ordinis Cisterciensis, about the year 1669 to 1277, compiled by this Author. Guy of Munois.

PTOLOMY of Lucca, of the Order of Preaching Friars, was a Scholar of St. Thomas Aquinas, and afterwards Bishop of Torcello. He has wrote the Lives of the Popes to Celestin V. in whose time he lived. Ptolomy of Lucques.

JOHN the Teutonick of the Order of Preaching Friars, Bishop of Bosnia in Hungary, flourished at the end of this Century, and the beginning of the next. He composed a Sum for Confessors, printed at Rudlingen in 1202; and the Confessor's Sum, printed at Lyons in 1518. Others say that it was he that made the Table of the Sum of the Abstinens of Raymund of Pennaforte. John the Teutonick.

Amongst the Canonists that flourished at the end of this Century, Trithemius places a Spaniard called GARSIAS, who taught the Civil and Canon Law with reputation, and composed many Works upon that subject, and particularly a Commentary upon the Decretals. Garsias.

HENRY of Suso, or as others call him HAMANDUS of Suso, of the Order of Preaching Friars, flourished at the end of this Century, or in the next. For some place his Death in 1300, and others only in 1305, but be that how it will, he is the Author of divers little Works of Devotion in German, which have been translated of Surius, and printed at Cologn in 1588. The principal of them are these: The Clock of Wisdom. A hundred Meditations upon the Passion of our Lord. With a many Prayers. A Discourse of the nine Rocks. A Dialogue about Truth. Sermons for the Sundays, for the Holy-days of the Saints, and for Lent. Divers Letters full of Piety. The first of these Works was printed at Ulme in 1482, and in 1512; at Nuremberg in 1500, and in other places. There is another Work of Piety of this Author's, called, The Book of Office of the Eternal Wisdom. Henry Suson.

WALTER of Exeter, of the Order of Preaching Friars, made the Life of Guy Earl of Warwick in the year 1301. Walter of Exeter.

FRANCIS de Montcada Marquis of Aytona, and Earl of Osona, to the gobernment of his Estates, joined the Love of Knowledge and Learned Men. He wrote at the beginning of the last Century the History of the Expedition of the Catalonians and Arragonians, under Roger Viceroy of Sicily, against the Turks and Greeks; which he composed from the Memoirs of Berengarius Montaner who was present in the Expedition, and from the Writings of George Pachymere, and Nicephorus Gregoras thereon. Francis of Moncade.

Thus you have the greatest part of the Authors that wrote in the Thirteenth Century. But there were more whose Names are quite lost, and others whose Works are not come out of the Libraries where they are in Manuscript. Among such we may take notice of JOHN a converted Jew, and Deacon of the Church of Bergen, Disciple of St. William Archbishop of Bergen from the year 1199 to the year 1210; who after his Conversion wrote a Work against the Jews, which is in Manuscript in the Library of the Jacobines of the Great Convent of Paris. ADAM of Clermith, a Monk of Citeaux, made Bishop of Senlis in 1222, and died in 1256, many of whose Sermons we find in Manuscript in the Library of Longueau. MONETA of the Order of Preaching Friars, who flourished about the year 1240, and has left a Sum of Divinity. ALBERICK a Monk of Citeaux that made a Chronicle to the year 1241. ALBERTARIUS a Lawyer of Bologn in Italy, who flourished about the year 1260; some of whose Treatises of Piety we have in Manuscript, viz. A Treatise of the Love of God and our Neighbour. A Treatise of Consolation and Advice, and a Treatise to teach one to rule one's Tongue and speak. WILLIAM BROSSE raised to the Archbishoprick of Sens in the year 1238, composed a Sum of Virtues and Vices which is in the Library of Monsieur Colbert. BENEDICT Bishop of Marforio Elect in 1220, who died in 1254, and left a Treatise of Faith which is in the same Library. THOMAS BOCKINGHAM Chancellor of the University of Oxford, who flourished about the year 1270, and made a Commentary upon the Matter of the Sentences, and some other Commentaries upon the Books of the Holy Scripture, which are in the Libraries of England. ODO RIGAUD of the Order of Minor Friars, made Archbishop of Rouen in 1247, who died in 1275, whose Sermons and Commentaries upon Authors whose Works are only in Manuscript.

CHAP. V.

The History of the Greek Church, and of the Authors who Flouriſh'd in the Eaſt during the Thirteenth Century.

THE State of the Eaſtern Empire, and of the Greek Church in the Thirteenth Century, was Subject to various Revolutions. The Emperor Iſaac Angelus, after he had Reign'd Nine Years, was dethron'd in the Year 1195, by his own Brother Alexius, who took upon him the Sirname of Comnenus, and after he had put out his Brother's Eyes, caſt him and his young Son into Priſon. The Son having made his Eſcape from Conſtantinople, went into Germany to wait upon his Brother-in-Law the Emperor Philip, by whoſe Advice he made his Application to the Army of the Croiſade, which was ready to march for the Conqueſt of the Holy-Land. He deſir'd that before they march'd into Paleſtine, they would Re-eſtabliſh him in Conſtantinople, and Expell the Uſurper, withall promiſing afterwards to joyn Forces with them, and to help them to conſiderable Supplies. This Propoſal being made to the Croiſade, at their Rendezvous at Venice, by the Emperor's Ambaſſadors and the Deputies of Alexius, was accepted by the Venetians and French, whoſe Army march'd to, and beſieg'd Conſtantinople in the Year 1203, and within Eight days took it. Alexius the Elder fled by the Boſphorus and the Euxine Sea to Zagora, an Iſle of Thrace. Iſaac was ſet at liberty, and Re-eſtabliſhed on the Throne with his Son Alexius. This Prince promis'd to recognize the Pope, to put an end to the Schiſm, and to reconcile all his Subjects to the Church of Rome: But not being as yet altogether in a Capacity of performing what he had promiſed to the Princes of the Croiſade, he prevail'd upon them to put off their Expedition into the Holy-Land till Eaſter following. During this time the Latin Army ſat down before the Gates of Conſtantinople, and that natural Averſion which they bore to the Greeks, was the cauſe of frequent Quarrels and Conteſts between them; in one of which Rencounters, ſeveral Soldiers of the Army were ſo far incenſed by thoſe who liv'd in the Suburbs of the City, that they ſet it on Fire, and deſtroy'd Part of it. This Accident rendred not only the Latins, but alſo the two Emperors whom they had Re-eſtabliſh'd, odious to the Greeks, and gave occaſion to one of their Kinſmen nam'd Murzulphus, to Uſurp the Government. It was by his Advice that Alexius had refus'd to grant to the Croiſade what he had promis'd them. At laſt they broke out into an open War with them, wherein the Greeks not meeting with that Succeſs which they hop'd for, the Conſtantinopolitans, who ſuppos'd they were betray'd by their Princes, Proclaim'd Nicolas Cannaba Emperor. Murzulphus having ſeiz'd upon Alexius, caus'd himſelf to be acknowledg'd Emperor by the People, Throw'd Cannaba into Chains, ſtrangled Alexius in Priſon, and put an end to the Life of Iſaac. But he was ſoon after Chaſtis'd for his Treaſon by the Croiſade, who immediately laid Seige to Conſtantinople, and took it by Storm on the 12th of April 1204. Murzulphus made his eſcape the Night before, and Theodorus Laſcaris was Elected in his room by the Greeks. The City was given up to be Plunder'd by the Soldiers, who commited all manner of Cruelties and Outrages. After the taking of this City the Latins Elected Baldwin Count of Flanders for Emperor, and Thomas Moroſini a Venetian for Patriarch: For they had agreed that if the Emperor were a Frenchman, the Patriarch ſhould be a Venetian. They became Maſters of all the Churches, and ſupply'd them with Latin Prieſts: And afterwards enlarging their Conqueſts in Greece, they reduc'd under their Obedience almoſt all that had belong'd to the Grecian Emperors in Europe, and divided it among them. Murzulphus and Alexius fell into the Hands of the Latins, the former was put to death, and the latter Impriſon'd: So that, there only remain'd Theodorus Laſcaris, who having eſcaped into Aſia, ſet up the Imperial Seat at Nice.

The Hiſtory of the Greek Church.

The New Emperor Baldwin wrote a Letter to the Pope upon the taking of Conſtantinople, wherein he heaps up a great many Reproaches upon the Greeks, exaggerates their Perfidiouſneſs, their Wickedneſs, and their Hatred to the Church of Rome, and gives a Narrative of the Abuſes which had crept in amongſt them. Pope Innocent III. upon the Receit of this Letter wrote to the Emperor Baldwin, to the Biſhops and Prieſts of the Latin Church, who were at Conſtantinople, to uſe their endeavours to reduce the Greeks under the Obedience of the Holy See. But notwithſtanding all their endeavours, and tho' the Pope's Legates made uſe of very harſh and rigorous Methods to conſtrain them to it, yet they could not gain their end, and the Emperor, Henry Baldwin's Succeſſor, was forc'd to put a ſtop to theſe Proceedings; to open the Greek Churches, and to ſet their Prieſts and Monks at liberty in ſpite of Pelagius the Pope's Legate who oppos'd it. The Bulgarians in the year 1204, return'd to their Obedience to the Pope. Theodorus Comnenus Prince of Epirus abjur'd the Schiſm under the Pontificate of Honorius III. and afterwards having taken upon him the Title of Emperor of Conſtantinople, and become Maſter of Theſſalonica, he was Excommunicated by Pope Gregory IX. in the Year 1232.

The Emperor Baldwin did not long enjoy his new Dignity, for he was taken on the 15th of Auguſt 1205, by John King of the Bulgarians, who kept him in Priſon for Sixteen Months, at the end of which he died a cruel Death. After his Death, his Brother Henry was advanced to the Empire in the Year 1206, who Reign'd Ten Years or thereabouts, and had for his Succeſſor Peter of Courtnay Count of Auxerre, who had marry'd Yolanta the Siſter or Daughter of Henry. But that unfortunate Prince never enter'd into the Poſſeſſion of the Empire: For being on his way thither, after he had been Crown'd at Rome by Honorius III. he was taken in his passage thro' Thrace, by Theodorus Prince of Epirus, and sent to the Emperor Theodorus Lascaris, who put him to death. His Son Robert Succeeded him in the Year 1221, who dying in the Year 1228, was Succeeded by his Brother Baldwin II. from whom the Greeks retook Constantinople in the Year 1261.

During this the Greeks had an Emperor at Nice in Bithynia: Theodorus Lascaris was the first, and in the Year 1222, John Ducas his Son-in-Law Succeeded him. This John retook from the Latins a Part of those Countries which they had Conquer'd, and after he had Reign'd Three and thirty Years, left his Son Theodore Lascaris Heir to his Estates, which he did not long enjoy, being taken away by death in the Fourth Year of his Reign, A. D. 1259. His Son John being in his Minority was soon turn'd out of the Empire by Michael Palæologus the Son of Andronicus Palæologus, and by the Mother's side descended from the Family of the Comneni, who put to death the Man whom Theodore had nominated for the Young Prince's Tutor, caus'd himself at first to be declared Regent, afterwards Associate of the Empire, and at last rid himself of his Collegue, after he had caus'd his Eyes to be put out. Michael had an happy Beginning of his Reign by the taking of Constantinople, which Alexius Strategopulus Cæsar had seiz'd upon by the Treachery of some Greeks, who were in the City in the Year 1261, and drove out thence the Latins.

Projects set on foot for the Re-union of the Greeks and Latins.

Under the Empire of John Ducas Pope Gregory IX. entred into a Negotiation in the Year 1233 with Germanus Patriarch of Constantinople, Residing at Nice for the Re-union of the Two Churches. That Pope wrote a Letter to the Patriarch (related by Matthew Paris) about the Differences in Religion which were between the Greeks and Latins; and made choice of Two Monks of the Order of the Preaching Friars, nam'd Hugh and Peter, and two of the Order of the Minor Friars, nam'd Aimo and Radulphus, to treat with the Patriarch. They met at Nice, where they had several Conferences with the Greeks about the Procession of the Holy Ghost, and the Celebration of the Eucharist with unleaven'd Bread. But they came to no Conclusion, and the Patriarch of Constantinople told them, that he would call a Synod, where the Patriarchs of Jerusalem and Antioch would meet him, with whom he might resolve upon something in the Case. The Pope's Advocates retir'd to Constantinople, from whence they were call'd to Nymphea in Bithynia, near the Euxine Sea, where that Council of the Greeks was held on the morrow after Easter-day, in the Year 1233. They there repeated all that had been said on either side at Nice concerning the Two Points in Question; and after several Disputes, the Greeks gave in Writing a Declaration, wherein they maintain'd, That one might celebrate the Eucharist with Unleaven'd Bread, and the Latins presented a Profession of Faith, concerning the Procession of the Holy Ghost. The Latins refuted the Opinion of the Greeks about Unleaven'd Bread by the Authorities of Scripture, and of the Greek Fathers: The Greeks oppos'd the Testimonies of others against them, and the Dispute lasted till late at Night. They had no Conference afterwards for several days together; and at last the Emperor John Ducas propos'd to the Latins, to leave out that Addition made in the Creed about the Procession of the Holy Ghost; and to permit the Greeks to adhere to their Opinion; and that the Greeks should acknowledge and approve of the Sacrament of the Latins, celebrated with Unleaven'd Bread: But the Pope's Legates reply'd, that the Pope would not part with the least Iot of the Faith; and that the Greeks ought to believe, and Preach to others concerning the Body of Jesus Christ, that it may as well be done with Unleaven'd as with Leaven'd Bread. And concerning the Holy Ghost, that he proceedeth as well from the Son as from the Father; and that they should inculcate this Doctrine to the People: But that the Pope would not force them to add this Clause expressly in their Creed, when they Sung it in the Church, nor condemn the Sacrament of the Greeks celebrated with Leaven'd Bread. The Greeks were very much nettled at this Proposition, and having call'd together the Pope's Legates a second time, order'd their Profession of Faith about the Procession of the Holy Ghost to be read before them, and offer'd several Passages of the Fathers to refute it. The Pope's Legates adher'd stiffly to their Sentiments, and both sides parted looking on each other as Heroticks. Afterwards the Pope's Legates obtain'd Leave to depart. The Greeks sent in all haste after them, to regain the Declaration which they had given them concerning Unleaven'd Bread; and gave them another concerning the Procession of the Holy Ghost, wherein they produc'd a great many Passages out of the Greek Fathers to prove that he proceeds only from the Father.

There was likewise another Treaty of Re-union set on foot, between Pope Alexander IV. and the Emperor Theodore Lascaris. This Pope sent him the Bishop of Orvieto as his Legate, and gave him an Instruction containing the Articles of Obedience to the Holy See, granted by the Greeks in the time of Innocent III. with the Demands of the Greeks, and the Answers which the Legate ought to return them. But this Negotiation had no success, and the Legate was sent back without having done any thing in the Business.

The Re-union of the Greeks and Latins under Michael Palæologus.

Michael Palæologus forseeing that the Pope would not fail to arm the Princes of the West against him for the Retaking of Constantinople, resolv'd upon proposing the Re-union of the Greeks with the Roman Church, that by this means he might free himself from the fear of those terrible Croisado-Men. He thereupon sent as his Ambassador to Pope Urban IV. Nicholas Bishop of Crotona a Greek by Nation, but brought up in the Church of Rome; to assure his Holiness, that he was perswaded the Greeks and Latins did not differ in the Faith; that the Bishop who came to wait upon him, had given him to understand, That the Latin and Greek Fathers were of the same Mind; that he intreated his Holiness to send him a Legate for the more speedy Re-uniting of the Two Churches: Urban IV. reply'd to those Proposals in a very obliging manner, and sent him Two Nuncio's of the Order of the Minor Friars, with the Bishop of Crotona. The Affair however drop'd for the present, because Michael Palæologus seeing himself out of Danger, was not so urgent in pressing the Accommodation; but the Pope's Nuntio's having granted to the Greeks several Points which did not very well please Clement IV. Urban's Successor: That Pope wrote to Michael Palæologus, and sent him a Profession of Faith, containing the Articles of the Creed explain'd in very clear Terms, and particularly the Procession of the Holy Ghost from the Father and the Son; to which he added the Doctrine of the Roman Church touching Baptism, Purgatory, Hell, the Seven Sacraments, especially the Eucharist Celebrated with Unleaven'd Bread; the Indissolubility of Marriage; the Permission of Third and Fourth Marriages; and Lastly, about the Pope's Primacy. He declares to him, that it was needless to call a Council to canvass these Positions; but that if the Greeks would receive them, a Council might be held to Ratify the Union of the Two Churches. This Profession of Faith was carry'd to the Emperor Michael by Two Monks of the Order of the Preaching Friars the Pope's Legates. That Emperor having receiv'd Intelligence of the Preparation which Saint Lewis King of France, and Charles Duke of Anjou King of Sicily were making at that time for the East, and fearing the Storm would fall upon him, wrote to Saint Lewis a little after the Death of Clement, declaring, That he was willing to abjure the Schism; that he had sent for that purpose several Ambassadors to Rome, some of whom had been stop'd by the way, and the others had receiv'd no satisfactory Answer; that he made choice of him as Umpire of this Difference, and conjur'd him to do his utmost to put an end to it. Saint Lewis return'd that Emperor Word, That he could do nothing in this business, but only press the Holy See to put an end to it. Thereupon he referr'd the Emperor's Ambassadors to the Cardinals, to whom he wrote, desiring them to make up this Re-union as soon as possible. Upon those Instances the Cardinals wrote about it to the Bishop of Albany in Greece, and sent him the Profession of Faith drawn up by Clement IV. with orders to cause the Emperor and the Bishops to Subscribe it.

Gregory X. being advanc'd to the Papal Chair, the Emperor Michael immediately dispatch'd Ambassadors to him with a Letter, declaring the Desire he had of the Re-union; and the Pope for his part wrote him another Letter, wherein resuming all that had passed from the beginning of the Treaty under Urban IV. and Clement IV. he declares to that Emperor, That the shortest and best way to put an End to the differences of the two Churches, was to cause the Patriarch, the Bishops and the Greek Clergy to subscribe to the Profession of Faith drawn up by Clement IV. and afterwards invites him to come in Person, or to send his Ambassadors to a General Council, which he intended to hold. He sent him four Legates of the Order of the Minor Friars to treat with him. Palæologus upon the Receipt of this Letter from the Pope, us'd his utmost Endeavours to bring about the Union, and to that End had recourse to Artifice, Perswasion and Force. The Greeks at first made a very vigorous Opposition, and the Patriarch Joseph could by no means be brought over. John Veccus Treasurer of the Church of Constantinople, a Man of Parts and Learning, was one of the warmest in opposing it at first; but afterwards having read over the Writings of Nicephorus Blemmidas, and Consulted the Passages of the Greek Fathers concerning the Procession of the Holy Ghost, he inclin'd to Peace. However the Patriarch continuing to oppose it, the Emperor sent Ambassadors to Pope Gregory, to acquaint him, he had done his utmost to promote the Re-union; but that this Business could not be adjusted in so short a time, because it was requisite to Convene several Bishops who were at some distance off. The Pope in his Reply to the Emperor, takes notice to him, that it was the Opinion of a great many Persons, That the Greeks did not act sincerely in their Endeavours after the Re-union, and that their Design was only to draw this Affair out in length.

The Emperor to remove this Suspicion and to put an End to the Business, oblig'd the Patriarch Joseph to retire into a Monastery of Constantinople, till such time as the Re-union were concluded, or fell to nothing; on condition, That if the business did not succeed, then he should hold his See; but if it did, and he would not approve of the Treaty of Union, then another Patriarch should be Elected in his stead. Most of the other Greek Bishops follow'd the Emperor's Sentiments, so that he made no longer scruple to send his Ambassadors with a Letter, wherein he declar'd That the Greek Church approv'd of the Profession of Faith sent from Rome, and recogniz'd the Primacy of the Church of Rome, and only desir'd, that they might be permitted to repeat the Creed without the Addition. The Greek Bishops sent likewise a Deputy with a Letter from the Metropolitan of Ephesus, and Thirty Greek Bishops who approv'd of the Union, and disapprov'd of the Opposition made by the Patriarch Joseph. These Letters were delivered to the Pope and the General Council held at Lions in the Year 1274. George Acropolita Swore for the Emperor, That he held the Profession of Faith, recogniz'd the Primacy of the Church of Rome, and abjur'd the Schism. The Deputy of the Greek Bishops did the same in their behalf, and the Union being thus concluded, the Pope sung Te Deum, and caus'd the Profession of Faith to be recited in Greek and Latin repeating the Article of the Procession of the Holy Ghost twice. The Pope testified his joy by his Letters written to Michael Palæologus, to his Son Andronicus, and to the Greek Bishops, congratulated their Re-union, and recommended to them the finishing of all, by bringing those over who had not as yet submitted. Upon the Return of the Ambassadors the Patriarch Joseph was Depos'd, and John Veccus was Elected in his Place, who recited the Name of Gregory in the Mass styling him the Oecumenical or Universal Pope. This New Patriarch labour'd earnestly to compleat the Re-union, and the Emperor sent Ambassadors to the Pope to acquaint him that all was over. However a great many Greeks were still dissatisfy'd at the Re-union. John XXI. desiring fully to compleat it, sent Legates to the Emperor Michael, who receiv'd them honourably, and promis'd to perform all that his Ambassadors had agreed to in the Council of Lions. That Emperor went still farther, and sent Ambassadors to Rome to assure the Pope, That having call'd a Synod of Greek Bishops, they had approv'd de Novo of all that was done in the Council of Lions. Those Ambassadors were intrusted with Letters from the Emperor Michael, from his Son Andronicus, and with a Letter from Veccus and the Council of the Greeks, which contain'd a Profession of Faith, a little differing from that of Clement IV; particularly on the Article of the Procession of the Holy Ghost, tho' the ſame in ſubſtance. Thoſe Letters written in the Year 1277. were not deliver'd to John; but to his Succeſſor Nicholas III. who complain'd of the Alteration which the Greek Biſhops had made in the Profeſſion of Faith, and was for requiring them to Sign the Profeſſion of Clement IV. and to add to their Creed the Clauſe Filioque. He wrote upon this Subject to the Emperor, to his Son Andronicus, and to the Greek Biſhops; and ſent his Legates with Inſtructions, that they ſhould engage the Emperor to cauſe the Patriarch and all the Greek Biſhops to Subſcribe to the Profeſſion of Faith, the Recognition of the Pope's Primacy, the Abjuration of the Schiſm, and the Promiſe of Submiſſion to the Holy See: That they ſhould prevail upon him to Order the Clauſe Filioque, to be Sung in all the Greek Churches: That as for the particular Rites and Ceremonies of the Greek Church, ſuch might be Tolerated as were not contrary to the Sound Faith. Their Inſtruction likewiſe contain'd a draught of the Deed of Submiſſion which the Biſhops and Clergy of each Church were to Sign. The Legates were likewiſe Enjoin'd to go to as many Churches as they could, to get it Subſcrib'd, and to let the Greeks know, That the Romans wonder'd that neither the Patriarch nor the Greek Biſhops had as yet demanded of the Holy See, the Confirmation of their Dignities, and the Abſolution from their Cenſures. The Greek Biſhops made no Anſwer to theſe Propoſals of Pope Nicholas, neither were they Executed, and the Emperors Michael and Andronicus only Subſcrib'd over again a Declaration much like to that which George Acropolita had Sign'd in the Council of Lions. Their Letters were not deliver'd to Pope Nicholas, but to his Succeſſor Martin IV. who being in Alliance with Charles King of Naples and Sicily, in the Year 1281. Excomunicated the Emperor Palæologus as a Schiſmatick, and a favourer of the Schiſm of the Greeks. Michael was ſo incens'd at it, that once he forbad the Pope's Name to be recited in the Maſs, and he was juſt ready to break the Union. However he did not do it, tho' Martin renew'd his Cenſures; and it laſted till the Death of Michael; tho' ſeveral Greek Monks gave it ſome diſturbance, by thoſe many Writings which they Publiſh'd againſt the Patriarch Veccus, who Refuted them very vigorouſly.

The Re-union between the Greeks and Latins is broken in the time of Andronicus the Emperor.

But after the Death of Michael Palæologus, which happen'd in December 1283. his Son Andronicus declar'd himſelf againſt the Union, and would not ſo much as pay thoſe Honours to his Father's Funeral, as were uſually paid to Emperors. Veccus retir'd into a Monaſtery, and Joſeph was re-ſeiz'd in the Patriarchal See of Conſtantinople, but he was diſturb'd by the Partiſans of Arſenius, and at laſt George of Cyprus Sirnam'd Gregory was made Patriarch after the Death of Joſeph. He cauſ'd Veccus to be Baniſh'd to Mount Olympus, from whence he was recall'd to appear at a Council which Andronicus held againſt him in the Year 1284. in the Palace of Blacherna at Conſtantinople. In the Council he was condemned, and all the Arch-Biſhops and Biſhops, who had been moſt for the Union, were Depos'd. Afterwards Veccus who bravely defended his Cauſe in the Council, was by the Emperor's Order ſent Priſoner to the Caſtle of Saint George in Bithynia, with two of his Clergy Nam'd Conſtantine Meleteniota and George Metochites. Veccus dy'd there ſometime after, and his two Companions being diſcharg'd out of Priſon without changing their Minds, and perſiſting ſtill in the defence of their Opinion, were at laſt ſent into Exile, where they dy'd.

'Tis ſomething difficult to ſet down the Succeſſion of the Patriarchs of Conſtantinople during this Century, by reaſon of the various Opinions of Hiſtorians in the Caſe: But let us ſee what can be ſaid the moſt probable, and the moſt conformable to the Hiſtory of that Time. When Conſtantinople was taken by the Latins, John Camatera who was Patriarch of that City, retir'd to Didymoteca, or Dimatuca, a City of Thrace, where he dy'd two Years after, without going to Nice, tho' earneſtly invited thither by Theodore Laſcaris. About two Years after his Death, this Prince willing to preſerve all the Enſigns of the Empire, thought fit to make a Patriarch of Conſtantinople, who ſhould reſide at Nice. The firſt who was Elected, was one Nam'd Michael Sauranus or Autoriamis, who enjoy'd that Poſt for Six Years. Theodore Irenicus Hyppatus or Coppas Succeeded him in the Year 1215, and was almoſt as long on the See. In his ſtead they Elected in the Year 1221. Maximus Abbot of the Acmet Monks, who enjoy'd the Place only Six Months, and dy'd. Manuel Charitopula Succeeded him, and dy'd a little before the Emperor John Ducas, in the Year 1226. After his Death, ſeveral propos'd Nicephorus Blemmidas Monk of Mount Athos, to be Advanc'd to the Dignity: But upon his Refuſal Germanus Sirnam'd Nauplius was advanc'd to that Poſt, and enjoy'd it Seventeen Years and an half. After his Death, Methodius Abbot of the Monaſtery of Saint Hyacinthus, had the honour of being Patriarch of Conſtantinople the ſpace of Three Months. Manuel Succeeded him, and was inveſted with this Dignity Fourteen Years. At laſt Arſenius Autorianus was made Patriarch, under the Emperor Theodore Laſcaris, in the Year 1257. This Man has himſelf given us an Account of his Life, in his laſt Will and Teſtament, where he ſays, That during the Empire of that Religious Prince, he had no Conteſt about Religious Matters, but employ'd himſelf wholly in relieving the Widdows, the Fatherleſs, and the Oppreſſed. That after the Death of that Prince, the Biſhops, Senate, the Officers of the Army and the People met together in his abſence, to Conſtitute Michael Palæologus Regent, and that upon his coming to Court, he found him at the Helm: That in a ſhort time after, he made himſelf Collegue in the Empire; that they had forc'd him to Crown Palæologus, but upon Condition that the Young Emperor John ſhould have the Preheminence: That afterwards perceiving that this Agreement was not put in Execution, and that Michael did many things irregularly, he retir'd; and that Michael ſet up in his ſtead, Nicephorus a Biſhop of Epheſus, who dying within a Year after, Michael recall'd him: That the City of Conſtantinople being re-taken, that Prince had us'd all his Endeavours to bring him over to own, that the Arch-biſhop of Epheſus had been lawful Patriarch, and to make him admit of thoſe whom he had Promoted to Holy Orders; but that he would not conſent to either: That notwithſtanding this Palæologus Re-eſtabliſh'd him in his Patriarchial See, but withal contin'd to Perſecute him: That after this, the Young Emperor's Eyes were put out; that having underſtood that Michael had committed that Crime, he had Excommunicated him for it: That he hop'd, he would have been sensible and repented of his Fault, and merit Absolution, by remitting a Part of the Taxes: But that Prince having not chang'd his Mind, he had Three Years after, absolutely Excommunicated him, in a Council compos'd of the Bishops, Clergy and Senate: That ever since that Prince had persecuted him, and drove him out of his Church, under a pretence that he had Administred the Communion to the Sultan's Children, tho' it was evident, that it was the Metropolitan of Pisidia, who had Administr'd to them Baptism and the Eucharist: That afterwards he had sent him into Exile, after he had caus'd him to be Excommunicated in a Synod; and had often us'd him unkindly in the place of his Exile. Arsenius being turn'd out, Joseph was put up in his Place, in the Year 1266. but several would not acknowledge him, and adher'd to the Interests of Arsenius, which caus'd a division betwixt the Greeks of Constantinople, that lasted till the Death of Joseph. After Joseph was Depos'd in the Year 1274. John Veccus was set up, so that there were at that time Three Patriarchs of Constantinople, Arsenius, Joseph and Veccus. Arsenius dy'd first in Exile: Veccus was in Possession of the Patriarchship during the Reign of Palæologus; but after his Death, he was immediately Depos'd, and Joseph Re-establish'd; who dying a while after, the Patriarchship was bestow'd in the Year 1284. on George of Cyprus Sirnam'd Gregory, who wrote very warmly against Veccus and the Latins. He had nevertheless many Adversaries, so that perceiving himself despis'd, and growing infirm and sick, he retir'd into a Monastery, where he dy'd, after he had been Patriarch Five Years. Writers in the Greek Church.

The Greek Church in this Century, produc'd a great many Famous Men, who Wrote about the Contests between the Greeks and Latins, and have given us an History of the great Revolutions of the Eastern Empire. An Account of the most Considerable of these Authors, we here give you.

NICHOLAS d'OTRANTES flourish'd at Constantinople, the beginning of this Century. He made use of an Interpreter in the Conferences which Cardinal Benedict (sent in the Year 1201. to Constantinople by Pope Innocent III.) had with the Eastern Bishops about the Differences in Religion. He compos'd divers Treatises against the Latins, among the rest, a Treatise concerning the Procession of the Holy Ghost, against Hugh Etherianus: A Treatise to prove, That Jesus Christ made use of leaven'd Bread in the Last Supper; and a Treatise concerning Saturday's Fast, concerning the Marriage of Priests, and the other Controverted Points between the Latin and the Greek Church. Those Tracts are cited by Allatius, who produces some Fragments of them in his Works. Nicholas d'Otrantes.

About the same time flourish'd NICETAS, who from being Librarian of the Church of Constantinople, was advanc'd to the Arch-Bishoptick of Thessalonica. He has compos'd a Treatise concerning the Procession of the Holy Ghost, against Hugh Etherianus, divided into Six Dialogues. Leo Allatius has quoted some Fragments of it. We have likewise in the Jus Greco-Romanum, an Answer of this Author to the Queries of Basil the Monk. Nicetas Archbishop of Thessalonica.

NICETAS ACOMINATUS Sirnam'd CHONIATES, from the Place of his Nativity, after he had spent his Youth with his Brother Michael Arch-bishop of Athens, was made Secretary of State to the Emperors Alexius, and Isaac Angelus; and afterwards Advanc'd to the Chief Posts in the Government: First, to be Lord Treasurer, Secretary of State, and Lord High Chamberlain to the Emperor. When Constantinople was taken by the Latins in the Year 1204. he retir'd with his Wife and Children to Nice in Bithynia, where he dy'd in the Year 1206. He has compos'd One and twenty Books of History, which begin at the Death of Alexius Comnenus, which Zonaras has continued, to the Year 1203. Vossius and Lipsius commend his Style, his Genius and his manner of Writing, and observe, that he has affected to imitate the Style of Homer and the Ancient Poets. The same Author, has compos'd a Tract Intitul'd, A Treasure of the Othodox Faith, divided into Twenty seven Books, the Five first of which, are Translated into Latin by Morellus, and to be met with in the Bibliotheca Patrum; and a Fragment of the Twentieth Book, has been likewise Publish'd, concerning the Order which ought to be observ'd, in admitting the Saracens when they turn Christians. Nicetas Acominatus Choniates Logothetes.

The History of Nicetas was Printed in Greek with the Latin Version of Wolfius, at Basil in the Year 1557. at Paris, in the Year 1566. at Francfort, in the Year 1568. at Geneva, in the Year 1593. and at Paris in the Body of the Byzantine History, in the Year 1647. The Five Books of the Treasure of Othodox Faith, were Printed at Paris, in the Year 1580. and at Geneva, in the Year 1592. The Fragment of the Twentieth Book, is to be met with in Greek and Latin, in the Second Volume of the Additions to the Bibliotheca Patrum, Printed in the Year 1624.

MICHAEL ACOMINATUS CHONIATES, Arch-bishop of Athens, surviv'd his Brother for some time, whose Panegyrick he made, Printed with the Works of Nicetas. He has likewise Compos'd several other Tracts, and among the rest, One upon the Cross, which is to be met with in Manuscript in the French King's Library. Michael Acominatus Choniates Arch-Bishop of Athens.

About the same time, one JOEL made a Chronological Abridgment from the beginning of the World, to the taking of Constantinople by the Latins, which was Translated by Leo Allatius, and Printed in Greek and Latin at Paris, in the Byzantine History, in the Year 1651. with the History of GEORGE ACROPOLITA LOGOTHETES. This George was promoted in the Court of the Emperor John Ducas at Nice, and apply'd himself to the study of the Sciences. He was afterwards made Lord High Treasurer, and Employ'd in the most important Affairs of the Empire. Theodore Lascaris made him Regent of all the Western Provinces of his Empire. He was taken Prisoner by Michael Angelus, but set at Liberty, by the Emperor Palæologus, who sent him on an Ambassy to Bulgaria. Upon his Return from this Ambassy, he apply'd himself wholly to the Instruction of Youth, and behav'd himself well in that Employment, for several Years. He was one of the Judges Nominated in the Year 1272. to Determine the Joel. George Acropolita Logothetes.

Writers in the Greek Church.

the Affair of John Veccus Patriarch of Conſtantinople. The next Year he was ſent into the Weſt, by the Emperor, to conclude the Peace and the Re-union of the two Churches with Pope Gregory X. and Swore to it in the Year 1274. at the Council of Lions. In the Year 1282. he was ſent again to the King of Bulgaria, and dy'd upon his Return. He continu'd the Greek Hiſtory, from the taking of Conſtantinople by the Latins, till it was re-taken by Michael Palæologus, in the Year 1261. This Work being found at Pera, was bought of Catachuzenus, brought from Conſtantinople by George Douza, and Publiſh'd with a Tranſlation by his Brother Theodore, who caus'd it to be Printed with Notes, at Leyden, in the Year 1614. The next Year the Text was Printed at Geneva. Afterwards Leo Allatius Publiſh'd this Hiſtory in a larger Volume, and thus it was Printed at Paris, in the Year 1651. The Modern Greeks have beſtow'd great Encomiums on this Author, and look'd upon him as a Prodigy of Learning and Eloquence. However, were we to judge of him by his Hiſtory, we ſhould not ſay ſuch fine things of him. He likewiſe Compos'd ſeveral other Tracts, among the reſt, Thirteen Prayers, and a Diſcourſe upon the taking of Conſtantinople by the Greeks, of which he makes mention, in his Hiſtory; a Commentary on the Sermons of Saint Gregory Nazianzen, and a Treatiſe of Faith, of Virtue and of the Soul; which are to be met with in Manuſcript, in ſeveral Libraries.

Pantaleon Deacon of the Church of Conſtantinople.

Whilſt Conſtantinople was in the Hands of the Latins, PANTALEON Deacon of that Church, Compos'd a Treatiſe againſt the Greeks, about the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt, the State of departed Souls, Unleavened Bread, and the Submiſſion due to the Church of Rome. This Treatiſe is to be met with in Latin, in Stewart's Addition to the Antiquities of Caniſius, and in the laſt Bibliotheca Patrum. 'Tis probable, that he was the Author of the Sermons attributed to Pantaleon; who is referr'd to the Seventh Century, tho' this latter, goes under the Quality of Prieſt of the Church of Conſtantinople: For it might be that he was Prieſt of that Church, after he had been Deacon.

Manuel Charitopula Patriarch of Conſtantinople.

MANUEL CHARITOPULA Patriarch of Conſtantinople. We meet with in the Jus Græco-Romanum of Lewenclavius ſeveral Eccleſiaſtical Inſtitutions, under the Name of Manuel, which ſome have attributed to the Emperor Manuel Comnenus, but which are the Anſwers of Manuel Patriarch of Conſtantinople, to the Queſtions of the Biſhop of Pella. But whereas there were Two Manuels honour'd with that Dignity, during this Century, viz. Manuel Charitopula, who in the Year 1221 Succeeded Maximus Abbot of the Acmets; and liv'd to the Year 1226. another Manuel, who Succeeded Methodius, in the Year 1244. and was Patriarch Fourteen Years together; 'Tis very difficult to know, to which of the two theſe Works belong; however, they are commonly aſcrib'd to the former.

The Firſt Queſtion is, Whether Women forſaken by their Husbands, of whom they have heard no News of for Five Years together, may afterward Marry? The Anſwer is, that the Husbands who leave their Wives ought to be Excommunicated, and that the Wives of thoſe of whom they have had no News, may Marry again after Five Years time: But thoſe who know where their Husbands are, ought to go and wait upon them.

The Second Queſtion is, What Pennance ought to be inflicted on ſuch Prieſts, by whoſe Negligence it happens, that the Conſecrated Bread be eaten by Rats: And what ought to be done when the Prieſt being at the Altar, a Mouſe by chance happens to eat the Conſecrated Hoſt? The Anſwer is, The Prieſts by whoſe negligence this happens, ought to be Suſpended for ſome time: And as to the latter Caſe, if it does not happen through the Fault of the Miniſter, he is not to be blam'd for it; but another Oblation ought to be ſet upon the Altar, and the Sacrifice to be concluded with Conſecrating it.

The Third Queſtion is, What Puniſhment the Prieſts deſerve, who contemn the Excommunication of their Biſhops, and ſtill continue to celebrate and perform their Functions tho' interdicted? The Anſwer is, That they ought to be depos'd.

The Fourth Queſtion is, Whether Laicks who are above Forty, have been Marry'd twice, and have Children, may Marry again? The Anſwer is, That they are not to be allow'd it.

The Fifth Queſtion is, Whether one may Celebrate the Holy Euchariſt without an Anti-table? (that is, as it is explain'd in that place, a piece of a Table-Cloth or Napkin Bleſs'd by the Biſhop in the Ceremony of the Dedication of the Church.) The Anſwer is, That 'tis not requiſite to make uſe of them on all Altars, but only on Altars of whoſe Conſecration we are not very well ſatisfied.

The Sixth Queſtion is, What Puniſhment thoſe Prieſts deſerve who Celebrate Marriages during Lent; and what one ought to think of ſuch Marriages? The Anſwer is, That if thoſe Prieſts did it out of Ignorance or Simplicity, they ought to bear leſs Puniſhment, than if they did it willfully; but that ſuch Marriages were valid.

Germanus Nauplius Patriarch of Conſtantinople.

GERMANUS II. Sirnam'd NAUPLIUS Patriarch of Conſtantinople, was advanc'd to that Dignity by the Greeks, in the Year 1226; when Conſtantinople was in the Poſſeſſion of the Latins, and dy'd in the Year 1243. So that he was only Titular Patriarch of Conſtantinople, having his conſtant Reſidence at Nice. We have already obſerv'd, That moſt of the Works attributed to Germanus I. Patriarch of Conſtantinople, belong to this Man, and among others the Myſtical Theory, which is not in the ſame Condition wherein it was firſt compos'd; there being many Additions and Alterations ſince made. We ought likewiſe to attribute rather to this Author than to the former, the Diſcourſe upon the Dedication of the Church of the Virgin Mary, and upon the Nurſing of our Saviour, Publiſh'd by Father Combefis in his Book de Originibus Conſtantinopolitanis: A Panegyrick of the Virgin, and a Sermon on the Nativity, Publiſhed by the ſame Author in the ſame Piece: But as for the Third, which is upon the Death of the Virgin, Allatius obſerves, that the Ancient Manuſcripts, as well as the Style, and the manner wherein it is wrote, make it appear, that it belongs to George of Nicodemia. We muſt likewiſe aſcribe to Germanus II. the Sermons on the Beheading of Saint John, on the Preſentation, Annunciation ciation, and Death of the Virgin Mary, Publish'd by the same Father in his Addition to the Bibliotheca Patrum: But we must except the Discourse upon our Saviour's Burial, which belongs to a more Ancient Author. 'Tis likewise probable that the Two Discourses on the Cross, and the Two Sermons on Fasting, Publish'd by Gretser under the Name of Germanus Patriarch of Constantinople are his; since it appears, that the Person who compos'd them, wrote at that time when the Greek Emperors were at War with the Latins. Lastly there is no Question to be made, but that the Two Letters directed to the Greeks of the Isle of Cyprus, Publish'd by Cotelerius, in the Second Tome of his Monumenta Ecclesiæ Græcæ, belong to Germanus II. since he warmly exhorts the Greeks of his Communion, not to communicate with those who observ'd the Rites and Usages of the Latins, or who were united to them, and opposes the Addition of the Phrase Filioque made to the Creed, and the other Customs of the Latins. He Likewise wrote against the Latins a Treatise of the Procession of the Holy Ghost, a Synodal Epistle in answer to the Minor Friars and the other Latin Missionaries; several Opuscula upon Unleaven'd Bread, upon Purgatory, and upon the Three ways of Administring the Sacrament of Baptism, which are found in Manuscript, and made mention of by Allatius. This Patriarch is likewise Author of Three Constitutions concerning the Patriarchal Monasteries, which are to be met with in the Third Tome of the Jus Græco-Romanum of Lewenclavius.

NICEPHORUS BLEMMIDAS, Priest and Monk of Mount Athos, where he led a very Holy Life, was very favourable to the Latins, and more inclinable to the Peace than any other Greek of this Century. 'Tis in this Temper of Mind, that he compos'd Two Treatises of the Procession of the Holy Ghost: The one is directed to James Patriarch of Bulgaria, and the other to the Emperor Theodore Lascaris. He therein very strongly confronts the Opinion of several Greeks who maintain'd, that we could not say, that the Holy Ghost proceeded from the Father and the Son; and proves, that this Expression was very Orthodox, and Conformable to the Doctrine of the Holy Scriptures, and of the Holy Fathers of the Greek Church. These Two Tracts are Printed in Greek and Latin, at the end of the First Tome of Raynaldus, and in the Græcia Orthodoxa of Allatius, who has likewise given us in the Second Book of his Tract, concerning the Concord of the Greek and Latin Churches, a Letter which Nicephorus wrote, after he had with disgrace turn'd out of the Church belonging to his Monastery, Marchesina the Mistress of the Emperor John Ducas, as unworthy to enter that Holy Place. There is likewise Printed in Greek, at Augsburgh in the Year 1605, under the Name of this Author; an Abridgment of Logick and Natural Philosophy. There are also several other Theological Pieces of the same Author in the Vatican Library, and in the Library of Bavaria, such as the Panegyrick of Saint John the Evangelist, a Discourse concerning the Soul; another concerning the Body; several Commentaries on the Psalms, and Opuscula on Faith, Vertue, and Religion. His Treatise on the Procession of the Holy Ghost, shews him to be a Man of a just Reason, well vers'd in the Scriptures and the Fathers, and full of good Principles of Divinity.

Nicephorus Blemmidas Monk of Mount Athos.

ARSENIUS AUTORIANUS, Patriarch of Constantinople, Monk of Mount Athos, was Advanc'd in the Year 1257. as we have already observ'd, to be of Patriarch of Constantinople; and he had not only the Title of it, as his Predecessors had; but likewise the happiness of re-entering that Church, after the Greeks had re-taken Constantinople from the Latins. Having faln into disgrace with Michael Palæologus, he was turn'd out and depos'd in the Year 1268. and sent into Exile, where he liv'd several Years. He has Compos'd an Abridgment of the Canons, extracted from the Fathers and Councils, and divided into One Hundred forty one Heads, which is to be met with in the second Tome of the Bibliotheca Juris Canonici by Justel. Cotelerius has since Publish'd in the second Tome of his Monumenta Ecclesiæ Græcæ, the Last Will and Testament of this Patriarch, wherein he gives an Account of the Contests he had with the Emperor Michael Palæologus, and renews the Excomunication which he had Issu'd out against him.

Arsenius Autorianus Patriarch of Constantinople.

THEODORE LASCARIS Junior, Sirnam'd DUCAS the Greek Emperor, (Grandson to that Theodore Lascaris who took upon him the Quality of Emperor at Nice, after the taking of Constantinople by the Latins, and Son of John Ducas, who was likewise Emperor of the Greeks at Nice, by Virtue of his Wife Irene, Daughter to Theodore the Elder,) Succeeded his Father about the Year 1255. But not being able to undergo the Fatigue of the Empire, he retir'd soon after into a Monastery, where he dy'd, in the Year 1259. in the 36*th*. Year of his Age. This Prince who minded his Studies more than the Affairs of the State, Compos'd several Pieces of Theology, among others, a Treatise concerning the Procession of the Holy Ghost, against the Latins, Directed to the Bishop of Corona; the Preface of which, Dr. Cave makes mention of, as taken out of a Manuscript of this Treatise, which is in England. Allatius makes mention of several Theological discourses, belonging to this Prince, upon the Trinity and the Incarnation. Freherus speaks of a Book which he made, concerning Natural Communication, and these are to be met with in the French King's Library, several Manuscript-Tracts of this Author's, such as a Treatise of the Trinity, a Discourse of Vertue, a Treatise of Fasting, &c. The Medals of this Emperor represent him to us holding a Cross in his Right Hand, and a Book in his Left, an Emblem of his Learning and Piety.

Theodore Lascaris Sirnam'd Ducas the Greek Emperor.

GEORGE PACHYMERES flourish'd about the Year 1280. He was Born at Nice, in the Year 1242. where he had his Education. He afterwards entred into Orders, had the greatest share with the Patriarch of Constantinople in all Affairs, both Ecclesiastical and Civil, and gain'd so great a Repute, that he was Chosen in the Year 1267. to Try Arsenius Patriarch of Constantinople, who was Accus'd of High Treason. In the Year 1273. he Compos'd a Book concerning the Union of the Greek and Latin Churches. He liv'd several Years in the ensuing Century, when he dy'd is uncertain. His History is divided into Thirteen Books, which contain what occur'd under the Emperors Michael and Andronicus Palæologus, from the Year 1258, to the Year 1308. There have been Publish'd several Extracts of it by Wolfius, at the End of the Hiſtory of Nicephorus Gregoras, Printed at Baſil, in the Year 1561. Petavius Publiſh'd a part of the reſt, with the Abridgment of the Patriarch Nicephorus, in the Year 1616. But at laſt Father Pouſſin has Publiſh'd this Hiſtory compleat, in Greek and Latin, in two Volumes in Folio, Printed at Rome in 1666, and 1669. Pachymeres is likewiſe the Author of a Commentary on the Works of Saint Dionyſius, Printed ſeveral times with the Works of the Author; and of a little Piece, concerning the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt, Publiſh'd by Allatius, in the firſt Tome of his Græcia Orthodoxa. He likewiſe Compos'd an Abridgment of Ariſtotle's Logick, Printed in Greek at Paris, in the Year 1548. in Latin at Baſil 1560. and in Greek and Latin, at Oxford, in the Year 1666. with ſeveral Pieces of Rhetorick which are in Manuſcript in the French King's Library, of which, Allatius has given us a Catalogue. The ſame Allatius obſerves, that the Style of this Author is uncorrect, and his way of Writing is too much like the Writings of the Ancient Tragick Poets, which is too bombaſtical for Hiſtory; that his Syntax is obſcure and perplex'd; but yet that he is ſmooth and Wiſe enough for an Age wherein the greateſt Extravagancies paſs'd for Wiſdom. Allatius in his Græcia Orthodoxa, has likewiſe given us a little Treatiſe of Pachymeres, againſt thoſe who maintain'd, that it was ſaid, That the Holy Ghoſt had his Eſſence from the Son, becauſe he is of the ſame Nature with the Son.

John Veccus Patriarch of Conſtantinople.

JOHN VECCUS Patriarch of Conſtantinople, Study'd theſe Points the moſt of any Greek of his time, and was one of a very piercing Genius, and Wrote well. This made Nicephorus Gregoras ſay, That there might be ſome Greeks, who had a greater inſight into Profane Learning, than John. Yet they were all Children, when compar'd to him, with reſpect to the ſubtilty of Genius, to Eloquence, and penetration of Thought in Eccleſiaſtical Points. He was at firſt very much wedded to the Opinions of the Greeks, and (as we have already hinted) very ſtrongly oppos'd the Deſign of the Union, ſet on foot by Michael Palæologus. But the Emperor having ſhut him up in a frightful Priſon, where he order'd the Works of Nicephorus Blemmidas to be put into his Hands, he chang'd his Opinion; and Collected a great many Paſſages of the Greek Fathers, which favour'd the Doctrines of the Roman Church, about the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt; of which he made an advantageous Uſe, in defending the Union, which he maintain'd by ſeveral Tracts. Allatius has Publiſh'd ſeveral of them, of which this is the Catalogue; Two Books concerning the Union of the Churches of Old and New Rome, wherein he Proves the Opinion of the Latins about the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt, by the Teſtimonies of the Greek Fathers, and Refutes the Arguments which Photius, John Fiones, Nicholas of Metona, and Theophylact make uſe of to Oppoſe it. A Tract containing Twelve Chapters, about the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt, wherein he handles the ſeveral Queſtions, and explains a great many Paſſages of the Greek Fathers on that Subject. A Letter to Alexius Agallianus Deacon of the Church of Conſtantinople, upon the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt. A Synodal Decree, wherein it is Ordered, that the Prepoſition Ex ſhould be Writ over again in a Manuſcript of a Tract of Saint Gregory Nyſſene, which had been Eras'd by the Chancery-Clerk of the Church of Conſtantinople, a profeſs'd Enemy to the Latins. His Laſt Will and Teſtament, wherein he perſiſts in his Doctrine of the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt. A Treatiſe of the Agreement of his, with the Doctrines of the Fathers. A Diſcourſe upon the Injuſtice which had been done him, by turning him out of his Patriarchial See. An Apology of that Diſcourſe againſt the Injuſtice which he had ſuffer'd, wherein he Detects the falſe Gloſſes of a certain Scribe. Another Apology, wherein he Proves, That the Re-union did not deſtroy the Cuſtoms of the Greeks. Three Books to Theodore Biſhop of Saddai about the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt. Four Books upon the ſame Subject, directed to Conſtantine. Two Diſcourſes againſt the Writings of George of Cyprus, and againſt his new Errors. The Refutation of the Remarks of Andronicus Camatera, on thoſe paſſages of Scripture relating to the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt. Thirteen Heads, or Remarks on the Words and Thoughts of the Fathers. Theſe Works are to be met with in the firſt and ſecond Tome of Allatius's Græcia Orthodoxa, who makes mention of ſeveral other Tracts of Veccus in the ſecond Book of the Agreement between the Greek and the Latin Churches, Chap 15.

George Metochita Deacon, & Conſtantine Meliteniota Arch-Deacon of the Church of Conſtantinople.

Veccus had for the Companions of his Fortune, of his Exile and of his Studies, GEORGE METOCHITA Deacon of the Church of Conſtantinople, and CONSTANTINE MELITENIOTA his Arch-Deacon, who Compos'd ſeveral Works in the defence of the ſame Doctrine and of the ſame Cauſe.

The former whoſe Style is harſh, has compos'd a Treatiſe on the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt, divided into five Diſſertations, of which Allatius has given us a Fragment in his Book of Purgatory taken out of the Fifth Book, and another Fragment out of the ſame Book in his Treatiſe againſt Hottinger. And Father Combefis has given us a Fragment taken out of the Fourth Book, in his Additions to the Bibliotheca Patrum: A Refutation of three Chapters of Planuda the Monk Publiſh'd by Allatius in the Second Tome of his Græcia Orthodoxa: The Refutation of what Manuel Nephew of Cretois wrote, Publiſh'd by the ſame Author in the ſame Tome: A Diſſertation, containing the Hiſtory of the Union of the two Churches, of which Allatius has given us ſome Fragments: An Anti-heretical Diſſertation againſt the Writings of George of Cyprus. Another Diſſertation of what was the Conſequence of the two foregoing.

The Latter (viz. Conſtantine Meliteniota) has left behind him Two Treatiſes, One concerning the Union of the Greeks and Latins, and the other about the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt, Publiſh'd by Allatius, in the Second Tome of his Græcia Orthodoxa.

Simon of Crete of the Order of Preaching Friars.

About the ſame time SIMON a Native of Crete, of the Order of Preaching Friars, Compos'd Three Treatiſes for the Latins in the form of Letters about the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt, the Firſt directed to Manuel Olobola; the Second to Sophronia; and the Third to John, Keeper of the Archives. Allatius who has ſeen them, has only left us part of this Laſt in his Treatiſe againſt Hottinger.

The

The Greek Schismaticks had likewise their Champions, who wrote in defence of their Doctrine; at the head of whom we may place GEORGE of Cyprus Sirnam'd GREGORY, Patriarch of Constantinople, who was a Man of Spirit, Eloquent and Polite in his Discourse, of great Learning and Parts, and pretty well Vers'd in the Ecclesiastical Points. His chief Piece, call'd, The Synodal Tome, which he styles The Pillar of Orthodoxy, was writ against Veccus. He likewise compos'd other Works against the Latins, divers Panegyricks, and several Letters which are to be met with in Manuscript in Libraries.

GEORGE MOSCHAMPER, Register of the Church of Constantinople, was likewise one of the Adversaries of Veccus, against whom he wrote several Tracts, which that Patriarch refuted.

George Moschamper.

CONSTANTINE ACROPOLITA LOGOTHETES, signaliz'd himself likewise by his Writings against Veccus; and so did a Monk nam'd MARK, and JOB JASITES, who compos'd a Book sometime before the other two, against a Writing of the Emperor Michael, and an Apology for Joseph.

Constantine Acropolita Logothetes, Mark, and Job Jasites.

We may likewise reckon among the Greek Authors, GREGORY ABULPHARAJE an Arabian, of the Sect of the Jacobites or Melchites, who compos'd an History of the Dynasties which ends at the 683 year of the Hegira; that is, Anno Christi 1284. He was in great esteem in the East. His Tract was Publish'd in Arabick and Latin by Dr. Pocock, and Printed at Oxford in the Year 1663.

CHAP. VI.

Of the Councils held during the Thirteenth Century.

The Councils held during the Thirteenth Century.

THere is scarce any Age wherein more Councils were held in the West, and wherein more Laws, Constitutions and Ordinances were made, than in this, of which we are giving you an History. The Popes, Arch-Bishops and Bishops, were all in a particular manner engag'd in reforming the Church, in regulating the Manners and Conduct of Ecclesiasticks, and in informing them of their Duties. This is the Subject matter of most of the Canons and Ordinances of the Councils and Synods held in this Century. Therein the manner how the Clerks ought to be habited, and the Life they ought to lead, are adjusted; the Luxury and the Disorders of several are Condemned with the utmost Severity. Therein they have a great many Instructions about the Administration of the Sacraments, the Celebration of Mass, and the Ceremonies of the Church. There the Bishops, Priests and the other Clergy are inform'd of their Functions and Office. Therein Plurality of Benefices is Prohibited, and Residence Enjoyn'd and a great many Proviso's made about the Collation of Benefices. Therein a great many Laws are Enacted relating to Ecclesiastical Causes, and to prevent the Abuses which several made of the Commissions they took out of the Holy See. Therein are Renew'd and Confirm'd the Privileges and Immunities of the Clergy, and the Penalties inflicted on those who offer any Violence to their Persons or Estates, or seise upon their Tithes. Therein new Methods are found out to Punish Hereticks, and to support the INQUISITION lately set up. Therein Sorcerers and Usurers, are Condemned. Therein all the Faithful are enjoyn'd to be present at the Parochial Mass on Festivals and Sundays, and to confess themselves and receive the Communion at least once a Year. These are the Principal Matters treated of in the Canons of the Councils of which we are going to give you a Particular Account according to the Order of Time wherein they were held.

The Council of Sens in the Year 1198.

Michael Corbeil, Arch-Bishop of Sens, being come to the Town of La Charité, at the instance of the Bishop of Auxerre, whether the Bishops of Nevers and Meaux were likewise come, and having made enquiry what Hereticks there were in that Place, they found that Reginald Abbot of Saint Martin at Nevers, and the Dean of the Cathedral Church of that City were accus'd of Heresie, and that there were a great many Accusers and Witnesses against them. They Suspended them, and Cited them to Auxerre, where they made their Appearance. The Abbot would not make his Defence, but appeal'd to the Holy See before his Process was drawn up. The Arch-Bishop of Sens without regarding this Appeal, continu'd the drawing up his Process, and cited him to the Council which was to be held at Sens. The Tryal of the Dean was likewise referr'd to that Council, that so they might have time to receive the Depositions of Witnesses on both sides.

The Council was held at Sens in the Year 1198, and the Bishops of Troyes, Auxerre and Nevers were there present. The Abbot of St. Martin appear'd before these Prelates, and endeavour'd to make his Defence; but seeing his Affair was like to have no success, he renew'd his Appeal. Tho' it was against all Form, and the Bishops were not oblig'd to take any notice of it; yet they would not pronounce any thing against him upon the account of Heresie, but condemn'd him for other Crimes whereof he stood Convicted, and for the Scandal he gave, and depos'd him for ever. They afterwards sent to the Pope the Depositions drawn against him; which imported, that he had asserted, That the Body of Jesus Christ went into the Draught, and that all Men would one day be saved.

As to the Dean, there were not Evidences strong enough to Convict and Condemn him, but since there were a great many Presumptions against him, because of his intimacy with Hereticks; they would not give him Absolution, but sent him to Rome, Innocent III. after he had heard him, and examin'd his Process, order'd that he should clear himself by the Testimony of Fourteen Witnesses, and wrote

The Council of Sens 1198. to the Arch-Biſhop of Sens, that he would admit him to clear himſelf, and reſtore tohim his Benefice after he had done it. The Abbot of St. Martin having likewiſe remov'd his Cauſe to Rome, the Pope referr'd him to Peter, Cardinal of St. Mary his Legate in France, and to Odo Biſhop of Parn. We are inform'd of this Piece of Hiſtory by the Letters of Innocent III. and by the Chronicon of Auxerre, wherein 'tis ſaid, that thoſe two Hereticks were of the Sect of the Publicans.

The Council of Dalmatia, in the Year 1199.

The Council of Dalmatia, 1199 TWo Legates of Pope Innocent III. in Dalmatia, one of whom nam'd John, being only a Chaplain, and the other call'd Simon a Sub-deacon, made Twelve Orders for the Clergy of that Kingdom, wherein they prohibited Simony, renew'd the Law of the Celibacy of Eccleſiaſticks, fix'd the Times of Ordinations and the Intervals betwixt them, approv'd of the Ancient dividing of the Church-Revenues into four Parts, enjoyn'd the Secrecy of Confeſſion, provided for the ſecurity of Eccleſiaſticks by declaring thoſe Excommunicated who abus'd them, and by prohibiting them from being carry'd before ſecular Judges; prohibited Marriages between Relations to the Fourth Degree; enjoyn'd Clerks to have the Clerical Tonſure; condemn'd the Laicks who collated Benefices, and thoſe who receiv'd them from their Hands; excommunicated thoſe who retain'd the Treaſures of the Church, and ſuch who left their Wives; prohibited Baſtards from being admitted into Holy Orders, and forbad the Ordaining any one who was not full Thirty Years Old.

The Council of London in the Year 1200.

The Council of London, 1200. Hubert Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury call'd a Council at London in Weſtminſter-Caſtle againſt the Prohibitions which the Earl of Eſſex Lord Chancellor of England had made, wherein he Publiſh'd ſeveral Injunctions.

By the Firſt he orders, That the Words of the Canon of the Maſs ſhall be pronounc'd diſtinctly and ſincerely by the Prieſts, without relying too much upon them.

In the Second, He prohibits Prieſts from ſaying two Maſſes a day without urgent Neceſſity, and when a Prieſt ſhall be oblig'd to Celebrate twice, he enjoyns that after the firſt Celebration he ſhall take care to drink up what is left in the Chalice, to wipe his Fingers, to waſh them, and to take care to have Water to Waſh after the Second time of Celebrating, at leaſt that there ſhould not be any Deacon or any other Miniſter aſſiſting at the firſt Celebration, who ſhould be capable of this Ablution. He likewiſe Orders, That the Euchariſt ſhall be kept in a proper and decent Box, and ſhall be carry'd to the Sick, cover'd over with a White Cloth, a Taper and Croſs being carry'd before it; and that it ſhall not be given but in publick, and only to thoſe who deſire it.

The Third imports, That ſuch Children as are expos'd ſhall be Baptiz'd; that no Perſon ſhall be preſented to Confirmation by his Brother, by his Mother, or his Uncle, or his Mother-in-Law; and that Deacons ſhall not Adminiſter Baptiſm, or enjoyn Pennance, unleſs in caſe of neceſſity.

The Fourth enjoyns the Prieſts in inflicting of Pennances to conſider the Circumſtances and the Qualities of the Sins, and the Condition of the Perſons, and to take care not to impoſe any Pennance which may diſcover the Crime; as for inſtance, not to make a Woman ſuſpected by her Husband. He prohibits Prieſts who have fall'n into any Sin to approach the Altar to Celebrate Maſs before they have confeſs'd their Sins. And Laſtly, He Orders, That the Prieſts ſhould not enjoyn the Laicks as a Pennance, to Order ſo many Maſſes to be ſaid for them. The other Conſtitutions of this Council, are taken out of the Lateran Council under Alexander III.

The Council of Lambeth, in the Year 1206.

The Council of Lambeth, 1206 IN the Year 1206, Stephen of Langton, Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, held a Synodal Aſſembly at his Palace of Lambeth, wherein he made Three Inſtitutions: The Firſt, about the Right of Mortmain which was paid to Churches: The Second againſt Drunken Clubs; and the Third to prohibit Prieſts from ſaying above one Maſs a day, except in the Chriſtmaſs or Eaſter Holy-days, or when a Curate is oblig'd to bury a Corps in his Church, in which Caſe, he who celebrates ought not to receive the Ablution but at the laſt Maſs.

The Conſtitutions of Cardinal Gallo, drawn up in the Year 1208.

The Conſtitutions of Cardinal Gallo, in the Year 1208. Gallo Cardinal Deacon of St. Mary's, who liv'd under the Pontificate of Innocent III. and was ſent by that Pope as his Legate into France, has left us ſeveral excellent Conſtitutions about the Behaviour of the Clergy drawn up in the Year 1208.

In the Firſt, he condemns all the Prieſts and other Eccleſiaſticks who kept in their Houſes ſuſpicious Women, excepting thoſe Clerks who were of the Minor Orders, who might marry, but not hold their Benefices with their Wives. He orders, That the Eccleſiaſticks ſhould be admoniſh'd not ſo much as to keep their Mothers, or their Wives, or any of their Neareſt Relations in their Houſes.

In the Second he prohibits under pain of Excommunication, the demanding any thing for Baptiſm, Burial, Benediction, and the reſt of the Sacraments of the Church; and yet he allows, that Laicks ſhould be admoniſh'd not to refuſe out of a Motive of Avarice, what the Faithful were us'd to give out of Devotion to teſtifie the reſpect they bore to the Sacraments.

The Third and Fourth prohibit the Clergy and Beneficed Perſons from wearing red Habits, or ſuch as were made in the faſhion of the Laicks Habits.

The

The Fifth prohibits Monks from wearing ſumptuous Robes, or of any other Colour than Black.
The Sixth prohibits the Clerks and Monks from being Uſurers or Merchants under the Penalty of Excommunication.
The Seventh enjoyns the Superiours to put theſe Conſtitutions in Execution.
The Eighth and Ninth import, That they ſhall admoniſh the Scholars to obſerve them, and if they will not, then they ſhall be declar'd Excommucate by the Chancellor, who ſhall have no correſpondence with them till they have made ſatisfaction, and receiv'd Abſolution from the Biſhop, or in the Biſhop's Abſence from the Abbot of St. Victor. Laſtly, He enjoyns the School-maſters to explain theſe Conſtitutions themſelves. Theſe laſt Articles ſhew, that theſe Orders were made at Paris.

The Conſtitutions of Cardinal Gallo, 1208.

The Council of Avignon in the Year 1209.

IN the Year 1209, Hugh Raymond Biſhop of Riez, and Milo Legates of the Holy See, held a Council at Avignon the 6th of September, at which were preſent the Arch-Biſhops of Vienna, Arles, Ambrun and Aix, with Twenty Biſhops, ſeveral Abbots and ſeveral Curates. There they made theſe following Conſtitutions.

The Council of Avignon, 1209

By the Firſt, Biſhops are enjoyn'd to Preach the Word of God, and cauſe it to be Preach'd in their Dioceſſes.
The Second imports, That the Biſhops ſhall make uſe of Cenſures (if occaſion require) to oblige the Earls, Lords and other Perſons to ſwear, That they will extirpate the Hereticks, and turn the Jews out of all manner of Offices.
The Third, That Uſurers ſhall be Excommunicated.
The Fourth, That the Jews ſhall be hinder'd from exacting Uſury, from working on Sundays, and from eating Fleſh on days of Abſtinence.
The Fifth, Orders the paying of Tithes to the Eccleſiaſticks, and forbids the Alienation of them.
The Sixth Prohibits unjuſt Exactions and Taxes, made by the Lords without the Authority of the Prince; and Orders, That the Territories of thoſe Lords who exact them ſhall be interdicted.
The Seventh ptohibits Laicks under Pain of Excommunication, from exacting any Taxes from the Clergy, and from ſeizing upon the Eſtates of Biſhops or Eccleſiaſticks after their Death.
The Eighth likewiſe Prohibits the Laicks from intermeddling with the Elections, or from hindering the freedom of them.
The Ninth, Prohibits the Building of Churches Fortify'd with Caſtles, and enjoins the Fortifications of ſuch as have them, to be Demoliſh'd, except ſuch as are neceſſary for the Repulſing the Pagans.
The Tenth, Confirms the Laws made for the preſervation of Peace, and condemns the Arragoneſe, the Barbanzoneſe and Routiers, who diſturb it.
The Eleventh, Enjoins the Eccleſiaſtical Judges, ſpeedily and with Reſolution to Diſpatch the Cauſes which ſhall brought before them.
The Twelfth, is againſt the forwardneſs of ſome in taking off an Excommunication or Interdiction. Tis declared according to a Decretal of Pope Innocent III. That no Excommunication made for ſome Dammage done, ſhall be taken off, till ſuch time as the Excommunicate Perſon ſhall Swear to make Reparation; and if it be for having committed a default in Judgment, till ſuch time as he likewiſe Swear to appear before the Judge
The Thirteenth, Contains a new Law againſt Perjured Perſons, by which the Abſolution of thoſe who are guilty of that Crime, is reſerv'd to the Pope, as well as the Abſolution of Sacrilegious Perſons and Incendaries.
The Fourteenth, Renews the Law of the Lateran Council to oblige the Collators of Benefices to Preſent within Six Months.
The Fifteenth, Prohibits Biſhops, Abbots, and other Superiors from allowing the Monks to hold any thing by way of Property; and the rather, becauſe the Pope himſelf cannot allow it, as Innocent III. has declared in one of his Decretals.
The Sixteenth, is againſt thoſe who exerciſe any Violence, and take Men by force.
The Seveteenth, Prohibits the allowing of Dancing in Churches on the Vigils of Feſtivals, or the ſinging of Profane Songs.
The Eighteenth, is about the Habits of Monks; it is order'd, That the Monks ſhall have ſuch an Habit and Tonſure as is conformable to their State, that their Cloths ſhall be of plain Stuff, of a modeſt Colour, and with Sleeves. And with reſpect to Seculars, that they ſhall have a Coronet, and cloſe Habits, but neither Red, nor Green, nor made with Silk.
The Nineteenth, imports That the Superiors and the other Clergy, ſhall be promoted to Holy Orders according to the Mandamus of their Biſhop; and that thoſe that are in Holy Orders, ſhall not engage themſelves in Civil Offices, nor make Cabals.
The Twentieth, Declares the Relations to the Fourth Degree of thoſe who Murder'd Peter of Chateauneuf Legate of the Holy See, and Geofrey Canon of Geneva, incapable of holding Benefices.
The Laſt, is an Injunction to the Arch-Biſhops and Biſhops, to take care that the foregoing Conſtitutions be obſerv'd.

The Council of Paris 1212.

Robert Corceo Cardinal and Legate of the Holy See, Held a Council at Paris, in the Year 1212. wherein he publish'd several Constitutions, relating to the Life, Manners and Conduct of Ecclesiasticks, which are divided into Four Parts: The First contains those which relate to the Secular Clergy; the Second, those which relate to the Regulars; the Third, those which relate to the Nuns, Abbesses and Abbots; and the Fourth, those which concern the Arch-Bishops and Bishops.

1. He orders the Secular Clergy to be Modest in their external Behaviour, to wear their Hair cut round, to abstain from frequent and dangerous Conversations in the Church or in the Choir, from useless walking in the Fields, and not to depart the Choir during Divine Service.

2. He forbids any Distributions to be made to those who are at the beginning and end of the Service, and are absent in the middle.

3. He prohibits the Clergy from keeping Hounds or Hawks, and having magnificent Equipages.

4. He prohibits them from having Women in their Houses.

5. He enjoins them to be submissive to their Superior, to Confess themselves to him, and no other, unless it be with his Consent.

6. He forbids the Clergy who have Benefices, the exercising the Function of Advocates, for Money, or out of any base Design.

7. He prohibits Ecclesiasticks from swearing that they will Lend nothing, nor be Security for any Man, and declares such Oaths null.

8. He would not that such Preachers should be tolerated, who Preach to get Money, and to whom Pledges are given for so doing, let them have Relicks about them, or not: He would have only those to Preach, who are approv'd by their Bishop; and prohibits the Preachings of others.

9. He orders that unknown Priests should not be suffer'd to say Mass.

10. That one should not admit to the Communion, or Bury any Excommunicated, Interdicted, or unknown Person, or one of another Parish.

11. To suppress the enormous Avarice of Priests, he orders that Laicks should not be oblig'd to bequeath any thing, by their Last Will and Testament, for the saying of Masses, and that no Contract should be made, nor any thing requir'd for Saying them, under what pretence soever. He forbids the great number of Yearly Masses, which were too great a burden to the Priests, and condemns those frivolous Masses, which some Said only for Form's sake.

12. He prohibits those who have Churches by way of Property, from Farming them out for the injuring of others. He orders that the Priests shall not hear Confessions in a Church, without the leave of the Superior, or of him who has the Cure of the Parish, unless in case of Necessity.

21. Laſtly, to Puniſh that Diſorder with ſeverity, according to the Rule made in the Lateran Council on that Subject.

The Council of Montpellier in the Year 1215.

The Council of Montpellier 1215.

IN the Council held at Montpellier, in the Year 1215, by Peter of Benevento Cardinal, upon the Affair of the Earl of Montfort, they Publiſh'd Forty ſix Decrees.

The Four firſt relate to the manner how the Biſhops and the other Clergy ought to be Habited. It is therein order'd, That the Biſhops ſhall wear a Linnen-Veſt, and a long Habit ſew'd on their Shoulders, and ty'd with Ribbans on their Breaſt. That the Canons and other Benefic'd Perſons, ſhall not make uſe of any guilded Loops or Shoes, and that they ſhall not frequent the Court, or Taverns, nor have any familiar Converſe with Women; that they wear no colour'd, or cloſe-body'd Coats. That the Arch-Deacons and others promoted to any Dignity in Cathedral, or Collegiate Churches, ſhall wear a long Habit cloſed from the Top, whether it be of Woollen or Linnen: That the Curates ſhall obſerve the ſame thing: That the Benefic'd Clerks ſhall wear a round Coronet about their Heads, that ſo the Hair above and below may be parted by an equal Circle.

The Three next relate to the Manners of the Clergy. He forbids them to Lend upon Uſury, or to keep Hawks.

The Eighth, prohibits the giving Prebends to Laicks.

The Two next, provide for the Execution of the former.

In the Eleventh and Twelfth, the Biſhops are enjoin'd to beſtow Benefices Gratis on Perſons capable of Holding them, and are Prohibited from granting them to Young Perſons, who are as yet in the leſſer Orders.

The Two next, relate to the Abbots and Monks, and contain the Ordinances ſo often repeated at that time, about the Modeſty which they ought to have in their Habits, their Renouncing of all Property, the forbidding the Exacting of any thing for Admittance into a Monaſtery, the prohibition of being Advocates, the Alms which they ought to give to the Poor of what is remaining at their Tables.

The Five next, concern the Regular Canons. They are enjoin'd to wear great Coronets, and the Monks to wear larger; to be meanly ſhod, not to go out of the Monaſtery wherein they are to enter into another; to have Surplices over their Habits, and when they Travel a cloſe black Caſſock; and to give nothing for a Prebend.

By the Twenty nineth, the Prieſts and Monks are Prohibited to admit of Uſurers, Excommunicated, and Interdicted Perſons to the Communion, or to give them Burial.

In

In the Thirtieth and Thirty first, it is enjoined, That three Monks at least, should be put into the Priories, and if the Revenues be not sufficient to maintain them, more should be united to them, that so there might be in each a Prior and two Monks. The Councils of Montpeler 1215.

The next, are Laws for the Observation and Preservation of Peace.

In the Last, the Arch-Bishops and Bishops are ordered to have a Priest, and two or three Laicks in each Parish, who are oblig'd by Oath, if need be, to declare to the Bishop, the Lords and Judges of the Place, the Hereticks which they have discover'd in their Quarter.

The Fourth General Lateran Council, Held under Pope Innocent III. in the Year 1215.

THis Council was Appointed by Innocent III. the 20*th.* of April 1213. to be Held two Years and an half after; that is, just the beginning of November, in the Year 1215. The Pope in his Letters of Indiction, gives his Reasons, why he thought that Council necessary, viz. The recovering of the Holy-Land, and the Reformation of the Catholick Church. He saies, That whereas those two Things affect the General State of the Church, he had resolv'd according to the Advice of his Brethren, and other judicious Persons, to call a General Council for the Salvation of Souls, for the eradicating of Vice, and planting of Virtue, to correct Irregularities, reform the Manners, condemn Heresies, put a stop to Divisions, establish Peace, prevent Outrages, re-establish Liberty, and to engage the Princes and People to Retrieve the Holy Land: That in the Interim, till the Council should meet, he had taken care to inform himself of the Abuses which needed Reformation, and to send Persons into the several Provinces, to dispose them for the Expedition to the Holy-Land. He enjoins the Arch-Bishops and Bishops to come to the Conncil (excepting one or two Bishops who should remain in each Province) and those who could not come in Person, to send Deputies, and admonishes them, to order all the Chapters to send likewise their Deputies thither. In the mean time he recommended to them, the diligent Enquiring into whatever was necessary to be Reformed or Amended, in their Provinces, that so they might speak of it in the Council, and to Contribute all they could towards the promoting the Expedition to the Holy Land. This Circular Letter was directed to the Patriarchs, Arch-Bishops, Bishops, and Soveraign Princes of all Christendom. The IV. General Lateran Council held 1215.

The Council met at Rome in the Church of St. Saviour, on the time prefix'd (in November 1215.) and consisted of Four hundred and twelve Bishops in Person, near Eight hundred Abbots and Priors, and a great many Deputies of the absent Prelates, or of the Chapters. The Latin Patriarchs of Constantinople and Jerusalem were there in Person: The Patriarch of Antioch who was sick, sent a Bishop thither; and there came a Deacon the Deputy of the Patriarch of Alexandria, which was then under the power of the Sarazens. The Ambassadors of the Emperor of Constantinople, of the King of Sicily the Emperor Elect, of the Kings of France, England, Hungary, Jerusalem, Cyprus, Arragon, and of the other Princes, were there.

The Pope open'd the Session by Preaching on those Words of our Saviour, With desire have I desired to eat the Passeover with you. He therein took notice of three sorts of Passeovers which he desir'd to Celebrate with the Fathers of the Council, the Corporeal, the Spiritual, and the Eternal: The Corporeal, which was the passing from one Place to another, for the Deliverance of Jerusalem; the Spiritual, which was the passing from one State to another, by the Reformation of the Church; and the Eternal, which is the passing from the Temporal State to the Glory of Heaven. Upon the first Head, he exhorts the Ecclesiastscks to do all they could for the succouring of the Holy Land. Upon the Second, he exhorts them to make use of Spirstual Punishments on the Delinquents, that so they might reduce them from their Error. He exhorts them in particular, to Correct the Ecclesiasticks; because the Disorder proceeded chiefly from the Clergy, whose evil Example the People follow'd. He observes, That from hence chiefly proceed the Evils which infest the Church of God. "'Tis this (saies he) "that overthrows the Faith, disfigures Religion, destroys Liberty, treads Justice under Foot, increases "the number of Hereticks, makes the Schismaticks Insolent, the Infidels Proud and the Saracens "Powerful. He concludes all with the third Passeover, which is the passing to Glory, where he Prays he may one Day meet with them. He Preach'd likewise another Sermon to the Fathers of the Council, which is only a Moral Exhortation.

Afterwards he Orders the Reading in a full Council the Chapters or Canons upon the Discipline of the Church, which were already drawn up. Matthew Paris saies, That those Canons seem'd tolerable to some of the Prelates, but grievous to others. His Words are these, Facto prius ab ipso Papa exhortationis Sermone, recitata sunt in pleno Concilio Capitula Septuaginta quæ aliis placabilia, aliis videbantur onerosa. Let the Case be how it will, 'tis certain, That these Canons were not made by the Council, but by Innocent III. who presented them to the Council ready drawn up, and order'd them to be Read, and that the Prelates did not enter into any Debate upon them, but that their Silence was taken for an Approbation.

These Seventy Chapters or Canons, begin with a Form of Faith, drawn up in these Terms. "We "do firmly Believe, and sincerely Confess, That there is but One True, Eternal, Immense, Omni-"potent, Immutable, Incomprehensible, Ineffable God, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, who are "Three Persons, but only One Essence, One Substance, and One Simple Nature. The Father de-"rives his Substance from none, the Son has it from the Father, and the Holy Ghost proceeds from "Both, without Beginning and without End. The Father begets, the Son is begotten, and the Holy "Ghost proceeds. They are Consubstantial and Co-equal in all things, equally Powerful, equally

The IV. General Lateran Council held, 1215.

" Eternal, One Individual Principle of all things, the Creator of things Viſible and Inviſible, Spiritual " and Corporeal, who by His Omnipotent Power, Created out of Nothing at the Beginning of Time, " and all together, two ſorts of Creatures, Spiritual and Corporeal; and afterwards the Humane " Nature, which is a Compound of Soul and Body. For the Devil and the other Dæmons were Good " when God Created them, and became by their own fault Wicked, and Man Sinned and Fell by the " ſuggeſtion of the Devil. This Holy Trinity, which is Indiviſible with reſpect to its Eſſence, and " diſtinguiſh'd according to its Perſonal Properties, has given to Mankind a Salutary Doctrine by the " Miniſtery of Moſes, the Prophets, and the other Servants of God, according to the Order and Diſpo- " ſition of Times. And at laſt Jeſus Chriſt the onely Son of God, who was Incarnate by the Power of " the whole Trinity, and Conceived of the Virgin Mary (always a Virgin) by the Power of the Holy " Ghoſt, who was true Man, made up of a reaſonable Soul and humane Body, one ſingle Perſon " compounded of two Natures, has more clearly ſhown us the Way of Life, who being Immortal and " Impaſſible as to his Divinity, as to his Humanity became Paſſible and Mortal: And he ſuffer'd for " the Salvation of Mankind on the Croſs; he Dy'd and Deſcended into Hell; is Riſen from the Dead, " and Aſcended up into Heaven; but he Deſcended in his Soul, and Roſe again with his Body, and is " Aſcended into Heaven with his Body and Soul, and ſhall come again at the End of the World, to " Judge both the Living and the Dead, and to give to all Men according to their Works, as well the " Reprobates as the Elect, who ſhall all riſe again with their own Bodies which they at preſent bear " about them, that ſo they may receive according to their Deſerts, whether they be Good or Bad; the " latter Eternal Glory with Jeſus Chriſt, and the former Eternal Damnation with the Devil. There is " but one Catholick Church of the Faithful, out of which none is Saved; wherein Jeſus Chriſt is both " Prieſt and Sacrifice, whoſe Body and Blood are contain'd really in the Sacrament of the Altar un- " der the Species of Bread and Wine; the Bread being Tranſubſtantiated into the Body of Jeſus Chriſt, " and the Wine into his Blood by the Power of God, that ſo to render the Myſtery of the Unity " perfect, we might receive of His Nature what he receiv'd of Ours. No Perſon may Conſecrate the " Sacrament, but the Prieſt who has receiv'd Lawful Ordination, by the power of the Keys of the " Church, which Jeſus Chriſt has given to his Apoſtles and their Succeſſors. The Sacrament of Ba- " ptiſm, which is Conſecrated by Invocation of the Trinity, Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt, on the " Water, is the Cauſe of Salvation as well of Infants as of Adult Perſons, when 'tis Conferr'd accord- " ing to the Form of the Church, whoever it be that Adminiſters it. If any one falls into Sin after " Baptiſm, he may be always reſtor'd to Grace by a true Repentance: Not only Virgins and thoſe who " live Continently; but alſo Marry'd Perſons, who pleaſe God by their Faith and Good Life, merit " Eternal Life. This is the Abſtract of the Doctrine of the Church contain'd in the Profeſſion of Faith of this Council. Which is the firſt Chapter or Canon of it.

In conſequence to this, the Council condemns in the Second Chapter, the Treatiſe Compos'd by the Abbot Joachim againſt Peter Lombard, about the Unity of the Eſſence of the Trinity; becauſe that Abbot had treated him as a Fool and an Heretick, for having ſaid in his Book of Sentences, That the Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt, are one Supreme or Soveraign Being, which is neither begetting, begotten nor proceeding: A Propoſition from whence he pretends it follows, That there is a Quaternity in the Godhead, namely Three Perſons of the Trinity, and one common Eſſence. The Council explains and confirms the Doctrine of the Maſter of the Sentences, and rejects that of Joachim; who pretended, That the Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt, where not the ſame thing, tho' they be one Subſtance and one Nature; which yet he explain'd in ſuch a manner, that he ſeem'd to admit of only a Specifick Unity, or reſemblance between thoſe Three Perſons. The Council declar'd thoſe to be Hereticks, who would maintain the Opinion of the Abbot Joachim. However, they order'd, That the Condemnation ſhould be no prejudice to the Monaſtery of Flora, of which Abbot Joachim was the Founder, becauſe there they liv'd Regularly, and put in practice a very good Diſcipline; but eſpecilly becauſe that Abbot had ſubmitted his Books to the judgment of the Holy See, and had proteſted in Writing, That his Belief was the ſame with that of the Church of Rome, which is the Mother and Miſtreſs of all the Faithful. The Council likewiſe, condemn'd in the ſame Chapter, the Errors of Amaury, of whom 'tis ſaid, That the Father of Lies, had ſo obſcur'd his Underſtanding, that his Doctrine may rather paſs for Nonſenſe than Hereſie.

In the Third Canon, they Excommunicated and Anathematiz'd all the Heretieks, who oppoſe the Catholick and Orthodox Faith, as before Explain'd: And 'tis therein Order'd, That the Hereticks ſhall be deliver'd up after their Condemnation to the Secular Powers, or to their Officers, to be Puniſh'd according to their Demerits, the Clerks being firſt Degraded: That their Goods ſhall be Confiſcated, if they be Laicks: And if Clerks, then they ſhall be apply'd to the uſe of the Church: That thoſe who lye under violent ſuſpicions of Hereſie ſhall be likewiſe Anathematiz'd, if they do not give proofs of their Innocence, and they ſhall be avoided, till they have given ſatisfaction, and if they be in a State of Excommunication during a Year, they ſhall be condemn'd as Hercticks: That the Lords ſhall be admoniſh'd and oblig'd by Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures, to take an Oath, that they will Extirpate Hereticks and Excommunicate Perſons, who ſhall be within their Territories: That if they neglect to do it after Admonition, they ſhall be Excommunicated by the Metropolitan and Biſhops of the Province, and that in caſe they perſiſt a Year without making ſatisfaction, the Soveraign Pontiff ſhall be advertis'd thereof, that ſo he may declare their Vaſſals abſolv'd from their Oath of Fealty, and beſtow their Lands upon ſuch Catholicks as will Seize upon them, who ſhall be the Lawful Poſſeſſors of them, by Extirpating Hereticks, and preſerving the purity of the Faith in them; but without prejudice to the Right of the Superiour Lord, provided he offer no obſtruction or hinderance to the putting this Ordinance in Execution. The ſame Indulgences are granted to thoſe Catholicks, as shall undertake to Extirpate Hereticks by force of Arms, as are granted to those who go to the Holy Land. They Excommunicated those who entertain'd, protected, or supported Hereticks, and declare, That those who shall be Excommunicated upon that account, if they do not make satisfaction within a Year, shall be declar'd Infamous, and divested of all Offices, as well as of Votes in the Elections; that they shall not be admitted as Evidences; that they shall be depriv'd of the Faculty of making a Will, or succeeding to an Estate; and Lastly, That they may not perform the Functions of any Office. 'Tis likewise farther order'd, That those who will not avoid the Company of such Persons as are by the Church denounc'd Excommunicate, shall be Excommunicated themselves, till they have given satisfaction. But above all, Ecclesiasticks are forbidden to Administer the Sacraments to them, to give them Christian Burial, to receive their Alms or Oblations, upon pain of being Suspended from the Functions of their Orders, wherein they may not be re-establish'd without a special Indulto from the Pope. The same Punishment is likewise inflicted on the Regulars, and besides this, that they be not any longer tolerated in the Dioceſs, wherein they shall have committed such a Fact. All those are Excommunicated who shall dare to Preach without having receiv'd a Licence from the Holy See, or a Catholick Bishop. Lastly, The Arch-Bishops and Bishops, are oblig'd to visit in Person, or by their Arch-Deacons or by other Persons, once or twice a Year, the Dioceſſes where it is reported that there are any Hereticks, and to put a certain number of Inhabitants upon their Oath, to discover to the Bishop such Hereticks as may be detected. They are likwise enjoin'd to cause the Accused to appear, and to punish them if they do not clear themselves, or if they relapse after they have been clear'd. Lastly, The Bishops are threatned to be Depos'd if they neglect to Purge their Dioceſs from Hereticks.

The IV. General Lateran Council held, 1215.

The Fourth Canon relates to the Greeks. It imports, That tho' the Council would honour and favour the Greeks, who threw themselves under the Obedience of the Holy See, by maintaining as far as possible their Customs and Ceremonies, yet it could not tolerate, what might be prejudicial to the Salvation of Souls and to the Ecclesiastical Dignity: That the Greeks, after they had shaken off their Obedience to the Holy See, have had so great an abhorrence to the Latins, that they would not Celebrate on the Altars whereon the Latins had Celebrated, till they had wash'd them; that they had Rebaptiz'd those who had been Baptiz'd by the Latins. They are here forbidden to do any such thing for the future, and are exhorted to conform themselves to the Church of Rome, that there may be one Flock under one Shepherd. They who shall for the future undertake the like, are menac'd with Excommunication and Depoſition.

The Fifth regulates the Order of Patriarchs, and orders, That next to the Church of Rome, which has the Primacy over all other Churches according to the Appointment of our Saviour, the Church of Constantinople shall have the First Place, that of Alexandria the Second, the Church of Antioch the Third, and that of Jerusalem the Fourth: And the Patriarchs of those Churches are Impower'd to grant the Pall to the Arch-Bishops who depend on them, and to demand of them a Profession of Faith and of Obedience to the Holy See, after they themselves have receiv'd the Pall from the Holy See (which is here styl'd the Ensign of the Plenitude of the Pastoral Power) and have taken an Oath of Fealty and Obedience to it. They are likewise allow'd to have the Cross carry'd every where before them, except in the City of Rome, and other Places where the Pope shall be in Person, or his Legate, having the Marks of the Apostolick Dignity. They are also allow'd the Privilege of Trying the Appeals of all the Provinces within their Jurisdiction, except Appeals to the Holy See, to which all the World ought to pay a Deference.

In the Sixth it is order'd, That according to ancient Custom, the Metropolitans shall every Year call Provincial Councils, wherein they shall Treat of the Reformation of Manners, especially of those of the Clergy, and cause the Canons to be Read over, especially those that are made in this Council, and that the Bishops shall take care to have in their Dioceſſes several prudent and grave Persons, who without exercising any Jurisdiction, shall inform themselves of such things as are necessary to be Reform'd or Corrected, and shall make their Report to the Metropolitan and his Suffragans in the next Council, that so a Remedy may be apply'd.

The Seventh, Enjoins the Ordinaries to be careful in Reforming the Manners of the Clergy within their Dioceſſes, and to correct the Abuses and Disorders; and that they might with the greater freedom, it declares, That they may not be hinder'd in doing it, under the pretence of any contrary Custom, or by any Appeal. With respect to the disorders of the Canons of Cathedral Churches, which the Chapters were us'd to Correct; 'tis here order'd, That they shall be Corrected at the time prefix'd by the Bishop, if not, that then he shall make use of Ecclesiastical Censures to correct them: That he shall likewise take care to Reform the other Irregularities of his Clergy, by observing in all things the Rule and Order prescrib'd him: That moreover, if the Canons forbear to Say the Office in their Church, without any evident Reason, the Bishop shall not forbear to Celebrate, and upon his Complaint the Metropolitan shall make use of Ecclesiastical Censures against them. Lastly, The Ordinaries are admonish'd in this Canon, not to abuse this Ordinance, to get any profit to themselves by it, or to oppress those of their Dioceſs.

The Eighth Canon, Regulates the Proceſs which ought to be minded in the Accusations of Ecclesiasticks. 'Tis therein declar'd, That 'tis not to be tolerated to Accuse them lightly: That they ought to be present when they are inform'd against, unless they absent themselves out of Contumacy: That they ought to be told the Heads of the Information against them, and to know their Accusers, and to be admitted to put in their Replications and Lawful Exceptions: That there are three ways of proceeding against a Criminal, by way of Accusation, by Denunciation and by Inquisition. That the Accusation, ought to be usher'd in by the complaint of the Accuser, the Denunciation, by a Charitable ritable Admonition, and the Inquiſition, by common Report: That yet it was not requiſite to obſerve this Method preciſely, with reſpect to Regulars, and that one might Diveſt them of their Offices when it was expedient, without obſerving all theſe Formalities.

The Ninth orders, That the Biſhops of Dioceſſes, wherein there are People of different Nations, and who have different Cuſtoms, ſhall take care to provide Perſons who may Celebrate Divine Service according to thoſe different Rites, without putting themſelves to the trouble of having two Biſhops in one and the ſame Dioceſs.

The Tenth imports, That the Biſhops ſhall take care to have in the Churches of their Dioceſſes Eminent Perſons to Preach the Word of God, and Adminiſter the Sacrament of Pennance.

The Eleventh Confirms the Decree of the Council of the Lateran, Held under Alexander III. importing, That there ſhall be in all Cathedral Churches a Maſter to Teach Gratis the Clergy of thoſe Churches, and the other Poor Schollars, on whom they ſhall beſtow the Revenue of a Benefice; and extends this Rule to other Churches, that ſo the ſame might be obſerv'd for the Maſter of a Grammar-School: And that in the Metropolitan Church, beſides the Grammar-Maſter, there ſhall be a Divine to Teach the Prieſts and other Eccleſiaſticks the Holy Scripture, and what relates to the Cure of Souls; that they ſhall beſtow on him the Revenue of a Benefice, tho' he might be a Canon at the ſame time, and that he ſhall hold it ſo long as he ſhall be a Teacher: That if the Metropolitan Church have not wherewithal conveniently to keep a Theologician, and a Grammar-Maſter, the Theologician ſhall be kept there, and the Grammar-Maſter provided for in another Church.

The Twelfth imports, That every three Years there ſhall be Held in all Kingdoms or Provinces, without prejudice to the Rights of the Dioceſan Biſhops, Chapters of Abbots, and Priors of Monaſteries, who never were uſed to hold any ſuch before: That they ſhall invite to them two Abbots of the Order of Ciſteaux, who were accuſtom'd to hold ſuch: That Four of them ſhall Preſide over the Chapter, which ſhall be Held ſeveral Days: That there they ſhall lay out themſelves upon Reforming the Order, and making the Regular Diſcipline to Flouriſh: That whatever ſhall be Order'd with the Approbation of the Four Preſidents, ſhall be Inviolably Obſerv'd notwithſtanding any Oppoſition, or Appeal whatever: That all thoſe who come to the Chapter ſhall live in Common whilſt it is Held: That there they ſhall Nominate Viſiters to Viſit the Monaſteries of Men and Women, and to Correct and Reform whatever ſhall want it in them; ſo that if they find themſelves oblig'd to Depoſe any Superior, they ſhall acquaint the Biſhop of him, who ſhall not fail to Depoſe him; and in caſe he does not do it, that then they ſhould acquaint the Holy See with it. It orders the ſame thing with reſpect to Regular Canons. However it does not diſcharge the Biſhops from taking care of the Monaſteries; on the contrary, it enjoins them with the utmoſt Diligence to keep up the Diſcipline, that ſo the Viſiters may find nothing to Reform. Laſtly, it orders the Biſhops and Preſidents of Chapters to make uſe of Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures againſt the Seculars who ſhall do any wrong to the Monaſteries.

The Thirteenth prohibits all manner of Perſons from Erecting a New Order, and imports, That thoſe who would embrace the Monaſtick Life ſhall enter into an Order already approv'd; and that thoſe who are willing to Found a New Monaſtery ſhall follow one of the Rules, and be one of the Orders already approv'd. It likewiſe forbids one and the ſame Perſon to be a Monk, or Abbot of two Monaſteries.

The Fourteenth enjoins, That the Incontinent Clerks ſhall be puniſh'd: That if any one being taken up for that Crime, ſhall dare to Celebrate, he ſhall be diveſted of his Benefices and Depos'd: That the ſame Severity ſhall be uſed to Biſhops, who ſhall countenance thoſe Irregular Perſons for any Intereſt: And that the Eccleſiaſticks who are in Countries where they have Liberty to Marry, ſhall be more ſeverely puniſh'd, if they fall into the Sin of Incontinence.

The Fifteenth, Is againſt the Drunkenneſs of Eccleſiaſticks, and forbids them to go a Hunting, and to keep Hounds or Hawks.

The Sixteenth forbids them to concern themſelves in Secular Trades, eſpecially in ſuch are diſhoneſt: To go to Comedies or Farces; to frequent Publick Houſes, unleſs in a Journey, or in caſe of Neceſſity; and to play at any Games of Dice: And it enjoyns them to wear a Coronet and Tonſure ſuitable to their Quality; to have Habits clos'd before, which ſhould be neither too long nor too ſhort; not to wear colour'd Cloths, or ſuch as are ſet off with Trimming; not to wear at Church Copes with Sleeves, not to wear Claſps or Ribbans of Gold and Silver, nor Rings, unleſs by their Dignity they have a Right to wear them. It is likewiſe order'd, That Biſhops ſhall wear in Church and out of Church Surplices of Linnen, except thoſe who ought to wear the Monachal Habit; and that the Mantles which they make uſe of, ſhall be faſtned before or behind with Claſps.

The Seventeenth is againſt the Effeminacy of ſome Clerks who ſpent part of the Night in Feaſting, or in Prophane Company, ſlept till Daylight, and in Saying their Matins left out one half of the Office: And againſt thoſe who Celebrate Maſs but four times a Year, and who were preſent at it but very ſeldom, and without any manner of Devotion. Thoſe Irregularities were forbidden under pain of Suſpenſion, and the Clerks are exhorted to Celebrate the Morning and Evening-Service conſtantly and Devoutly.

The Eighteenth prohibits them from pronouncing the Sentence of Death, from aſſiſting at Executions, from writing or dictating Letters to demand the Death of any Perſon, from being Inquiſitors, from exercifing any part of Chirurgery, wherein it was neceſſary to apply Iron or Fire; from giving Benediction for the making of a Tryal by hot or cold Water, or by hot Iron.

The Nineteenth forbids the putting any Houſhold-Goods into Churches, unleſs in caſes of neceſſity; and orders, That they ſhall keep the Utenſils and Ornaments of the Church of their own.

The

The Twentieth orders, That the Holy Chriſm and the Euchariſt ſhall be kept under Lock and Key; and that if the Perſon to whoſe Care they are entruſted, leaves the Place where they are, open, he ſhall be Suſpended ab Officio for three Months, and if any Accident happen to them through his fault, he ſhall be Puniſh'd for it very ſeverely. The IV. General Lateran Council held, 1215.

The Twenty firſt is the Famous Canon which enjoins, That all the Faithful of both Sexes who are arriv'd to Years of Diſcretion, ſhall Confeſs all their Sins at leaſt once a Year to their own proper Prieſt (that is, the Curate, as appears by the Thirty ſecond Canon, where this Title is given to Curates:) That they ſhall compleat the Pennance impos'd on them, and receive the Sacrament of the Euchariſt devoutly at leaſt every Eaſter, unleſs they believe that they ought to abſtain from it for ſome time, upon ſome reaſonable Account, and with the Advice of their own proper Prieſt. Thoſe who ſhall not diſcharge this Duty, ſhall be Condemn'd to the being depriv'd of entring into the Church whilſt they Live, and of Eccleſiaſtical Burial when they Die. And it is order'd, That this Canon ſhall be often Read publickly in the Church, that ſo none may plead Ignorance in the Caſe. 'Tis here added, That if any one would confeſs his Sins to a Prieſt that is a Stranger, he ought to ask and get leave for it of his own proper Prieſt, becauſe otherwiſe he can neither bind nor unbind. The Prieſts are likewiſe admoniſh'd to be Diſcreet and Prudent, to handle like good Phyſicians the Wounds of their Patient; to pour into them Oyl and Vinegar by informing themſelves exactly of the State of the Sinner, and of the Circumſtances of his Sins; and to know what Counſel he ought to give him, and what Remedies he ought to make uſe of to Cure him, to take care never to diſcover by Word or Sign the Sins of thoſe who are Confeſs'd; and if he wants Advice in the caſe, to ask it without diſcovering the Perſon. Laſtly, That thoſe who ſhall diſcloſe any Sin that has been reveal'd to them in Confeſſion, ſhall be condemn'd not only to be Depos'd, but alſo to be Confin'd during Life in a Monaſtery, there to do Pennance for it.

The Twenty ſecond imports, That the Phyſicians of the Body ſhall Adviſe their Patients to ſend for the Phyſicians of the Soul before they Preſcribe any thing to them, that ſo they may provide for the Salvation of their Souls, before they lay out any care for the Health of their Body. It likewiſe forbids Phyſicians under pain of Excommunication to preſcribe any thing to their Patient for the Health of his Body, which may put his Soul in any danger.

The Twenty third imports, That a Cathedral or Regular Church ſhall not be vacant above three Months; and if thoſe whoſe Right it is to Elect, do not proceed to an Election within that time, they ſhall forfeit the Right of Electing Pro hac vice, which ſhall lapſe to their immediate Superior, who ſhall be oblig'd to do it within three Months.

The Twenty fourth preſcribes the Forms of Elections: Namely, That in the Preſence of all thoſe who ought to be there, three creditable Perſons be choſen out of their Body, who ſhall Collect and exactly count the Voices of all who ſhall give their Suffrages; and who having put them in Writing, ſhall immediately publiſh them, without being liable to any Appeal, that ſo he may be Elected, who has all the Votes, or the Votes of the Major and Sounder Part of the Chapter: Or that they may commit the Power of Electing to a certain Number of capable Perſons, who ſhall provide for the Vacant Church in the Name of All. The Elections made otherwiſe are declar'd Null; if they are not made by the Unanimous Vote of all the Electors as it were by Inſpiration. Theſe then are the three ways of Election, by Scrutiny, by Compromizing, and by Inſpiration. They who obſerve not this Form ſhall forfeit their Right of Election pro hac Vice. It prohibits the Conſtituting a Procurator in the Buſineſs of Election, if he who Conſtitutes be not abſent, and in a Place from whence he ought to be Summon'd, where he is detain'd by a Lawful Obſtruction, of which Oath ſhall be made; and in this Caſe 'tis allow'd to Commiſſionate one of the Body in his Place. Laſtly, It rejects clandeſtine and ſecret Elections, and enjoins, That the Election ſhall be ſolemnly publiſh'd immediately after it be made.

The Twenty fifth deprives him, who conſents to an Election made by the Authority of Secular Powers, of the Benefice to which he has been Elected, and renders him uncapable of being Elected to another: And with reſpect to thoſe who proceeded to the Election, it Suſpends them for three Years ab Officio & Beneficio, and deprives them of the Right of Electing.

The Twenty ſixth imports, That he whoſe Right it is to Confirm the Perſon Elected ought carefully to enquire into the Form of the Election, and the Perſon Elected, that in caſe the Election be according to Form, and the Perſon Elected have the Qualifications requiſite, he ſhall Confirm it. Thoſe who Confirm an unworthy Perſon, ſhall forfeit their Right of Confirming, and be Suſpended from their Benefices. The Biſhops are admoniſh'd to promote only ſuch to Holy Orders, who can acquit themſelves of their Duties worthily. As for thoſe who are under immediate Subjection to the Holy See, 'tis order'd, That if they can conveniently, they ſhall Perſonnally appear before the Pope to obtain the Confirmation of their Election, or ſhall ſend able Perſons by whom one may be inform'd of the Qualifications of the Perſon elected, and of the Form of the Election; provided notwithſtanding that thoſe who are out of Italy, if their Election be not Diſputed, ſhall have the Adminiſtration both of Spirituals and Temporals. As to the Conſecration or Benediction, 'tis declar'd, That it ſhall be given according to Cuſtom.

The Twenty ſeventh enjoins the Biſhops to Inſtruct, or cauſe thoſe to be Inſtructed on whom they Confer Prieſts-Orders, of the manner of Celebrating Divine Service, and of Adminiſtring the Sacraments. They are threatned to be Puniſh'd who ſhall for the future Ordain Ignorant Prieſts; becauſe 'tis more Eligible to have a few good, than a great many bad Miniſters.

The Twenty eighth orders, That thoſe who ſhall have ask'd and obtain'd leave to quit their Benefices, ſhall be bound to do ſo; if not, that then they ſhall be forc'd to it.

The IV. General Lateran Council held, 1215.

The Twenty ninth renews the Canon of the Lateran Council Held under Alexander III. which prohibits one and the ſame Perſon from holding ſeveral Benefices, that have the Cure of Souls; and that this may be put in Execution, it orders, That any Eccleſiaſtick who ſhall accept of a Benefice having the Cure of Souls, when he has another of the ſame Nature, ſhall forfeit his Right to the firſt, and if he will hold it, he ſhall likewiſe be turn'd out of the latter: That the Patron of the firſt Benefice ſhall forthwith beſtow it on whom he pleaſes, and if he delays Preſenting the ſpace of three Months, not only the Right of Preſenting ſhall lapſe to another, as is order'd in the former Lateran Council, but alſo that he ſhall beſtow ſo much of his Revenues on the Church, as he has gain'd by the Vacant Benefice. The ſame thing is order'd with reſpect to Perſonats, and therein 'tis prohibited the having two Perſonats in one and the ſame Church, tho' they have not the Cure of Souls. However 'tis declar'd, That the Holy See may diſpenſe with this Law with reſpect to Perſons of Merit and Learning, who ought to be Dignify'd with Conſiderable Benefices, when there ſhall be ſufficient Reaſon for it.

The Thirtieth orders, That thoſe who ſhall Collate Benefices on in-ſufficient Perſons, ſhall be Suſpended from their Right of Collating, and that this Suſpenſion ſhall not be taken off, but by the Authority of the Pope, or Patriarch.

The Thirty firſt imports, That the Children of Canons, and eſpecially Baſtards, may not have Prebends in the Churches where their Fathers are Canons.

The Thirty ſecond orders the Patrons of Parochial Churches to allow the Curates a ſufficient Part of the Revenues for their Maintenance, and enjoins the Curate to ſerve their Cures themſelves and not by Vicars, at leaſt, that a Pariſh-Church ſhall not be annex'd to a Prebend or a Dignity in which Caſe he who is the Incumbent being oblig'd to do Duty in the Great Church, ſhall ſubſtitute in his Place for the Cure a conſtant Vicar, to whom he ſhall allow a Competency. It prohibits the laying a Penſion on the Revenues of Curates.

The Thirty third orders, That the Biſhops, or their Arch-Deacons ſhall not exact the Right of Procuration, but when they ſhall Viſit in their own Perſons; that they ſhall obſerve the Regulation made in the Lateran Council. This Law likewiſe extended to the Legates and Nuncio's of the Holy See; and they who Viſit are recommended not to ſeek their own Profit, but the Glory of Jeſus Chriſt, and to apply themſelves to the Reformation of Manners and to Preaching.

The Thirty fourth prohibits the Exactions made under a pretence of paying the Duty of Procuration to Legates or any others.

The Thirty fifth prohibits the Appealing from a Judge to a Superior before he has paſs'd Sentence, unleſs there be a lawful Cauſe for ſuch an Appeal, which ſhall be repreſented to the Judge before it can be brought before the Superior; which is enjoin'd without prejudice to thoſe Conſtitutions, which order, That the greater Cauſes ſhall be referr'd to the Holy See.

The Thirty ſixth imports, That if the Judge revoke a Comminatory or Interlocutory Sentence which he has paſs'd, he may continue the drawing up of the Proceſs, when an Appeal has been made from this Sentence.

The Thirty ſeventh prohibits the granting of Commiſſions for the allowing Perſons to appeal before Judges above two days Journey diſtant from the Place where the Perſon aſſign'd is; and the obtaining ſuch Commiſſions without ſpecial Orders from the Lord of the Place.

The Thirty eighth enjoyns the Judges to have a Publick Officer, or two ſufficient Perſons, who ſhall write down all the Form of the Proceſſes, which ſhall be communicated to the Parties concern'd keeping the Minutes by them.

The Thirty ninth orders, That the Perſon who has been turn'd out of any Place, ſhall be firſt put in it again, before his Right to it be try'd.

The Fortieth imports, That the Poſſeſſion of a Year ſhall be computed from the Day of its being ſettled by a Decree; tho' the Perſon in whoſe favour Sentence is paſs'd, cannot by reaſon of the malice of his Adverſary, be put into poſſeſſion of the thing which is adjudg'd to him, or may have been turn'd out of it. It prohibits Eccleſiaſticks from committing the Tryal of Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes to Laicks.

The Forty firſt imports, That the Preſcription which is not Bona fide made ſhall be of no force, and that 'tis neceſſary that he who makes uſe of Preſcription, ſhall not remember any time when what he holds did not belong to him.

The Forty ſecond prohibits Eccleſiaſticks from enlarging their Juriſdiction to the prejudice of Secular Juſtice.

The Forty third prohibits Laicks from exacting Oaths of Fidelity from Eccleſiaſticks, who hold no Temporality of them to oblige them to it.

The Forty fourth declares, That the Conſtitutions of Princes which are prejudicial to the Rights of the Church ſhall not be obſerv'd, whether they be for the Alienation of Fiefs, or for the Incroaching on the Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction, or for any other Goods.

The Forty fifth prohibits Patrons and Vouchers of Churches from undertaking more than is allow'd them, and deprives them of the Right of Patronage, who ſhall wound or kill the Clerks of the Churches under their Patronage.

The Forty ſixth revives the Excommunication iſſu'd out by the Lateran Council againſt thoſe who exact Tallies and other Taxes from Eccleſiaſticks. Notwithſtanding it allows Biſhops in caſes of Neceſſity to engage Eccleſiaſticks to give ſomething, provided they have adviſ'd with the Pope about it firſt. It declares thoſe Sentences Null that are made by Excommunicated Perſons, and it obſerves, that thoſe who have been Excommunicated whilſt they were in an Office, are not diſcharg'd from their Excommunication for their having quitted that Office.

The

The Forty seventh regulates the Form of Excommunication as follows. The Excommunication ought to be preceded by Admonition made in the Presence of several Witnesses: It ought to be founded on a publick and reasonable Cause. If the Excommunicated Person finds himself aggriev'd, he may complain of it to the Superior Judge, who shall send him back to be absolv'd by the Judge who Excommunicated him, if there be no danger in such a delay; but if it is to be fear'd, that this Delay may have dangerous Consequences, he may himself give him Absolution. When the Injustice of the Excommunication shall be prov'd, he who has Excommunicated shall be condemn'd to repair the Damages of him who has been Excommunicated, and be punished according as his Superior Judges requisite. But if he who complains of the Excommunication does not bring any sufficient reason, he shall be condemn'd to Damages and punish'd as the Superior pleases, if he be not excusable by some probable Error, and he shall remain Excommunicated till he has made Satisfaction, or given Security for doing it. If a Judge finding himself in a mistake revoke his Sentence, and he in whose favour it was made will appeal, no notice shall be taken of such Appeal, unless the Error be such as admits of no Question: in which Case he shall absolve the Excommunicated Person, upon Condition that he will submit to the Judgment of him to whom the Appeal has been made. The IV. General Lateran-Council held, 1215.

The Forty eighth imports, That when any Person has a Judge whom he suspects, and will refuse to be Try'd by him, he shall allege the Reasons of his Suspicion before Umpires who shall be pitch'd upon, and if they think them Just, the refus'd Judge shall refer the Process to another Judge or the Superior. That if it happens that he who has received Admonition, does Appeal, and yet his Disorder be certain either by the Evidence of the Fact, or by his own Confession, or by any other way, that then no notice shall be taken of that Appeal; and in case the Crime be dubious, the accus'd shall be oblig'd in appealing to notifie before the Judge the reason of his Appeal, which ought to be such, that if it be prov'd, it shall be allow'd Lawful: That he shall be likewise oblig'd to prosecute his Appeal before the Judge in a competent time, if not, then the First Judge shall proceed against him notwithstanding his Appeal, and if he has made a wrong Appeal, he shall be sent back to the first Judge. However these Orders are not to be understood to touch the Regulars.

The Forty ninth prohibits the Excommunicating or Absolving any Person for Interest, and orders that in the Places where they impose a pecuniary Mulct in giving Absolution, they shall be oblig'd to make Restitution in case the Excommunication was unjust.

The Fiftieth repeals the Prohibition of contracting Marriage in the second and third Degree of Affinity, and between Children issuing from a second Marriage, and the Relations of the former Husband, and restrains the Degrees wherein Marriages were unlawful to the fourth Degree of Consanguinity and Affinity.

The Fifty first prohibits Clandestine Marriages, and orders, That the Priests shall publish the Banns in Churches, that so such Impediments as are lawful may be objected against them. Penalties are likewise inflicted on those who Countenance or Authorize Incestuous or Clandestine Marriages.

The Fifty second imports, That they shall admit of no Evidences with respect to Marriage-Impediments, who only give in their Evidences by Hear-say, unless they be very creditable Persons, and who depose, that they have heard it said by several Persons before the Process was drawn up: That those Witnesses shall swear that they are not induc'd thereto by any Motive of Hatred, of Fear, of Friendship, or of Interest: That they shall mention the Degrees of Kindred: And Lastly, That they shall not be credited, unless they depose, that they have seen several of those Persons treat one another as Relations.

The Fifty third prohibits the giving of Lands to such Persons as have not us'd to pay Tithes to Churches.

The Fifty fourth imports, That the Tenth ought to be taken of all sorts of Revenues before any thing is rais'd upon it for the payment of the Tax or Tribute.

The Fifty fifth orders, That the Demeans which for the future shall be purchas'd by the Monks of Cisteaux, or by any others shall pay Tithes.

The Fifty sixth prohibits the Secular or Regular Clergy, when they let out Inheritances, or bestow them in Fief, from stipulating, that they shall pay them the Tenths thereof, and that those to whom they give them shall be interr'd among them.

The Fifty seventh to redress the Abuses of several Privileges granted to Regulars, ordains, That the Privilege granted to the Friars of several Orders of being always interr'd in Holy Ground, at least if they were not formally Excommunicated or Interdicted, ought not to be understood but only of such who are consecrated and have chang'd their Habit, or of those who have bestow'd their Estate upon them, of which they have only retain'd to themselves the Usufructus of it. The Privilege likewise is restrain'd which they had of opening the Churches of an interdicted Place upon their Arrival there, to only one single Church.

The Fifty eighth grants to the Episcopal Churches during an Interdiction, the favour granted to several Monks of Celebrating Divine Service in their Churches with a low Voice without ringing the Bells, at least when this was not expressly prohibited by the Interdiction, or when those of that Church had not been the occasion of the Interdiction; and upon condition that the Excommunicated and Interdicted Persons shall not be present.

The Fifty ninth extends to all the Monks the Prohibition that was made to particular Persons of being Surety for any one, or raising any Summ without the Abbot's and the major Part of the Chapter's Leave.

The Sixtieth prohibits the Abbots from incroaching on the Rights of Bishops, by trying the Causes

The IV. General Lateran Council held, 1215.

Cauſes of Matrimony, by impoſing publick Pennances, by granting of Indulgences, and by performing any other Functions peculiar to the Biſhops, unleſs they have leave, or a lawful reaſon for ſo doing.

The Sixty firſt revives the Canon of the Lateran Council, which prohibits the Monks from receiving Tithes from the Hands of Laicks, and enjoyns them to preſent to the Biſhops ſuch Prieſts to ſerve in the Churches which do not depend on them Pleno Jure, who ſhall be reſponſible to the Biſhops for the Spiritualities, and may not be turned out without their permiſſion.

The Sixty ſecond imports, That having underſtood that Religion was often diſhonour'd by expoſing of Relicks to Sale, to put a ſtop to this Scandal for the future, it prohibits the ſhewing of Reliks out of their Caſes, the expoſing them to Sale, and the honoring any new ones, unleſs approv'd by the Pope's Authority. It admoniſhes the Prelates not to ſuffer, that thoſe who come out of Devotion to their Churches, be impos'd upon by Falſities and Shams, as it happen'd in moſt Places where this Practice prevail'd for Intereſt. And they are prohibited from admitting of any Queſtors, who have not the Pope's permiſſion, of which the Form is here given. Laſtly, The Abuſe of indiſcreet Indulgences is regulated, and 'tis order'd, That the Indulgences for the Dedication of a Church, ſhall laſt no longer than a Year, and that on the Anniverſary of that Feaſt, they ſhall grant remiſſion of Pennance enjoyn'd for Forty Days only. It likewiſe requires, That the number of Indulgence-days be likewiſe limited in all other Acts by which they are granted.

The Sixty third aboliſhes the Uſe, or rather Abuſe, which was crept into ſome Churches of exacting a certain Summ for the Benediction of Abbots, and for the Conferring of Holy Orders, and declares thoſe who exact or receive any thing upon that account to be guilty of Simony.

The Sixty fourth prohibits likewiſe the exacting of any thing for being admitted into any Religious Order, and enjoyns, That the Nuns who ſhall give or exact any thing under any Pretence whatſoever ſhall be turn'd out of the Monaſtery, and enjoyn'd Pennance in a more Auſtere Monaſtery. And as to thoſe who have been admitted for Money before this Decree, 'tis order'd that they ſhall retire into another Convent of the ſame Order, or ſhall be admitted afreſh into the Monaſtery wherein they are, and ſhall take their Places only from the Day of this latter Admiſſion. The ſame thing is order'd with reſpect to Monks and the other Regulars, and the Biſhops are enjoyn'd to publiſh this Decree every Year in their Dioceſſes, that it might be obſerv'd.

The Sixty fifth prohibits the Biſhops from interdicting a Church after the death of the Curate, in order to exact a Summ of Money of his Succeſſor, or from demanding any thing to permit a Secular to be admitted into any Religious Order or to be interr'd there.

The Sixty ſixth prohibits the demanding any thing for the Burial of the Dead, for the Benediction of Marriage, or for any ſuch like things. However 'tis not pretended by this Decree to put a ſtop to the pious Cuſtoms which ſome out of an Heretical Spirit would aboliſh.

The Sixty ſeventh is againſt the exorbitant Uſury of the Jews. It orders, That thoſe among them who exact any from the Chriſtians, ſhall be debarr'd from having any Commerce with Chriſtians; as well as thoſe who will not give the Church ſatisfaction for the Tithes and the other Oblations due upon the account of the Houſes or Inheritances which they Poſſeſs.

In the Sixty eighth 'tis order'd, That the Saracens and Jews ſhall wear particular Habits to diſtinguiſh them from others, and they are prohibited to go abroad on Good Friday, becauſe at that time they were us'd to expreſs their joy in inſulting over the Chriſtians. Princes are enjoin'd to prevent them from uttering Blaſphemies againſt Jeſus Chriſt.

The Sixty ninth revives the Canon of the Council of Toledo, which forbids the beſtowing any Publick Charges or Offices upon them.

The Seventieth imports, That the Jews who are Converted and have been Baptiz'd, ſhall be hindred from obſerving their Ceremonies, and from mixing Judaiſm with Chriſtianity.

Thoſe Chapters, or at leaſt part of them, being Read in the Council, the Pope caus'd the Decree for the Croiſade to be Publiſh'd, being drawn up in theſe Terms. "Being earneſtly deſirous to recover the Holy Land from the Hands of the Prophane, We Order by the Advice of Prudent Perſons, "who are acquainted with the favourable Circumſtances of Times and Places, and by the Approbation "of the Sacred Council, that the Croiſade-Men ſhall be ready by the firſt of June in the Year enſuing; "and that all thoſe who are reſolv'd to go by Sea ſhall Rendevouz in the Kingdom of Sicily, ſome at "Brinda and others at Meſſina, and the adjacent Places, where we are reſolv'd to be in Perſon, that "ſo that Army may be Regulated by our Councils, Aided by our Succours, and depart with the "Divine and Apoſtolick Benediction. Thoſe who will go by Land, ſhall be likewiſe ready by the "ſame time, and ſhall give us notice thereof, that ſo we may ſend them a Legate to Conduct and "Succour them. That the Prieſts and other Eccleſiaſticks from the Higheſt to the Loweſt, who "ſhall be in the Chriſtian Army, take care to apply themſelves to Prayer and Preaching, and to In"ſtruct others by their Doctrine and Examples, that ſo they might have the Fear of God always be"fore their Eyes, and that they neither ſay nor do any thing which may offend the Divine Majeſty: "And if they ſhould fall into any Sin, they riſe again by Repentance. He grants to the Eccleſiaſticks who ſhall be in that Army, the Right of receiving the Revenues of their Benefices for three Years, as if they were Reſident. He orders all the Prelates to admoniſh all thoſe who are Engag'd in the Croiſade, That they are oblig'd to perform their Vow, and to conſtrain thoſe who will not do it by Excommunicating their Perſons and Interdicting their Demeans, if they have no lawful Hindrance, which the Holy See judges ſufficient to diſpenſe them from their Vow. He recommends to them likewiſe the Exhorting and Inviting all the Princes and all their Subjects to provide Soldiers, Arms, Proviſions and Ships for the Expedition, in order to obtain the Remiſſion of their Sins: And to ſet an Example himself, He declares, That he will furnish them with Thirty thousand Pounds of his Estate, besides the Charges of the Journey of those Croisado-Men in and about Rome, upon which Three thousand Marks of Charity-Money, lying in his Hands, shall be expended. He enjoins all Benefic'd Men to give the Twentieth Penny of their Ecclesiastical Incomes during three Years for the Relief of the Holy Land, and to depositе those Summs into the Hands of those who shall be Commission'd by the Holy See to be Collectors of it: He excepts out of this several Monks, and those who shall go in Person to this Expedition: He engages himself and the Cardinals to pay the Tenth of their Revenues. He puts the Estates of those who are engag'd in the Croisaide, under the Protection of the Holy See, that so no Tax might be laid upon them. He would have the Interests of the Money which they ow'd during this Expedition to be remitted, and that the Jews be oblig'd to remit it to them. He Excommunicates those who shall assist or succour the Corsairs and Pirates, that take and Rob those who go to the Holy Land; those who shall supply the Saracens with Arms, or other Warlike Ammunitions, to be made use of against the Christians; all those who shall aid or give them any Assistance; those who shall carry any Ships into the East, during the four ensuing Years; and those who shall hold any Turnaments. He enjoins, That all the Christian Princes who are at War shall make Peace, or at least a Truce for four Years, and that they shall be constrain'd thereto by Excommunicating their Persons and Interdicting their States. Lastly, he grants to all who shall go to the Holy Land in their own Persons, and at their own Charges, a plenary Indulgence of all their Sins for which they shall have Contrition, and which they shall have Confess'd: And he promises them a more perfect Degree of Eternal Happiness than to others. He grants likewise a plenary Indulgence to all those that shall send Persons to it at their own Charges, or to those who shall go at the Charges of others, and grants a proportionable Part of this Indulgence to those that shall Contribute to the Relief of the Holy Land either by their Goods or their Advice. And Lastly, He declares, That the Universal Synod joins with him in his good Wishes, to all those who shall Contribute towards so Good a Work. The IV. General Lateran Council held, 1215.

Historians tell us of several other Matters which were Regulated by this Council, or rather by the Pope. The Cause of the Empire was there Agitated between the Deputies of Otho and Frederick, and Adjudg'd in favour of the latter. Therein they likewise Treated of the Affair of the Counts of Toulouse and Foix, who requested to be re-settel'd in their Estates. The Brother of the Count of Montfort maintain'd that they ought not to be restor'd to them, and upon their Contest, it was Order'd, That the City of Toulouse, and the other Countries which the Croisado Men had Conquer'd, should be given to the Count of Montfort. And with respect to the Demeans which the Count of Toulouse had in Provence, that they should be Sequestred to be Surrendred either in whole or in part to the Son of the Count of Toulouse, if he gave any signs of the sincerity of his Faith and of his good Life. This Decree is related by Father Luke Dachery in the Seventh Tome of his Spicilegium, by which it appears, that there was likewise reserv'd to Raimond Count of Toulouse a certain Annual Summ upon his Revenues, and his Wife the Sister of the King of Arragon had reserv'd to her the Lands which belong'd to her as her Dowry. The Pope Confirm'd the Sentence of Suspension pass'd by his Legates against Stephen Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, Charg'd with having held Intelligence with the Barons of England who would have Depos'd the King. Those Lords were Excommunicated. 'Tis said likewise said, that the Patriarch of the Maronites, Re-united those of his Nation to the Church of Rome in this Council; that there they Debated the Question about the Primacy of Toledo: That the Pope did then Institute the Order of the Cross, and Approv'd of the Dominican and Franciscan Orders.

This Council which was so Numerous at first, broke up in less than a Month. The Prelates weary with staying at Rome, beg'd leave one after another to depart; and the Pope (if Matthew Paris may be believ'd) granted them leave, by obliging them before their Departure to take up great Summs from the Merchants of Rome to give him. The War between those of Pisa and the Genoese, and the Troubles of Italy, immediately oblig'd the Pope to put an end to the Council, and to quit his Care for the Affairs of the Church, to put in order those of Italy. Being set out from Rome on that Design he Dy'd at Perusa the 16*th*. of July 1216.

The Council of Melun in the Year 1216.

POpe Innocent III. having Wrote to Peter of Corbeil Arch-Bishop of Sens and his Suffragans, against King Philip Augustus, whom he suspected of supporting his Son Lewis, whom he had Excommunicated, because he carry'd on a War against John King of England, tho' he was Cross'd for the Holy Land; they met at Melun, in the Year 1216. to return an Answer to the Pope, and at the same time made several Orders relating to Church-Discipline. They order, That those who shall continue in a State of Excommunication above a Year and a Day without being Absolv'd, shall be constrain'd thereto by the Secular Power, which shall Seize upon their Persons and Effects. They prohibit a Prior, if he be not a Coventual, from Borrowing more then Forty Sols without the leave of his Abbot. They enjoin the Abbots and Priors to give an Account every Year in the Chapter, of the Income and the Expences of the Monastery. They prohibit them from Borrowing any Summ without the Consent of the Chapter and the Advice of the Bishop, in case the Abbot be absent. And Lastly, they order, the Abbots and Monks to be Habited according to their Quality. The Council of Melun, 1216.

The

The Council of Oxford, in the Year 1222.

The Council of Oxford, 1222.

STephen Langton Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, of whom we have already made mention, held a Council at Oxford in the Year 1222. wherein he made a great many Orders for Reforming the Church of England, and especially the Monastical Discipline. He therein Condemn'd an Impostor who call'd himself The Christ, and shew'd marks in his Hands, in his Feet, and in his Side, as the Scars of those Wounds made in his Suffering upon the Cross. We have the Canons of this Council, divided into Forty nine Chapters.

The first declares all those Excommunicated who wrong the Church; those that disturb the quiet of the State; false Witnesses, especially in the Case of Marriage, and Dis-inheriting; false Accusers; those who unjustly or maliciously oppose the Patronage, or the taking Possession of Benefices; and those that obstruct the Execution of the Orders of the Prince against Excommunicated Persons.

The Second concerns the Duties of Bishops who are recommended to have honest and grave Almoners, to be Charitable, to give Audience to the Poor, and to do them Justice, to hear Confessions, to see that their Dioceses be Visited, to be resident at their Cathedrals on the Great Festivals and during Lent, and to see that the Profession of Faith which they made at their Consecration be read.

By the Third, they are prohibited from exacting any thing for the Collation of Benefices; and by the Fourth, from delaying to give Institution and Induction to such as are presented to them for to supply the Benefices. However in case there be two Persons presented by two Patrons, it is order'd by the Fifth, That neither of them shall be promoted by the Bishop till the Cause be determin'd.

The Sixth imports, That the Priests shall celebrate Mass and administer the Sacraments with Devotion; that they shall repeat the Words of the Canon entirely; that they shall not take the Ablution, if they are to celebrate again the same day. They are likewise prohibited from celebrating the Mass often on one and the same day, except on Christmas and Easter-day: or when a Corps is to be interr'd, in which case they shall say the First Mass of the Day, and the Second for the Deceas'd.

The Seventh prohibits the Ecclesiasticks who are Benefic'd or in Orders, from being Farmers, Judges, Bayliffs, or Officers, and from giving or passing Sentences of Death. Prohibitions are therein likewise made from holding a Session to try a Criminal in Consecrated Places, such as the Church and Church-yard.

The Eighth contains the Catalogue of Feasts that ought to be Solemniz'd, which are all Sundays, the Five Days of Christmas, the Circumcision, the Epiphany, all the Festivals of the Blessed Virgin, except that of the Conception, to celebrate which no Man is oblig'd (these are the very Words of the Council) the Conversion of St. Paul, the Chair of St. Peter, all the Festivals of the Apostles, the Feast of St. Gregory, Holy Thursday, the Second, Third and Fourth Holydays in Easter-Week, Ascension-day, the Second, Third and Fourth Holy-days in Whitson-Week, the Feast of St. Augustin in May, the Two Feasts of the Holy Cross, the Translation of St. Thomas the Martyr, the Two Feasts of St. John, the Feast of St. Margaret; that of St. Mary Magdalene, the Feast of St. Peter in bonds, the Feasts of St. Lawrence, St. Michael, St. Edmund the Confessor, St. Edmund the King and Martyr, St. Catharine, St. Clement, and St. Nicholas, the Feast of the Dedication of each Church, and the Feast of the Holy Patron. There are likewise reckon'd several other Feasts of a Second Rank which are to be celebrated with less Solemnity, and several of a Third Rank, on which they might go to work after Mass, with a List of the Vigils and Fasts of the Year.

The Ninth enjoyns the Curates to Preach often, and to take care to visit the Sick.

The Tenth imports, That every Church shall have a Silver-Chalice, with other necessary Utensils, a White Surplice, Altar-cloths, Books and Ornaments proper and suitable, and that the Arch-Deacons shall take care of it.

The Eleventh prohibits a Man who resigns a Benefice, from retaining the Vicaridge thereof.

The Twelfth forbids the dividing a Benefice into several, and the giving it to divers Persons.

The Thirteenth prohibits the giving the Vicaridge of a Church to a Man who will not serve that Church in Person.

The Fourteenth orders the Residence of the Benefic'd Clergy.

The Fifteenth adjusts what Allowance is compleat for a Vicar.

The Sixteenth declares, That there ought to be two or three Priests in the great Parishes.

The Seventeenth imports, That the Bishop shall cause him who is presented to a Benefice to take an Oath, that he has given nothing to him who Presented him.

The Eighteenth, That there shall be settled in every Arch-Deaconry Confessors for the Rural Deans, and the other Ecclesiasticks, who will not Confess themselves to their Bishop.

The Nineteenth prohibits Rural Deans from taking Cognizance of Matrimonial Causes.

The Twentieth forbids all manner of Persons to keep Robbers in their Service.

The Twenty first forbids the Arch-Deacons to be any Charge to the Churches in their Visits.

The Twenty second prohibits the Leasing out of Benefices.

The Twenty third and the four next order the Arch-Deacons to inform themselves whether the Canon be as it ought to be, and whether the Priests know how to recite it and to pronounce the Words of Baptism; to inform themselves whether the Eucharist and the Holy Chrism be under Lock and Key, and to take an Account of the Ornaments and Goods of the Churches.

The Twenty eighth prohibits the Ordinaries, or their Officers from Issuing out any Sentences which are not preceeded by a Cononical Admonition.

The

The Twenty ninth imports, That nothing shall be demanded for Burial, nor for Administring the Sacraments. The Council of Oxford, 1222.

The Thirtieth and Thirty first prohibit the Ecclesiastical Judges from hindring the Agreement of the Parties, and from obliging any Person to clear himself, unless he has been Accus'd by Men of Probity.

The following Chapters regard the Manners of the Ecclesiasticks. They are order'd to wear the Clerical Habit, to have close Sleeves, and a Cronet and short Hair, to avoid Drunkenness, and to keep no Concubines.

The Thirty sixth and seventh prohibit the Alienation of the Church-Goods, and the giving them in Fief to Laicks.

The Thirty eighth and ninth have relation to the Nuns. They are prohibited to wear Silk-Vails, or such as are Embroider'd with Silver, to have Habits with Trains, and to demand any Money for being Admitted into the Nunnery.

The Fortieth prohibits the Farming out of Churches, unless for some Reason to be Allow'd by the Bishop, and to a Person who, one may be assur'd, will make a good use of it.

The Forty first prohibits the granting to any Person the enjoying a Benefice with the Charge of Souls, any Revenue in another Church, tho' it be sub Titulo Gratiæ.

The Forty second imports, That the Advocates, who shall Dispute the Validity of a Marriage, which shall be declar'd Good by the Sentence of the Judge, shall be Suspended from their Function for a Year, if the Judge do not Discharge them by the Sentence it self.

The following Chapters relate to the Monks. 'Tis therein order'd, That they shall live in Common, that they shall Lie in the same Dormitory, and Eat in the same Refectory: That no Monk shall be Admitted before the Age of Eighteen: That the Nuns shall not go out of their Nunnery; That silence shall be kept in the Monasteries; That the Monks shall not go out of their Monastery without the leave of their Superiors: That the Superiors may send a Monk into another Monastery, if they think fit: That the Nuns shall have only such Confessors as are Appointed by the Bishop, &c. Lastly, The Council Confirm'd whatever had been Order'd in the Lateran Council under Innocent III.

The Council of Mentz in the Year 1225.

IN the Year 1224. Honorius III. sent as his Legate into Germany Cardinal Conrade Bishop of O-Porto, who had formerly been Monk and Abbot of Cisteaux, to endeavour to Reform the Manners of that Kingdom. This Legate Held a Council at Mentz the Ninth of December in the Year 1225. where he made several General Constitutions for all Germany. The Council of Mentz 1225.

The Three first are against the Clerks who keep Concubines.

The Fourth prohibits the Issuing out any Excommunication, without a precedent Admonition.

The Fifth declares the Legacies of Church-Goods made by Clerks to their Natural Children, or their Concubines Null.

The Sixth enjoins, That the Clerks who being Excommunicated or Suspended by their Bishops, continue to perform their Functions, shall be Depos'd from their Offices and Benefices, without hopes of being Restor'd.

The Seventh declares those Persons Excommunicated, who Celebrate the Holy Mysteries before Persons declar'd Excommunicated.

The Eighth imports, That the Bishops shall Certifie to the Neighbouring Bishops the Persons whom they shall have Excommunicated, that so they may shun them and cause them to shun'd by others, and declares, That if any of them shall wittingly Communicate with those whom his Brethren have Excommunicated, the Canons of his Cathedral Church shall separate themselves from his Communion so long as he persists in defiance of this Rule.

The Ninth Anathematizes the Patrons, who in bestowing of Benefices that are in their Gift, shall keep back part of the Tithes, or of the Ecclesiastical Revenues. In the next 'tis order'd, That those who shall be Advanc'd on that Condition, shall be Depriv'd of their Office, or their Benefice.

In the Eleventh the Bishops and Arch-Deacons are forbidden to receive any of those who are Presented to them by Patrons, till he has taken an Oath, that he has not committed Simony.

The Council of Toulouse in the Year 1229.

The Council of Toulouse 1229.

Raimond Junior Count of Toulouse having made his Peace with King Saint Lewis, and being return'd to his Estates, Romanus Cardinal of St. Angelo, Legate of the Holy See, follow'd him in order compleatly to destroy Heresie in that Country, and Held there a Council in the Year 1229, which begun in July and ended in November, at which were present Peter Amelii Arch-Bishop of Narbonne, Gerard of Malemort Arch-Bishop of Bourdeaux, and Amaneus Arch-Bishop of Auusche, and several Bishops of those Provinces: The Counts of Toulouse and the other Barons and Lords of the Country, except the Count of Foix, were likewise there, with the Seneshall of Carcassonne and the two Consuls of Toulouse, who were to Swear to and Approve of the Peace. The Legate proceeded therein against several Hereticks, Reconcil'd several of them who Recanted, and made Forty five Orders for the Rooting out of Heresy.

In the First, He enjoins the Arch-Bishops and Bishops to settle in each Parish a Priest and two or three approv'd Laicks, to make Inquisition after Hereticks, and to engage them upon Oath to use their utmost Endeavours to find them out, to Present them forthwith to the Bishop, and to the Lords or their Bayliffs.

In the Second, the same thing is enjoin'd to Abbots exempted with respect to the Places where they have Jurisdiction.

In the Third, the Lords of the respective Places are recommended to search after Hereticks, and to ruin the Places whither they resort.

In the Fourth, there is added the Penalty of Losing their Estates, against those who know that a Heretick lives in their Territories, and will suffer it. And with respect to those who shall neglect to make Inquisition after them, 'tis order'd in the next Canon, That they shall likewise be punish'd for their neglect. The Houses where Hereticks shall be found are not so much as spar'd; and in the Sixth Canon, 'tis declar'd, That they shall be destroy'd, and that the Ground shall be Confiscated. The Bayliffs are Condemn'd to the loss of their Offices and Estates, who shall be careless and negligent in searching after Hereticks.

But to prevent the Abuse that might be made of these Constitutions, in making those pass for Hereticks who were not so; 'tis order'd in the Eighth, That no Person shall be Condemn'd as an Heretick, who has not been judg'd to be one by the Bishop of the Place.

The Ninth gives leave to the Lords and their Officers to Apprehend Hereticks upon the Territories of other Lords.

The Tenth imports, That the Hereticks who voluntarily Recant, shall not remain in the Villages where they were, if they are suspected of Heresy, but shall be Transported into other Catholick Villages, which are free from suspicion; that they shall wear two Crosses on their Cloths, and have Certificates from their Bishops of their being Reconcil'd: That they shall not be admitted any more into Publick Offices, nor do any Publick Acts till they shall have been qualify'd for it again by the Pope, or his Legate.

The

In the Eleventh, 'Tis order'd with reſpect to thoſe who are Converted by the fear of Death, or for ſome other ſuch Account, that they ſhall be ſhut up in a Wall'd Place, that ſo they may not corrupt others. The Council of Toulouſe, 1229.

The Twelfth imports, That all Men above Fourteen Years Old, and all Women above Twelve, ſhall make an Abjuration of all ſorts of Hereſy, and a Profeſſion of the Faith of the Roman Church, and that they ſhall be engag'd to perſecute Hereticks.

In the Thirteenth 'tis order'd, That all Perſons who have the uſe of their Reaſon, ſhall Confeſs themſelves twice a Year to their own proper Prieſt, and Receive the Sacrament of the Euchariſt at Chriſt-maſs, Eaſter and Whitſontide, ſo that Confeſſion ſhall go before the Communion, unleſs the Prieſt think fit for ſome juſt Cauſe, that they ſhould abſtain one time from receiving the Euchariſt, and that thoſe who ſhall abſtain from it upon other Accounts, ſhall be ſuſpected of Hereſy.

The Fourteenth prohibits Laicks from having the Books of the Old or New-Teſtament, unleſs it be a Pſalter or a Breviary, and the Roſary, and does not permit them ſo much as to Tranſlate them into the Vulgar Tongue. This Reſtraint was doubtleſs founded on that frequent Abuſe which was made of them in that Country.

In the Fifteenth, They who are ſuſpected of Hereſy are prohibited the Practice of Phyſick, and Hereticks are forbidden to come near the Sick, after they have receiv'd the Viaticum.

The Sixteenth orders, That the Laſt Wills and Teſtaments ſhall be receiv'd by the Curates.

The Seventeenth prohibits the Prelates and Barons from beſtowing Offices which depended on them on Hereticks, and from having for their Domeſticks ſuſpected Perſons, or of an ill Reputation.

The Eighteenth declares thoſe to be of a bad Repute, who are notoriouſly Infamous, or againſt whom Perſons of Worth give in Evidence.

The Nineteenth maintains the Churches and Religious Houſes in their Privileges, and orders the entire Payment of Tithes.

The Twentieth prohibits the laying any Tax on the Clergy.

The Twenty firſt diſcharges them from all manner of Tributes and new Duties, and extends this Favour to the Monks and Pilgrims, provided they do not concern themſelves in Merchandiſe.

The Twenty ſecond obliges thoſe who receive Taxes, to take care of the High-ways, and makes them Reſponſible for the Robberies committed between Sun and Sun.

The Twenty third forbids Laicks from laying any Tax on the Servants of Churches or of Church-Men, if they do not hold any Eſtate of them.

The Twenty fourth orders, That if any Perſon ſhall throw a Clergy-Man into Priſon, even tho' he has not the Tonſure, the Biſhop ſhall be acquainted of it: That the Lay-Judge ſhall be oblig'd to remit him into the Hands of the Eccleſiaſtical Judges, and that if he refuſe to do it, he ſhall be declar'd Excommunicated and forc'd to deliver him up by his Lord.

The Twenty fifth orders all the Maſters and Miſtreſſes of every Houſe, every Sunday and Holy-Day to be at Church, to hear the Preaching and Divine Service, and not to go out till Maſs be quite over: That if they both cannot be there, one of them ſhall, and that if both miſs without being Sick, or having any Lawful Excuſe, they ſhall be oblig'd to pay Twelve French Deniers; one Moiety whereof ſhall go to the Lord, and the other to the Prieſt and the Church. They are likewiſe recommended to go to Church on Saturday-Nights in Honour of the Virgin Mary.

The Twenty ſixth contains the Catalogue of the Feſtivals, which are as follow: Chriſt-maſs-Day, the Feaſts of St. Stephen, of St. John the Evangeliſt, of the Holy Innocents, of St. Sylveſter, of the Circumciſion, of the Epiphany, of the Purification, of the Annunciation, of the Aſſumption, of the Nativity of the Virgin Mary, Eaſter-Day, and the two next Days, the three Rogation-Days, Whitſunday and the two following Days, the Nativity of St. John Baptiſt, the Invention and Exaltation of the Holy Croſs, the Feaſts of the Twelve Diſciples, of St. Mary Magdalen, of St. Lawrence, of St. Martin, of St. Nicholas, of the Dedication of St. Michael, the Dedication of each Church, the Feaſt of the Holy Patron and every Sunday.

In the Twenty ſeventh 'tis order'd, That during all thoſe Feſtivals, they ſhall abſtain from all manner of Work according to Cuſtom, and according to the Order which ſhall be preſcrib'd by the Biſhop, and that the Curates ſhall give notice of them every Sunday at Maſs.

The other Canons relate to the obſerving of Peace, and contain Orders for Civil Affairs.

The Council of Chateau Gonthier in the Year 1231.

IN the Year 1231. Francis Caſſardi Arch-Biſhop of Tours and the Prelates of the Province, being met in a Council at Chateau-Gonthier, being deſirous to Redreſs ſeveral Abuſes which were in that Province, made Thirty ſeven Canons. The Council of Chateau-Gonthier in 1231.

The Firſt enjoins, That Prelates ought not to tolerate Clandeſtine Marriages, and to proceed without delay and without excuſe, to the Divorcing of thoſe who had Contracted them.

The Second prohibits the Arch-Prieſts and Rural Deans from taking Cognizance of Matrimonial Cauſes.

The Third orders the Inſtitution of a Curate into a Church, to be after this manner: The Patron whether an Eccleſiaſtick, or a Laick ſhall Preſent to the Arch-Deacon, or the Rural Dean, and afterwards to the Biſhop, or to him who has the Epiſcopal Power, the Perſon whom he has Choſen within the time preſcrib'd by Law: He ſhall be oblig'd to Swear, that he has neither given nor promis'd any thing for that Benefice, and that he does not know, that any one has given, or promis'd any

The Fifth, That the Priests shall carefully observe the Decrees of the Council of Toulouse against the Hereticks, and against those who are not present at Divine Service.

The Sixth, That Examination shall be made into the Capacity and Morals of those who are promoted to Holy Orders, and that none shall be admitted, who has not a Patrimonial Title to the value of a Hundred French Sols.

The Seventh, That the Tonsure shall be only given to those who can Read and Sing, who are the Children of Freemen, and born in lawful Wedlock, unless the Bishop of the Place grant a Dispensation.

The Eighth prohibits Bishops from exacting Oaths for their Interest of those upon whom they shall confer Orders.

The Ninth imports, That the Bishops shall supply the Archdeaconeries with Persons zealous for the Salvation of Souls, and capable of instructing both Clergy and Laity.

The Tenth, That the Constitutions of the Fourth General Lateran Council against those who Excommunicate unjustly shall be read.

The Eleventh, That the Patrons, as well Ecclesiasticks as Laicks shall present to the Bishops, Curates, or perpetual Vicars of the vacant Churches before the Feast of All-Saints.

The Twelfth, That those who have Benefices with Cure of Souls, shall be constrain'd to take Orders forthwith, or else lose their Revenues: That if a Cure be united to a Prebend or Dignity, he who enjoys them, shall put a perpetual Vicar in his stead into the Cure, to whom he shall give a competent Maintenance: And that every Parish-Church shall have a perpetual Priest who shall serve the Cure in Person.

The Thirteenth, That the Constitutions made in the Fourth General Lateran Council about the Life and Morals of the Clergy shall be observ'd.

The following Canons relate to the Monks.

The Fourteenth prohibits their having any thing de Proprio, and declares, That this is so annex'd to the Monachal Order, that not only the Abbots may not exempt a Monk from this Law, but also that the Pope cannot dispence with it, any more than he can with the Observance of Celibacy.

The Fifteenth and Sixteenth prescribe to the Abbots, Monks, and Regular Canons how they ought to be cloathed.

The Seventeenth enjoyns the Monks to shut up their Cloysters, and not to suffer any Seculars to enter without necessity.

The

The Council of Arles in 1234.

The Two next are for the Obſervation of Peace.

In the Ninth, He Prohibits the Confraternities and Societies which are not allow'd by the Biſhop.

The Tenth imports, That they ſhall not give Abſolution to thoſe who are Excommunicated for having done any Injury till ſuch time as they have made Satisfaction.

In the Eleventh, He orders, That the Bodies and Bones of thoſe who after their death ſhall be diſcover'd to have been Hereticks, ſhall be dug up again.

In the Twelfth, 'Tis prohibited to beſtow Benefices on Laicks.

In the Thirteenth, He declares, That the Excommunication ought to be uſher'd in by an Admonition, and if the Excommunicated do not get themſelves abſolv'd within a Month, they ſhall not receive Abſolution till they have paid 50 Sols a Month from the time of their Excommunication.

In the Fourteenth, He exhorts the Biſhops to be vigilant in reforming the Manners of their Clergy.

In the Fifteenth, He orders, That they ſhould Excommunicate every Sunday the Uſurers, Publick Adulterers, Diviners and Sorcerers.

In the Sixteenth, That the Jews and Jeweſſes ſhall be diſtinguiſh'd from Chriſtians by a Badge which they ſhall wear on their Habits.

In the Seventeenth, He declares, That if the Privileg'd Perſons will not ſubmit to the Sentences of Prelates and to their Cenſures, one may refuſe to do them Juſtice.

In the Eighteenth, That all the Biſhops of the Province ought ſtiffly to maintain the Rights of the Regale of the Church of Arles.

In the Nineteenth, That each Church of the Country ought to have a Curate, or at leaſt to be ſupply'd by the Biſhop's Order.

In the Twentieth, That Biſhops and other Prelates having the Cure of Souls, ſhall proceed according to the Forms of the Canons in the Affairs relating to Tithes, Legacies, Chapels and other Eccleſiaſtical Rights.

In the Twenty firſt, He prohibits the making any Laſt Will and Teſtament but in the Preſence of the Curate.

In the Twenty ſecond, He prohibits the raiſing any new Taxes.

In the Twenty third, He pronounces an Anathema againſt thoſe who treat for the Tithes or other Rights of the Church with the Monks without the Conſent of the Biſhop.

In the Twenty fourth, He orders, That no Biſhop may turn an Eccleſiaſtick out of his Benefice without taking cognizance of the Cauſe.

This ſame Arch-Biſhop held a Second Council at L'iſle in Provence, in the year 1251; wherein he has renew'd theſe Conſtitutions and Explain'd them, and Couch'd them in Thirteen Chapters, the laſt of which is againſt Clandeſtine Marriages.

The Council of Narbonne, held about the Year 1235.

The Council of Narbonne held 1235.

PEter Amelli Arch-Biſhop of Narbonne, John Bauſſanus Arch-Biſhop of Arles, and Raymond Arch-Biſhop of Aix, being met, as 'tis believ'd, at Narbonne about the Year 1235, made Decrees about the Puniſhment of Hereticks, directed to the Brethren Inquiſitors of theirs and the Neighbouring Provinces, who had propos'd to them ſeveral Doubts on that Subject, wherein they return them this Anſwer; That they ought to impoſe for Pennance on the Hereticks and their Favourers (who voluntarily recant, and to whom they have promis'd that they ſhall not be caſt into Priſon) the wearing of Croſſes, the preſenting themſelves every Sunday in the Churches with part of their Body naked, and with Wands in their Hands between the Epiſtle and Goſpel in order to receive the Diſcipline; To do the ſame thing at the ſolemn Proceſſions, to be preſent every Sunday at Maſs, at the Veſpers and at Sermon, to Faſt, to viſit the Holy Places, to defend in Perſon or by others maintain'd at their Charge the Faith of the Church againſt the Saracens and Hereticks (but not to order them to go beyond Sea) to make them ſhift their Country, and build Places to ſhut up the Poor Converts. Moreover, They leave it to the Diſcretion of the Inquiſitors to impoſe ſuch Pennances as they ſhall think Convenient, to increaſe or moderate them. They would have them to oblige the Converts to make a publick Confeſſion of their Faults. They commit to the Curates the taking care to ſee that the Converts obſerve the Pennances which the Inquiſitors ſhall have impos'd on them. With reſpect to other Hereticks, who ought to be confin'd according to the Law of the Council of Toulouſe; they ſay, That there being ſo great a Number of them, that this cannot eaſily be done, the Pope ſhall be acquainted with it, and only ſuch ſhall be confin'd who are moſt Capable of Corrupting others. As for the Rebels, Apoſtates, Favourers of Hereticks and thoſe who conceal or neglect to puniſh them, they would have them be treated variouſly according to the Variety of their Faults. They Admoniſh the Jacobine Friars, not to impoſe any pecuniary Mulcts, nor to demand any. They would not have Perſons ſuſpected of Hereſie, or New Converts to be admitted into a Religious Houſe. They preſcribe ſeveral Laws about the Proceedings of the Inquiſition, ſuch as keeping the Names of the Private Witneſſes, the receiving all ſorts of Witneſſes, not to hear them above once, not to credit the Confeſſors, about the Points on which Hereticks ought to be interrogated; about the Errors of the Vaudois, and the ſigns whereby to diſcover them.

The Council of Tours in the Year 1236.

The Council of Tours 1236.

JEwellus de Mayenne Arch-Biſhop of Tours, on the Tueſday before St. Barnabas's day, in the Year 1236, held an Eccleſiaſtical Aſſembly in that City, wherein he Publiſh'd Fourteen Decrees for the Eccleſiaſtical and Civil Polity.

By

By the First, The Croisado-Men are deprived of their Privileges, when they Commit such Crimes as deserve Punishment, and they and the other Christians are prohibited from killing or abusing the Jews. The Council of Tours 1236.

In the Three next 'tis order'd, That none shall be admitted Lawyers, who have not studied the Law for Three Years, nor Officials, who have not studied it Five Years, nor Notaries who are not acquainted with the Style and Constitutions of the Palace.

In the Fifth, To Obviate the Frauds of those who made an ill use of the Letters of the Holy See, the Commissaries delegated in the Province of Tours, are prohibited from Executing their Commission till they have shew'd the Original Copy of it, and unless He that has it, swear that he has procur'd those Letters, that they are true, and that he will not carry him with whom he has to do before other Judges.

By the Sixth, The Judges are order'd to have regard to Appeals.

In the Seventh, The Bishops are recommended to take care, that the Last Wills and Testaments be duly Executed.

The Eighth declares, Those who contract two Marriages at a time to be Infamous, and condemns them to be whip'd.

The Ninth orders, That every Sunday the Sorcerers shall be Excommunicated, and condemns them to severe Correction.

The Tenth, Renews the Prohibitions of Communicating with Excommunicated Persons, made in the Council held at Chateau Gontier, under Penalty of a Pecuniary Mulct.

The Eleventh imports, That those who pretend to be exempt from the Jurisdiction of the Ordinary, shall be oblig'd to Exhibit their Letters of Exemption.

In the Twelfth, False Witnesses are Condemn'd to severe Punishments.

In the Thirteenth, The Bishops are enjoyn'd to take care that the New Converts of their Dioceses be instructed, and to provide a Subsistence for them, least they return to their Errors under the pretence of Poverty.

In the Fourteenth, The Abbots and Priors are order'd to use Hospitality.

The Council of London in the Year 1237.

HEnry III. King of England in the Year 1237, sent for Cardinal Otho Legate of the Holy See. At first the Clergy and Laity were alarm'd at his Coming, but that Cardinal behav'd himself with a great deal of Moderation and Prudence. He reconcil'd the Lords, refus'd part of the Presents which they offer'd him, and appointed a Synod to be held at London for the reforming the Discipline. The King of England shew'd him a great deal of Respect, which made the Grandees of the Kingdom to murmur. The King of Scotland was more reserv'd, and would not permit the Legate to enter his Dominions, telling him that he had no occasion for a Legate in his Kingdom; that all was well enough there; that they had never seen any Legate there; that he would never suffer any; that besides he would not do well to expose his Person by coming thither, because the People of his Country were Savage and Cruel, and might perhaps abuse him. The Council of London 1237.

The Council Appointed to be Held at London by the Legate, was Held there on the next Day after the Octave of St. Martin. The Legate appear'd there seated on a Magnificent Throne, the Archbishop of Canterbury on his Right-Hand, and the Arch-Bishop of York on his Left, who both of them made Protestations for the preservation of their Privileges. Afterwards the Legate made a Speech to the Prelates of the Council on the Prudence and Wisdom of Ecclesiasticks. On the Morrow the King sent Commissioners to the Council, who should warn the Legate, That he did nothing which might infringe the King's Prerogative; and one of them stay'd in the Council to take care of it. The Legate order'd the Letters of his Legation to be Read. On the third Day they made an end of Reading the Decrees, which the Legate propos'd in the Council, which began to be Read the first Day. They are Thirty one.

The First concerns the Dedication of Churches, and implies, That it deriv'd its Original from the Old and New Testament, and has been observ'd by the Holy Fathers under the New. That it ought to be Solemniz'd with greater Dignity and Care, since then they only Offer'd Sacrifices of Dead Beasts, whereas now they Offer on the Altar, by the Hands of the Priest, a Living and True Sacrifice, namely the Only Son of God: Therefore the Fathers have with Reason order'd, That so Sublime an Office, should be Celebrated only in Consecrated Places, at least, when no necessity requires its being done elsewhere. Having therefore seen and understood that a great many despise or neglect this Sacred Ministry, and having met with a great many Churches, even Cathedrals, which tho Ancient, have not as yet been Consecrated with the Holy Oyl; to remedy this Neglect, they order, That all Cathedral, Conventual and Parochial Churches which are compleatly Built, shall be Consecrated within two Years by the Diocesan Bishops, or by their Authority; and the same time is prescrib'd for those which shall be Built hereafter. And that this Statute may be observ'd, they prohibit the Celebration of Mass in those Churches which shall not have been Consecrated within two Years after they shall be Built. They forbid the Abbots and Curates to pull down old Consecrated Churches, under a pretence of making them finer, without the consent of the Bishop of the Dioces, who shall take care to see whether it be fit to be granted, or no; and if he grants it, he shall see that the new One be finish'd forthwith. As to Chappels, they order nothing in particular with respect to them.

The next Canons contain the Doctrine of the Sacraments: In the Second the number of them is determin'd, and 'tis declar'd. That they ought to be Celebrated with Purity and Gratuitously.

The

The Council of London 1237. The Third is upon Baptiſm, 'tis therein determin'd, That the time of Adminiſtring it Solemnly is Holy Saturday, and the Saturday in Whitſun-Week, that Infants ought to be Baptiz'd on thoſe Days, and it enjoins Curates to Teach their Pariſhioners the Form of Baptiſm, that ſo they may Adminiſter it in Caſe of neceſſity.

The Fourth is againſt thoſe who require Money for giving Abſolution and the other Sacraments.

The Fifth imports, That the Biſhops ſhall take care to Nominate in each Deanery Prudent and Wiſe Confeſſors, to Confeſs the Clerks who are aſham'd to Confeſs themſelves to the Deans, and that there ſhall be in Cathedrals a General Penitentiary.

The Sixth, That thoſe who are to be Ordain'd ſhall be Examined, and that a Regiſter ſhall be kept of thoſe who ſhall be Approv'd, that ſo others might not mix themſelves with them.

The Seventh prohibits the Farming out of Benefices, and eſpecially Dignities.

The Eighth imports, That if any Churches be Leas'd out, it ſhall be only for five Years.

The Ninth, That they ſhall not Let out Leaſes for ever.

The Tenth, That the Vicars ſhall be Prieſts, and oblig'd to Perſonal Reſidence in the Churches which they are to Serve.

The Eleventh, That they ſhall not give away the Benefices of the Abſent upon the Report of their being Dead, unleſs they are aſſur'd of it.

The Twelfth prohibits the dividing of Benefices.

The Thirteenth renews the Decrees concerning Reſidence, and againſt thoſe who have Pluralities.

The Fourteenth regulates the manner of the Habits of the Clergy, and recommends to the Biſhops to be the firſt in giving an Example to others.

The Fifteenth to prevent the Marriages which ſome Clerks contracted Clandeſtinely to ſave their Benefices, declares the Children born of ſuch Marriages uncapable of holding Benefices.

The Sixteenth renews the Eccleſiaſtical Statutes againſt Clerks who kept Concubines.

The Seventeenth prohibits the Children of Clerks from Poſſeſſing the Benefices of their Fathers.

The Eighteenth is againſt thoſe who Protect, and give Shelter to Highway-Men.

The Nineteenth prohibits, all the Monks from Eating Fleſh, and orders, That their Novices ſhall be oblig'd to Profeſs at the end of their Year: Which is likewiſe extended to Regular Canons.

The Twentieth enjoins the Arch-Deacons to do their Duty with Diligence, and not to burden the Churches by exceſſive Duties of Procuration.

The Twenty firſt forbids the Eccleſiaſtical Judges to hinder the Parties from Agreeing.

The Twenty ſecond exhorts the Biſhops to Reſide in their Churches; there to Celebrate Divine Service on the chief Feſtivals of the Year, on the Sundays of Advent and Lent, and to ſee that their Dioceſſes be Viſited.

The Twenty third imports, That Care ſhall be taken to Place able Judges, eſpecially in Matrimonial Cauſes; and that the Judges of Abbots who are in Poſſeſſion, ſhall not paſs a definitive Sentence, till after they have Conſulted the Biſhop of the Dioceſs.

The Eight other Conſtitutions relate to the various Forms of Juſtice, and the Conditions which make theſe Acts Authentick. Theſe Decrees were Read in the Council, and the Prelates of England hearkened to them very quietly. There was only the Biſhop of Worceſter who Remonſtrated touching the Prohibition of having Pluralities, That this Law could not be obſerv'd in England, becauſe there were a great many Perſons of Quality that enjoy'd ſeveral Benefices, who liv'd honourably upon them, and beſtow'd large Alms. He ſaid likewiſe, That it would be very difficult to obſerve the Abſtinence from Meat, according to the Rule of St. Benedict, in all Monaſteries, and he deſir'd the Legate to ſend the Pope Word of theſe things. The Legate conſented thereto, provided the other Prelates of the Council would join with him. Laſtly, Becauſe ſeveral gave out, That the Orders which ſhould be made by the Legate, ſhould only be of Force during his Legation, he cauſ'd a Decretal to be Read which Authoriz'd them for ever.

The Council of Cognac in the Year 1238.

The Council of Cognac, 1238. IN the Year 1238. Gerard Arch-Biſhop of Bourdeaux call'd a Council at Cognac the Munday after the Octave of Eaſter, wherein he Publiſh'd Thirty nine Decrees.

The Firſt Excommunicates thoſe what made uſe of ſeveral ſorts of Tricks, which are expreſs'd in particular.

The Second likewiſe declares thoſe Men Excommunicated, who Conſpire againſt Eccleſiaſticks; the Perſons who Cite any one before them without having ſeen the Authentick Letters of their Commiſſion; and thoſe who inlarge them, and thoſe who detain the Goods or the Perſons of Eccleſiaſticks.

6. He regulated the manner of Celebrating Divine Service during the Interdiction.

7. He likewiſe renew'd the Prohibition made againſt Monks having Money of their own to buy themſelves Cloaths.

8. He declar'd, That he who remain'd a whole Year Excommunicated ought to be baniſh'd from the Place where he dwelt.

9. He order'd, That thoſe who were accus'd of having injur'd the Churches, and againſt whom there were ſtrong Suſpicions, ought to clear themſelves Canonically, and that if they cannot come off with this Purgation, they ought to be Puniſh'd.

The firſt General Council of Lions in the Year 1245.

The firſt General Council of Lions 1245.

WE will not here repeat what we have already ſaid concerning the Hiſtory of this Council, and of the Sentence which the Pope herein paſs'd againſt the Emperor Frederick; but ſince we have not ſpoken of the other Affairs which were Tranſacted, nor of the Decrees which were made in it, we are oblig'd to ſay ſomething of them in this Place.

There were three principal Affairs beſides that of Frederick: The Relieving of the Empire of Conſtantinople againſt the Greeks; that of the Empire of Germany againſt the Tartars; and that of the Holy Land againſt the Saracens. The Pope willing to provide for thoſe three urgent Neceſſities orders for the Relief of Conſtantinople, That a Moyety of the Revenues of all Benefices, on which the Incumbents did not actually Reſide, ſhould be given. However excepts out of this Act the Clergy of the Church of Rome, the Croſaido-Men, and thoſe who have Lawful Excuſes for their Non-Reſidence. He likewiſe join'd to this Supply the Third Part of what any Benefices might be worth above an Hundred Marks. He promis'd likewiſe that the Church of Rome ſhould give a Third Part of its Revenues towards the Relief of the Empire of Conſtantinople. He Excommunicates the Beneficed Clergy who ſhould uſe any Fraud, and grants Indulgences to all thoſe that ſhall go to the Succour of that Empire, equal to thoſe which they had who go to the Holy Land.

To put a ſtop to the Incurſions of the Tartars into Poland, Ruſſia and Hungary, he could find no better way than to make Trenches and Forts, in order to prevent their Inroads till ſuch time as the Holy See conſider of it, and be able to provide for their Relief.

Laſtly, As to what concerns the Relief of the Holy Land, where the Affairs of the Chriſtians were in a very bad Poſture, he admoniſhes the Prieſts and other Eccleſiaſticks in the Army of the Chriſtians, to Pray continually, and to exhort the Croiſado-Men to Repentance, and the Practice of Vertue; and grants to thoſe Clergy-Men the Privilege of enjoying their Benefices. In the ſecond place, he appoints for the Relief of the Holy Land the Twentieth Part of all the Revenues of Benefices for the ſpace of three Years, and the Tenth of the Revenues of the Pope and Cardinals. He exempts the Croiſado-Men from Taxes and all manner of Contributions. He diſcharges them from the Intereſt of thoſe Summs which they had Borrow'd. He pronounces an Anathema againſt the Pirates and againſt all thoſe thoſe who ſupply'd the Saracens with Ships, Arms, or other Ammunitions. He orders a Peace to be made between the Chriſtian Princes for four Years, under the Penalty of Excommunicating and Interdicting thoſe who oppos'd it. He prohibited Turnaments, and Laſtly heap'd very large Indulgencies on the Croiſado-Men. The firſt General Council of Lions in 1245.

He made uſe likewiſe of another method of Raiſing Funds for the Relief of the Holy Land and the Empire, which was to admoniſh thoſe who had the Cure of Souls, to incline the Faithful to give ſomething by their Laſt Wills and Teſtaments, or otherwiſe, to be employ'd in this Good Work, and to take care to keep it.

The Pope likewiſe in this Council made ſeveral Decrees relating to the Canon-Law, ſuch as about Commiſſions, Elections, the providing of a Delegate-Judge; about Proceſſes, Appeals and Accuſations; about Excommunication, and Debts Contracted by Churches, and other Points of Law which are to be met with in the Decreetals, and which are related by Matthew Paris in his Hiſtory.

Some of theſe Decrees were made in the Council, and others before or after the Council: But the Decree about Raiſing the Pence, diſpleas'd ſeveral Prelates, who openly oppos'd it; and the more, becauſe it was ſaid, That it was to be done by the Pope's Commiſſaries, and they complain'd that the Court of Rome had often Rob'd them of their Revenues under this Pretence.

The Council of Beziers in the Year 1246.

The Ordinance of St. Lewis in the Year 1268.

THE substance of this Ordinance is as follows, Lewis King of France, ad perpetuam rei memoriam, for the Safety and Tranquillity of the Church within our Dominions, for the increase of Divine Worship, for the Salvation of the Faithful Christians, and for obtaining the Succour of Almighty God, to whose Power alone our Kingdom always has been subject, and to whom alone we would that it should be always subject: We have Decreed and Order'd by this most Wise Decree, which shall be Perpetual: The Ordinance of St. Lewis in 1268.

That the Prelates of the Churches within our Kingdom, and the Patrons and usual Collaters of Benefices shall fully enjoy their Privilege, and that each of them shall preserve his Jurisdiction.

Item, That the Cathedral and other Churches of our Kingdom shall have free Elections, and that they shall be duly Executed.

Item, We Will and Command, That the Sin of Simony, the Pest of the Church, be entirely banish'd our Kingdom.

Item, We Will and Command, That the Promotions, Collations, Provisions and Disposals of Prelacies, Dignities, and of other Ecclesiastical Benefices and Offices of the Kingdom, be made according to the Orders and Determination of the Common Law, of the Holy Councils, and of the Ancient Decrees of the Holy Fathers.

Item, We prohibit the Levying or Raising the too burdensome Taxes and Exactions, Impos'd, or to be Impos'd by the Court of Rome on our Kingdom, which have miserably impoverish'd it; unless it be for a very urgent Cause of Religion, an indispensible Necessity, and by our Voluntary and Express Consent, and by the Consent of the National Church.

Item, We Renew and Confirm the Liberties, Franchises, Prerogatives, Rights and Privileges Granted by the Kings of France our Predecessors, of Blessed Memory, or by Us to the Churches, Monasteries, Places of Piety, Monks, or Ecclesiastical Persons.

Afterwards he orders all his Officers to take care to Execute this Ordinance, which bears Date May in the Year 1268.

Some question the Truth of this Constitution, but without Reason: And we find it quoted in the Articles presented by the Parliament to Lewis XI. at the Convention of the States at Tours in the Year 1483. and in the Act of Appeal made by the University of Paris in the Year 1491.

This is contain'd in Seven Articles.

The

The Second General Council of Lions in the Year 1274.

Gregory X. Appointed this Council two Years before it was Held, for three Reasons which are taken notice of in his Bull of Indiction. 1. For the Re-union of the Greek Church, with whom they were in a fair way of Agreement. 2. For the Relief of the Holy Land. 3. And for the Reforming the Church-Discipline and the Lives of the Clergy. The Pope himself presided there in Person. The Latin Patriarchs of Constantinople and Antioch were likewise there, with about Five hundred Bishops, Seventy Abbots, and a Thousand other inferiour Prelates: The Ambassadors of the Kings of France, Germany and Sicily, and those of Michael Palæologus Emperor of the East were sent thither by their Masters. James King of Arragon was present at the First Session; but because the Pope would not Crown him, till he had paid the Tribute which his Father had engag'd to give every Year to the Holy See, he retir'd in a great Passion with the Pope.

The First Session of the Council was Held in the Great Church of Lions the Seventh of May 1274. After the usual Prayers the Pope made a Speech, and propos'd to the Assembly, The three Reasons for which he had Appointed that Council, and Adjourn'd the Second Session to Munday the Eighteenth of the same Month. He made another Harangue in the Second Session, and Adjourn'd the Council to the Eight and twentieth of the same Month, after he had dismiss'd several of the inferior Prelates. Between these Two Sessions the Pope prevail'd upon the Bishops and Abbots to give the Tenth of their Revenues for Six Years, for the Relief of the Holy Land.

The Third Session was not Held till the Seventh of June, and then the Cardinal of Ostia made a Speech to the Council: They therein Read Part of the Constitutions of this Council about Discipline, and afterwards the Pope having made a Speech, permitted the Prelates to retire and go Abroad, but not above six Leagues from thence. He did not appoint a Day for the next Session, because it was uncertain when the Ambassadors of the Greeks would arrive. They came the Twenty fourth of that Month, presented their Letters to the Pope, and were very well receiv'd by him: They were present at High-Mass the 28*th.* of the same Month, in which they Sung the Gospel and the Creed in Latin and Greek, and the Greeks repeated thrice the Article of the Procession of the Holy Ghost from the Father and the Son. Between this and the next Session the Pope oblig'd the Bishop of Liege, and the Abbot of St. Paul at Rome, Accus'd of Irregularities, to lay down their Dignities. He likewise gave Audience to the Envoys of the Tartars.

The Fourth Session was Held the sixth of July: Therein the Letters of the Grecian Emperor were Read, and one of the Ambassadors swore to the Re-union, and Obedience to the Church of Rome. Afterwards they Sung Te Deum, the Creed with the Article of the Procession of the Holy Ghost from the Father and the Son, and with the other Prayers. The Pope Communicated the Letters of the King of Tartars to the Council, and concluded this Session with a Speech; appointing the Fifth Session for the Tuesday following. It was put off to the sixteenth Day of the Month, because the Pope Negotiated in particular with the Prelates and Cardinals, to get them to pass a Constitution which he had drawn up about the Election of a Pope.

The Fifth Session was usher'd in with the solemn Baptizing of one of the Tartar-Ambassadors. They therein Read several other Constitutions, and put off the rest till the Morrow, on which was Held the Sixth and last Session. They therein made an end of Reading the two Canons which remain'd; after which the Pope made a Speech, wherein he declaim'd against disorderly Church-Men, and threatned if they did not Reform to proceed against them. He promis'd to apply likewise Remedies, whereby to oblige the Curates to Residence in their Parish-Churches, and to supply them only with able Persons. The Council afterwards was Concluded with the usual Prayers.

The Constitutions Read and Publish'd in this Council by Pope Gregory, which he order'd, and which should be observ'd and inserted in the Decretals under Heads, are One and thirty in all.

The First has for its Title De Trinitate & fide Catholicâ; concerning the Trinity and the Catholick Faith, It is therein declar'd, That the Holy Ghost proceeds from the Father and the Son, as from one single Principle and by one single Spiration: And they are Condemn'd who deny that the Holy Ghost proceeds from the Father and the Son, and those who dare averr, That he proceeds from the Father and the Son, as from two Principles.

The following Articles to the Fifteenth are under the Title, Of the Election and Promotion of the Elected.

The Second contains several Rules about the Conclave and the Election of a Pope.

The Third obliges those who oppose the Elections and Postulations, to declare in their Letters of Appeal the Causes and Reasons of the Nullity, which they think fit to make use of, and prohibits them from alledging any others afterwards.

In the Fourth, A Person Elected to a Benefice, is prohibited from taking Possession thereof till his Election be Confirm'd.

The Fifth declares, That he who is Elected, shall be bound to give his Consent to the Election within a Month, reckoning from the Day on which the Election shall be Notify'd to him, and to get it Confirm'd within three Months.

The Sixth imports, That those who give their Vote for an unworthy Person, ought not to forfeit the Power of Electing, unless the Person they Vote for be Elected; tho' their Action be very Criminal.

The Seventh, That he who has given his Vote for a Person, or consented to his Election, is not to be admitted to oppose it afterwards; unless he discovers in that Person some Vice or Defect which lay conceal'd before.

The ſecond General Council of Lions in 1274.

The Eighth, That when there are two Thirds of Votes for one Perſon, the other Third is not to be allow'd to object any thing againſt the Electors, or the Elected.

In the Ninth 'tis declar'd, That tho' Pope Alexander III. has with Reaſon plac'd the Cauſes of the Elections of Biſhops in the number of Greater Cauſes, yet if it happens that an Appeal be injudiciouſly made for an apparently frivolous Cauſe; thoſe kinds of Appeals ſhall not be brought before the Holy See: But that 'tis requiſite in order to have any Cauſe brought immediately before it, that the Appeal be grounded upon a probable Reaſon, and which would upon Proof appear to be Lawful: That the Parties are allow'd to deſiſt from the Appeal, provided there be no Trick in ſuch a deſiſting; for if the Judges to whom it belong'd to take Cognizance thereof, do find that there is any, they ought to enjoin the Parties to appear before the Holy See within a convenient Time.

The Tenth imports, That if it be objected againſt a Perſon, That he is incapable becauſe of his Ignorance; it ſhall be referr'd to a Tryal, and if in the Iſſue he be found Capable, no regard ſhall be had to any of the Reaſons of his Adverſary.

The Eleventh Iſſues out Excommunication againſt thoſe who do any wrong to the Electors; becauſe they would not give their Votes for thoſe whom they recommended to them.

The Twelfth likewiſe Iſſues out Excommunication againſt thoſe who would de Novo take up the Regalia, the Care and the Title of the Defender of Churches and Monaſteries, or who favour thoſe who do ſo: And for thoſe who enjoy thoſe Privileges, either by Virtue of the Foundation or by any ancient Cuſtom, they are prohibited from abuſing their Power, and from Seiſing during the Vacancy, the Goods of the Church which are not Part of the Incomes or Revenues thereof, and from ſuffering the Goods of the Church to be rifled.

The Thirteenth declares, The Preſentations of Cures made by Perſons under Five and twenty Years of Age, to be Null and Void, and obliges the Curates to Reſidence, and to take Prieſt's Orders in the Year of their Promotion.

The Fourteenth prohibits the giving a Curacy in Commendam to a Perſon under Age, or for above ſix Months.

The Fifteenth has for its Title, Of the Seaſons of Ordinations, and of the Qualification of thoſe who are to be Ordain'd. They are therein Suſpended from the Power of Ordaining for a whole Year, who ſhall Ordain the Clerks of another Dioceſs.

The Sixteenth has for its Title, Of Bigamy. The Pope therein Determines, That thoſe who have been Marry'd twice, have forfeited all the Privileges of the Clergy, and that they are prohibited from having ſo much as the Clerical Habit and Tonſure.

The Seventeenth imports, That the Chapters who would be diſcharg'd from ſeveral Offices, ought before they Cauſe it to ceaſe, to exhibit a Declaration in Writing of the Reaſons why they are willing to have that Office ceaſe: And that 'tis not Lawful to throw down the Images or Statues of the Virgin Mary, and of the other Saints.

The Eighteenth imports, That all thoſe who have Pluralities of Dignities, or Benefices with the Cure of Souls, ſhall bring their Diſpenſations to the Ordinaries, and if they ſhall not be found to be Canonical; then they ſhall appear before the Holy See. It likewiſe prohibits the Ordinaries from beſtowing ſuch ſort of Benefices on thoſe who have the like already.

The Nineteenth has for its Title, de Poſtulatione: It relates to the Oath which Advocates and Proctors are bound to take.

The Twentieth, under the Title, Of what is done through force or fear; declares the Abſolutions of Excommunication extorted by Force or by Fear, to be Null and Void.

The Twenty firſt moderates the Canon of Clement V. of Benefices Vacant in Curiâ, the Preſentation of which belongs to the Pope, by granting the Ordinaries leave to Collate them within a Month.

The Twenty ſecond prohibits the Biſhops from Alienating the Goods of Churches in any manner whatever, without the Conſent of the Chapter, and Declares the Alienations otherwiſe made to be Null and Void.

The Twenty third cancels and puts down all the Orders of Mendicant Friars eſtabliſh'd ſince the Lateran Council under Innocent III. which have not been approv'd by the Holy See; and with reſpect to thoſe which have been approv'd of by the Holy See, he allows thoſe who are admitted Monks to live in their Houſes; but forbids them to admit Novices, and to make any new Acquiſitions: And as to thoſe Houſes and Eſtates which they have acquir'd, he would have them be reſerv'd for the uſe of the Holy Land. He declares, That this Conſtitution does not extend to the Orders of Minor and Jacobine Friars, and allows the Orders of the Auguſtine Carmelites and Hermits eſtabliſh'd before this Council to remain in their preſent State and Condition, till there ſhall be ſome new Order made upon their account. Laſtly, He permits thoſe of the Orders which are not approv'd of to go into another Order, provided notwithſtanding that no entire Order, nor Monaſtery ſhall enter into another without ſpecial Leave from the Holy See.

The Twenty fourth Renews the Prohibitions of Exacting or even receiving any thing for the Right of Procuration, without Perſonal Viſitation.

The Twenty fifth is about the Sanctity of Churches: 'Tis therein forbidden to hold Aſſemblies, Pleadings, Markets, &c. in Conſecrated Places.

The Twenty ſixth and ſeventh are againſt Uſurers, who are Condemn'd to very ſevere Penalties.

The Twenty eighth abolliſhes the Uſe of Reprizals.

The Three laſt Canons are about Excommunication. The Firſt imports, That the Canonical Admoni-

Admonition ought to express by Name those who are to be Excommunicated, and that it ought to be done three times one after another within the space of some Days. The Second, That the Absolutions ad Cautelam cannot be of force in the Sentences of General Interdictions of Towns or other Places. The Third which is the Thirty first and last Canon of this Council declares those Men Excommunicated who would force the Ecclesiastical Judges by the seisure of their Temporalities to revoke the Sentences of Interdiction or Excommunication which they have pass'd.

The second General Council of Lions in 1274.

These Constitutions bear date November the First, in the third Year of the Pontificate of Gregory X.

The Council of Saltzburg in the Years 1274 and 1281.

Frederick Arch-Bishop of Saltzburg and Legate of the Holy See, in the Year 1274, held a Provincial Council in his Metropolis, wherein he Publish'd the Canons of the Second General Council of Lions, and order'd the Reading the Constitutions publish'd by Guy Cardinal and Legate of the Holy See, in the Council held at Vienna in Austria in the Year 1267, to which he added Twenty Four Articles.

The Council of Saltzbourg in 1274 & 1281.

By the First, He Orders the Abbots of the Order of Saint Benedict to hold Provincial Chapters every Year for the Reforming the Monastical Discipline.

By the Second, He orders, That the Run-away Monks shall be fetch'd back again, That those who Commit Enormous Crimes shall be put into Prison. He prohibits Abbots from dispensing from their Obedience the Monks who pass into a more Austere Order.

In the Third, He reproves the Abuse of several Abbots who sent Monks into other Monasteries for slight Faults: He orders, That they shall punish them for their Faults in the Monasteries where they have Committed them, and that they shall not make the Monks change their Monastery unless the Bishop consents to it.

The Council of Saltzburgh in the Year 1291.

The Council of Saltzburgh in 1291.

THE City of Acra having been taken from the Christians by the Sultan of Babylon in the Year 1291, Pope Nicholas X. Order'd Provincial Councils to be held for the finding out ways and means of re-entring into Possession of the Holy Land. The Knights Hospitalers, Templars and Teutonicks were accus'd of not having done their Duty. This gave occasion to the Council Held the same Year at Saltzburgh, of Proposing to the Pope the Uniting these Three Orders into One.

There are Three Decrees of a Council at Saltzburgh under Arch-Bishop Conrade without Date, which are commonly attributed to this Assembly.

By the First 'tis order'd, That to remedy the Abuse of Marriages clandestinely Contracted, there shall be Six Honest and Creditable Persons of the Neighbourhood, or Parish of the Contracters, who shall be Present and serve as Witnesses of the Marriage. The same Canon Issues forth the Penalty of Excommunication ipso facto against those who shall transgress this Order, or shall be present at Clandestine Marriages, or shall suffer them to be Contracted in their Houses.

In the Second the Secular and Regular Clergy are prohibited from Acquiring, Enjoying, or Retaining under any Title whatsoever, any Offices or Employments depending on Secular Princes, or Lords, under the Penalty of Forfeiting their Priveleges and Benefices.

The Third is against several Vagrant Scholars of a loose Life, who styl'd themselves Clerks, and ran about the Country.

The Council of London in the Year 1291.

The Council of London in 1291.

THIS Council was Held by Bernard Bishop of Grosseto Legate of the Holy See, who therein order'd an Edict to be made whereby the Jews were entirely and perpetually Banish'd the Kingdom of England: King Edward demanded and obtain'd an Impost on the Clergy, under Pretence of going to the Relief of the Holy Land: And he therein would renew, in spight of the Legate's Opposition, the Prohibition made against Ecclesiasticks and Monks Buying of Inheritances.

The Council of Saumur in the Year 1294.

The Council of Saumur in 1294.

REginald of Montbason Arch-Bishop of Tours, Held a Provincial Council at Saumur in October 1294, wherein he Publish'd Five Canons.

By the First, the Clerks and Monks are enjoin'd to be Habited agreeably to their State and Condition, and are prohibited from wearing colour'd Cloths.

The Second adjusts the Conditions under which Absolution ought to be given to the Excommunicate at the Point of Death.

The Third prohibits the Ecclesiastical Judges the imposing of a Pecuniary Mulct for the Punishment of Enormous Crimes.

The Fourth prohibits the Arch-Deacons, Arch-Priests, and others who have Authority, from sending Clerks throughout the Dioceses to hear Confessions.

The Fifth is against those who obstruct the Church-Men from Receiving the Tithes.

The First is against the Irregularities of the Clergy.

The Second prohibits the Holding of Courts of Judicature on Festivals.

By the Third, the Clerks are prohibited from submitting themselves in Personal Causes to Civil Justice.

The

The Council of Rouen in 1299.

The Secular Judges from taking Cognizance of Matters of Fact which relate against those who offer any Violence to the Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction.
from the Bishops from Granting to the Regulars the Power of Absolving in Reserv'd to be only to some of whose Prudence and Ability they are very well assur'd, and like-upon condition that this Grant shall not extend to the Confession which ought to be made to proper Curate or Pastor, unless by his Consent.
The Last orders the Publishing and Executing of the fore-going Decrees.

CHAP. VII.

Account of the Contests between the Divines of Paris, and the Dominican Friars: And of the Writings of William de Saint Amour.

The Contests between the Divines of Paris and the Dominican Friars.

The Year 1229, during the Minority of King Lewis the Saint, and the Regency of Queen Blanche of Castile, the University of Paris not being able to have Justice done them, for the death of some of its Scholars, who had been Kill'd by the Soldiers, left off their Publick Lectures, retir'd part to Rheims and part to Angers, according to the Grant which they pretended to have to doing in such Cases, by the Bull of Gregory IX. In the absence of the Secular Doctors, the Do- who had not hitherto taken the Degree, apply'd themselves to the Bishop of Paris and to the Chancellor of the University, to be admitted Doctors, and took Possession of one of the Divinity-

Four Years after the University being Re-establish'd in Paris, and Regulated by Order the Holy See, the Dominicans not only kept what they were in Possession of, but likewise set another Divinity-Professorship among them in spight of the Chancellor of the University. They likewise spread themselves in the other Cities of France, and there open'd Publick Schools. The Doctors of Paris fearing the Consequences of these New Establishments, and that other Regulars would likewise set up two Divinity-Professorships, which would put a stop to the Profession of the Secular Doctors, made a Decree, whereby it was order'd, That none of the Regulars for the future should have two Divinity-Professorships at one and the same time. The Dominicans stood out against this Decree, and the University being again oblig'd in the Year 1250, to cease its Lectures, because they could not get Justice done them for the Injuries done to their Scholars (some of whom were Imprison'd, others Beaten, and others Kill'd) the Dominicans declar'd, That they would not put this Decree in Execution, unless the University would Grant them two Professorships by an Authen-tick Act. The University Remonstrated to them, That their Concern was not about two Divinity-Professorships, nor about the particular Interests of the Members of the University; but about Liberty offer'd to the whole Body; and that they had done very ill in making their Advantages by the Misfortunes of the University. These Contests lasted about two Months; but at last the University having obtain'd the Satisfaction which they requir'd, and being at quiet, came to another Resolution, whereby it was resolv'd, That no Person should for the future be Promoted to a Doctor's Degree, till he had first taken a Solemn Oath to observe the Decrees and Constitutions of the University. And that the Dominicans might make no scruple of taking of it, 'tis added, "Provided there be nothing in their Statutes Prohibited by the Rule of the Dominican Friars which I Profess, any thing dishonourable, or contrary to the Salvation of Souls, to Humane and Divine Right, the Publick Interest, or to the Holy Church of God. Notwithstanding this, the Dominicans re-fus'd to take that Oath, unless the University would Grant them two Professorships in Divinity. The University, in Chastisement of their Disobedience, after fifteen day's Delay and divers Admonitions, Expell'd them their Society, by a Solemn Decree which was Publish'd in all the Colleges. The Dominicans got Pope Innocent IV. to Re-establish them, and obtain'd of him a Commission Directed to the Bishop of Amiens for their Re-establishment in their University, with Authority of making use of Ecclesiastical Censures against the Members of the University who oppos'd their Re-establishment. The University being advertis'd thereof, apply'd themselves to the Count of Poitiers, who Govern'd the Realm jointly with Queen Blanche in the Absence of King Saint Lewis her Brother who was in the Holy Land, and Remonstrated to him, That tho' all respect to the Holy See, they were ready to return to their Duty. Provided their Statutes remain'd in full force, till the Pope, who Determin'd all things, Hearing both Parties, should order otherwise. However the Dominicans prevail'd with the Bishop of Amiens to Delegate for the Executing the Bull which was directed to him, a Canon of Notre Dame which they back'd by a Letter immediately directed to him in Person, in pursuance whereof, that Canon Suspended all the Members of the University from their Functions, and caus'd this Decree of Suspension to be Publish'd, notwithstanding the Appeal made to the Holy See. The University for their parts caus'd the Decree for the Expulsion of the Dominicans to be Publish'd, and in the Year 1253, Wrote a circular Letter to all the Prelates of the Kingdom, to engage them to succour them in the Oppression under which they groan'd. At last in the Year 1254, Pope Innocent IV. having by his Decretal restrain'd the Pretensions of Regulars, by prohibiting them from admitting Parishioners into their Churches on Sundays and Holy-Days, and Administring the Sacrament of Penance without the leave of the Curates, from Preaching in their Churches during the time of the Parochial Divine Service and from Preaching in Parish-Churches, unless invited thereto by the Curates, or had obtain'd their leave, and from performing any other Hierarchical Office in

The Contests between the Divines of Paris and the Dominican Friars.

Defiance to the Ordinaries, tho' it pronounc'd nothing about the Affair of the University of Paris; this Decree render'd the Dominicans more moderate in the pursuit of their Pretensions. Pope Alexander IV. Dying December 13. 1254. His Successor Alexander IV. revok'd the Decree on Candlemas-Day the same Year, and on the Fourteenth of April 1255. he Publish'd the Bull which began with these Words, Quasi Lignum Vitæ, by which he order'd the Academicks of Paris to admit all the Dominicans, especially those who were Advanc'd to the Divinity-Professorships, into their Society, and to permit them to enjoy all their Rights and Privileges, and to have as many Professorships as they pleas'd. And for the more speedy Execution of this Bull, he sent another the same Day to the Bishops of Orleans and Auxerre, by which he Granted them a Commission to see that the former was observ'd, with Power of using Ecclesiastical Censures against those who oppos'd it. Those two Bishops in pursuance of that Bull, Proceeded against the Seculars of the University, who being retir'd for a time from their Colleges, and being return'd again to the City; return'd Answer, That they were no longer of the University, and consequently that the Pope's Bull did not reach them. However they wrote a Letter to the Pope, whereby they declar'd to him, That not being willing to oppose his Bull, tho' they had several Lawful Exceptions to offer against it, that they might not be engag'd in such Processes as were not agreeable to their Profession; but that considering that it was more for their Advantage to be depriv'd of the Rights and Privileges of the University, than to join in one Body with the Dominicans, which by Experience they knew would be prejudicial to them, and which they were afraid would prove Pernicious to the whole Church; they had withdrawn themselves and renounc'd the Rights and Privileges of the University, that they might not have any thing to do with the Dominicans, yet without contradicting the Bull of his Holiness: That having recourse to his Clemency, they humbly pray him to revoke the Sentence of Excommunication issued out against them, and to Re-place them in the same Liberty and Condition in which they were before; assuring him at the same time, that they were so far perswaded that they could not in Conscience admit the Dominicans, that they would rather Transplant their Schools into another Kingdom, or go back to their own Country, where they might have their Liberty; than be put under the intolerable Yoke of a forc'd and disadvantagious Society. Before this Letter came to the Hands of the Pope, the Dominicans obtain'd three Bulls, almost the same Day, directed to the Bishops of Orleans and Auxerre, which order'd the Execution of the First Bull, and enjoin'd these two Commissioners to oblige all the Members of the University who would not admit the Dominicans, and even those who were retir'd to avoid entring into a Society with them, to have forfeited all their Offices and Benefices. The Execution of these Bulls was stop'd by the Order of King Saint Lewis, who was minded to restore Peace to the University, and suppress these Contests. To attain this, he join'd his Remonstrances with those of the Bishops Conven'd at Paris, to engage the Secular Doctors and Dominicans to refer themselves to the Arch-Bishops of Bourges, Rheims, Sens and Roan. These Four Prelates having Heard both Parties, and Consulted with other Bishops, put an end at last to this Contest the First of March 1256, by an Accommodation, in which the Seculars consented, that the Dominicans should for ever enjoy the two Divinity-Professorships, upon Condition, That those Monks remain'd separate from the Scholastical Society of the Secular Doctors and Scholars of Paris, provided that they renounc'd the Bulls which they had, or might obtain contrary to these Conditions; that they would endeavour to have them revok'd, and that they would no more set upon the whole University, or any of its Members. This Treaty one would have thought should have restor'd Peace to the University, but at Rome they were not inclin'd to suffer a stop to be thus put to several Bulls, by an Accommodation in which the Holy See had no Hand. At the same time the Treaty was concluded Alexander made a Bull, by which he order'd the Bishop of Paris to Excommunicate all those who hinder'd the Dominicans from Confessing, Preaching, Teaching, or being admitted into the Schools of others. Sometime after (in the beginning of May) he order'd by another Bull, directed to all the Members of the University of Paris, the Execution of the former Bulls, and by a Second Dated the same Day he enjoin'd the Bishop of Paris to make use of Canonical Penalties to oblige those of the University who had molested the Dominicans, to give them satisfaction, by calling in, if need were, the Secular Power. He exhorted King Saint Lewis by a Third Bull, To succour the Bishop of Paris in quelling the Insolence of those who oppos'd the Execution of the Bulls. The Dominicans, not willing that it should seem they had any Hand in the Non-Execution of the Treaty, requested the Pope, That he would Revoke his Bulls, and Approve of the Accommodation. But the Pope on the contrary, in a Bull Dated June 18. 1256, declar'd, that, That Treaty having been made without his knowledge, and to the Prejudice of what he had order'd, he Disapprov'd it, and by Name declar'd William de Saint Amour, Odo of Douay, Doctors in Divinity, Master Nicholas de Bar-sur-Aube, and Christian Canon of Beauvais, as the Principal Authors of this Disturbance, to have forfeited all their Dignities and Benefices: He forbids their Teaching, and all manner of Persons from Hearing their Lectures; order'd, That they should be Banish'd the Kingdom; declar'd, That he would inflict the same Punishment on the rest, if they did not submit within Fifteen Days after the Publication of his Bull; and enjoin'd the Bishop of Paris to Excommunicate them, and to give away their Benefices. He Revis'd and Confirm'd those very Orders by two other Bulls Issu'd out about the end of the same Month.

The Contests between William of St. Amour and the Dominicans.

The Contest between the Body of the University and the Dominicans, became at last a Private Quarrel, between the Monks and William de Saint Amour Doctor of the Sorbonne, and Divinity-Professor, one of the most zealous Defenders of the Privileges of the University, and of the greatest Adversaries the Dominicans had to deal with. In the Year 1254, they Accus'd him of having advanc'd several things contrary to the Honour of the Holy See, and of having made a Scandalous Libel against the Pope. This Charge being brought before the King upon the Complaints of Gregory the Apostolick Nuncio, the matter was referr'd to the Bishop of Paris, before whom William of Saint Amour clearly Prov'd his Innocence, and the falsity of that Accusation. The Dominicans afterwards invented another, and under pretence of several Propositions, which the University of Paris had advanc'd against the lusty Mendicants, without Naming any Person, they Accus'd William of Saint Amour of Calumniating their Order, and Presented to the King a Writing containing several Erroneous Propositions, which they imputed to him. William of Saint Amour having procur'd a Copy thereof, prov'd in a Sermon which he Preach'd in the Church of Innocents, That he had never Taught those Errors, and had only advanc'd such Truths as were maintainable by several Passages of the Holy Scriptures. Sometime after he Compos'd his Book concerning The Perils of the Last Times, which occasion'd the Dominicans to renew their Complaints against him. He Compos'd it, as 'tis said, by the Order of several Bishops, to discover by Holy Writ the Character of the False Prophets, who were to come in the Last Times, and to oppose the Book call'd The Eternal Gospel, the Doctrine of which began to spread it self. Pope Alexander IV. in rejecting the Accommodation made between the University and the Dominicans, Condemn'd by Name William of Saint Amour, the principal Author of that Treaty, depriv'd him of a Chappel which he had, prohibited him from Teaching, declar'd him to have forfeited all the Offices and Benefices which he might have, and requir'd that he should be Banish'd the Kingdom. This Sentence was not Executed against him, William of Saint Amour was not Proscrib'd, but still liv'd at Paris. The Dominicans Delated him before the Bishops of the Provinces of Sens and Rheims, who met at Paris in the Year 1256, and Accus'd him of having advanc'd several False and Erroneous Propositions, contrary to good Manners and the Honour of their Order. William of Saint Amour Appear'd before those Prelates, and declar'd to them, That he had never advanc'd any Proposition contrary to Truth and to the Salvation of Souls, that he had not Condemn'd any Order, that had been Approv'd by the Church of Rome; that he was ready to maintain what he had advanc'd, or to correct and retract, if they thought it proper. Those Bishops offer'd the Dominicans and William of Saint Amour to Hold a Council, and to Invite thither the Bishops of the Neighbouring Provinces and several Learned Doctors, to Try their Contests. William of Saint Amour and his Party accepted of the Proposal; but the Dominicans would not refer themselves to the Determination of the Council, so the Affair remain'd Un-decided, and the Quarrel rose higher than ever. Then the University thought it was their Duty to send Deputies to Rome in their own Defence. They made choice of William of Saint Amour, Odo of Doway, Nicholas de Bar-Sur-Aube, John of Gastiville, and John Bellin, to demand the Re-establishment of the Peace of the University, and with Orders to maintain the Book concerning the Perils of the Last Times, made by William of Saint Amour, and to urge the Condemnation of the Book call'd The Everlasting Gospel. These Deputies procur'd Recommendatory Letters from the Chapters of the Churches of the Province of Rheims, and prepar'd for their Journey to Rome; but the Dominicans were before-hand with them, and having sent the Book concerning the Perils of the last Times to the Pope, it was examin'd by the Cardinals, and afterwards condemn'd by Alexander IV. as containing perverse Opinions, contrary to the Power and Authority of the Pope and of other Bishops, contrary to the Honour of those who make Profession of Poverty for God's sake, and who do a great deal of good in the Church by their Zeal; contrary to the Salutary State of poor Mendicant Friars, especially the Dominican and Minor Friars; lastly, as a Book capable of raising great Scandals and Disturbances, of causing the ruin of several Souls, and of diverting the Faithful from Devotion and Charity, from Conversion and Embracing Religion. 'Tis upon these Grounds that the Pope declares this Book to be Wicked, Criminal and Execrable, and Prohibits all manner of Persons from approving, maintaining, reading and keeping it by them. He wrote at the same time to the King and to the Bishops of France several Bulls against this Book full of Expressions of Indignation, and exhorted the University to treat the Dominicans kindly, and to condemn sincerely the Book of William of St. Amour. But because he was afraid, that his Orders would not punctually be executed, he heap'd Bulls upon Bulls, and made use of all the Methods he could to get them to be executed. However the Deputies of the University not in the least startled at all these Efforts, continu'd their Journey; but being come to Anagnia where the Pope then was, there was only William of St. Amour who stood firm, the other three condemn'd his Book: As for his part he defended himself so well that the Pope sent him away Absolv'd. However he was no sooner gon and return'd Sick from Rome, but the Pope sent him a Letter, by which he forbad him to go into France, under the Penalty of Excommunication and of losing all his Benefices, and debarr'd him from ever Teaching or Preaching as a punishment of several Faults, especially for having compos'd the Abominable and Pernicious Book concerning the Perils of the last Times. At the same time he sent several other Bulls into France, to procure at any rate the Execution of his Decree, against the Book and Person of William of St. Amour, and drew up an Act containing all the Points which he would have to be Executed in the University of Paris about the Mendicant Friars, which are (1.) That they shall be admitted into the Body of the University, and that the Bull Quasi Lignum Vitæ, shall be Executed according to the Form and Tenor thereof without any Opposition. (2.) That the Dominican and Minor Friars, especially Thomas Aquinas and Bonadventure shall be admitted bonâ fide among the Doctors and Professors of the Faculty. (3.) That they shall not force the Mendicant Friars to take any Oath, or make any Treaty contrary to this Order. (4.) That the University of Paris shall not be allow'd to Translate themselves elsewhere under any Pretence whatsoever. (5.) That they shall Preach and Teach in Paris, that the Book condemn'd by the Pope deserves it; That the Pope may send Preachers and Confessors where he pleases without the consent of the Inferior Prelates or Curates: That the Arch-bishops and Bishops may likewise do the ſame without the conſent of the Curates: That a State of Poverty embrac'd for the ſake of Jeſus Chriſt, is a State of Salvation and Perfection: That the Poor Monks who have forſaken their All for the ſake of Jeſus Chriſt may Beg for their living without Working with their Hands, tho' they be ſtrong and luſty, eſpecially thoſe who are employ'd in Reading, Preaching and Expounding the Word of God: That it ſhall be declar'd, That what is ſaid in that Book, concerning False Prophets, falſe Apoſtles, forerunners of Anti-Chriſt who crept into Houſes, ought not to be underſtood of the Orders of the Dominican and Minor Friars: And that laſtly, it ſhall be acknowledg'd, That there have been Miracles wrought by the Saints who have been of thoſe two Orders. The Pope order'd the Cardinals to draw up this Writing, and ſent it to the Biſhop of Paris, with Orders to get it Approv'd of and Executed by Odo of Doway, and Chriſtian Canon of Beauvais, and in caſe they would not do it, to declare them Perjur'd. Notwithſtanding all theſe Bulls, the Secular Doctors of the Faculty of Paris would not Admit the Dominicans, and perſever'd in their Separation from the Regulars, tho' William of Saint Amour to avoid the Storm that threatned him, retir'd into his Village of Saint Amour in the Franche-County. Alexander IV. thundred out freſh Bulls againſt them in the Year 1259, directed to the Biſhop of Paris, and carry'd the Point ſo far by his Threats and Cenſures, That he oblig'd moſt of the Members of the Univerſity to Re-unite themſelves with the Mendicants who were Admitted into the Body of the Univerſity, by a Decree Dated February 21. 1259, upon Condition, That they ſhould always have the loweſt Place in the Acts and Aſſemblies, even after thoſe of the other Regular Orders. At laſt the Pope Dy'd on the 24*th*. of June in the Year 1261, after he had Granted above Forty Bulls in favour of the Dominicans, againſt the Univerſity of Paris, or againſt its Members. After his Death there was a little Quiet in the Univerſity of Paris. William of St. Amour return'd thither, and to juſtify himſelf, he alter'd the Title and the method of his Book concerning the Perils of the Laſt Times, and ſent it to Pope Clement IV. that he might Examine it. That Pope return'd him Anſwer, That he ought to forget what was paſs'd, and beware of falling into the ſame Extravagancies: That the Book which he had ſent him contain'd the ſame in ſubſtance as his Firſt, tho' a little diſguis'd; but that not having Read it quite through, he could not give him his Opinion of it, as he would do when he had made an end of Reading it. and had conſer'd with Perſons of Judgment about it. This Letter bears Date October 17, 1266. The Year of the Death of William of Saint Amour has never yet been taken notice of by any Author. But his Epitaph which is in the Church of Saint Amour in the County of Burgundy where he was Interr'd, informs us, that he Dy'd in the Year 1272. The Funeral Regiſter-Book of the Church of Maſcon, informs us that it was the Thirteenth of September. This was communicated to us by Monſieur Francatel who made ſearch after it. The Works of William of Saint Amour were Printed in the Year 1632, by the care of a certain Doctor of the Sorbonne, who has conceal'd his Name under that of Alitophilus; as well as the Name of the City where they were Printed, and the Printer's Name, under this Enigma, Conſtantiæ ad Inſigne bonæ fidei apud Alitophilos.

The Book concerning the Perils of the Laſt Times, is preceeded by a Preface on the Book of Pſalms, an imperfect Commentary on the Firſt Pſalm, and a Sermon on the Parable of the Publican and Phariſee, in which William of Saint Amour deſcribes the Characters of the Phariſees ſet down in Scripture, and applies them to the Hypocrites of his Time, "and chiefly (ſays he) to thoſe who pretend by "their Habit and outward Behaviour, by a more Auſtere Life, and by Spiritual Exerciſes which they "have Invented and Eſtabliſh'd by their Traditions, to an External ſemblance of Sanctity and Religion "in order to be Prais'd and had in Honour by Men: Theſe are (adds he) the Impoſtor-Monks, as "may be prov'd by their Works, as it is Written by St. Matthew Chap. 7. You ſhall know them by their "Fruits: I do not mean by thoſe Works which they ſhow to make themſelves believ'd to be Holy: "For they ſeem to be good, and for that Reaſon it is, that 'tis obſerv'd in the Gloſſary on that Place, "That in the Eyes of Men they ſeem to be Righteous by their Faſts, their Prayers, and their Alms; "but theſe are not their Fruits, becauſe theſe Works are imputed to them as Sinful, by reaſon of that "Vain-glory, which they aim at: Therefore they are known by the Works which they do not ſhow, "tho' they do them to obtain the Glory and Pleaſures of the World; becauſe there are ſome among "them, who, as the Apoſtle ſays, in the Second Epiſtle to Timothy Chap. 3. are rather Lovers of Pleaſure than Lovers of God. He afterwards ſets down Four infallible Signs whereby to diſcover them, "taken out of the ſame Goſpel: They love the firſt Places in the Feaſts, the chief Seats in the Synagogues, to be ſaluted in publick Places, and to be call'd by Men Rabbi. He afterwards explains thoſe Tokens after the following manner: On the Firſt (ſays he) it ought to be obſerv'd, That they may "be ſaid to love the Firſt Places in Feaſts, who frequent the Tables of Kings, Princes and Prelates, "who are the firſt at them to get the beſt of the Treat; which is unbecoming Regulars, and eſpecially Preachers, &c. He likewiſe adds another Proof of the Love they have to the Uppermoſt Places in Feaſts, viz. The Curioſity they have of diving into the Affairs of Great Men, and of intermeddling with them: Upon the ſecond token, which is the Loving of the Uppermoſt Seats in the Synagogues; he obſerves, That they are juſtly to be charg'd with this, who get themſelves to be nominated by the Secular Powers for to Preach in Churches on the Great Feſtivals, without having any deference to the Authority of the Biſhops and other Prelates, who intrude themſelves into the Miniſtery without being Call'd thereto, and who aim more at ſhewing their own Parts and Eloquence, than at Preaching the Word of God. Upon the Third Sign or Token of Loving to be Saluted in the Publick Places, he applies it to the Regulars, who get themſelves to be ſummon'd into the Conſiſtories of Princes and Prelates, who frequent them, who concern themſelves in giving their Judgments and Counſels in them, in order to attract the Reſpect of thoſe who have any Buſineſs there. Laſtly, on the Laſt Token, viz. Their Deſire of being Call'd Rabbi, Rabbi, he Obſerves, That it is very

The Works of William of St. Amour.

This Discourse is only an Introduction of that which William of Saint Amour establishes in his Book concerning the Perils of the Last Times. In the First Chapter he Proves from that Place of St. Paul, 2 Tim. 3. 1. That at the Latter End of the Church there should happen Perilous Times. In the Second he describes the Characters of those who shall be the Cause of those Perils, as they are set down in the same Place: Men Lovers of themselves, Covetous, Boasters, Proud, Blasphemers, Disobedient to Parents and Superiors, Unthankful, Unholy, Unnatural, false Accusers, Incontinent, without Charity, Traytors, Heady, High-minded, Lovers of Pleasure more than Lovers of God: Such as creep into Houses, &c. He adds, That they are those false Teachers, and false Prophets foretold by our Saviour, which he applies to those who Preach without a Call, without a Mission, and without the leave of the Curates, under Pretence, That they have Permission from the Pope, or the Bishop. He observes, That he would not Dispute the Authority of the Pope, or of the Diocesan Bishop; but that the Licence which they Grant to some to Preach, signifies only in case they be Invited thereto; since the Bishops themselves can do nothing out of their own Dioceses, unless call'd by their Brethren, and that 'tis not to be suppos'd, That the Pope Grants a Power to a great many Persons of Preaching to one and the same Auditory, if they be not invited to it by the Curates. In the Third he demonstrates what those Characters were by which those Dangerous Men shall sow those Diforders, Namely, a semblance of Piety, Religion and Charity, which shall make them to pass for true Christians. In the Fourth he explains the Perils to which the Faithful shall be expos'd by the Imposture of those false Preachers, who shall resist the Truth as Jannes and Jambres resisted Moses, that is to say, who shall seduce Princes and the Christian People by their shew of Wisdom, and shall divert them from obeying the Counsels of their Lawful Superiors in order to follow their Corrupt Maxims and Morals. In the Fifth he shews the ways which they shall make use of to seduce them; viz. by creeping into Houses, by making them discover their Secrets in Confessions, by seducing Women and the Simple; by making themselves Lords and Masters of their Souls, and by forcing them to make Vows; and by diverting them from the Submission which they ow to their Pastors. In the Sixth he says, that those who shall not foresee those Perils shall be in danger of perishing by them. He proves in the Seventh, That those who are the Cause of them shall perish. In the Eighth he endeavours to prove by the Signs set down in Scripture, That these Perils are not far off. In the Ninth he shews, That it chiefly belongs to the Prelats to foresee, discover, and divert those Perils. In the Tenth he demonstrates the Punishments to which they are liable in this World and the next, if they do not oppose them. In the Eleventh he proves, That tho' those Perils have been foretold, yet they might be diverted for a time, if vigorously oppos'd. In the Twelfth he explains the Methods which ought to be made use of in order to divert them: Which are, (1.) To consider who those Persons are who creep into Houses, and whether there be any such in the Church. (2.) When one shall have discover'd them, to inform others of them. (3.) To Injoyn them to avoid such. (4.) To hinder them from Preaching and Teaching. (5.) To oblige those who are of their Sect to withdraw themselves from them. (6.) To hinder others from entring into their Sect, and in general to shun the False Prophets, the Idle who will not work with their Hands, and the Inquisitive. He in this place oppugns the Practice of begging when one is strong and Lusty, and when a Man may get his Living by his Labour, and says, That 'tis a piece of Injustice. In the Thirteenth he examines among what sort of Persons we ought to search after these Seducers, and pretends, That 'tis not among the Pagans, nor among the Wicked or Ignorant Christians that this Search ought to be made; but amongst the Wise Persons, among those who profess to follow the Dictates of Jesus Christ, who seem to be most Holy and most Prudent, that one would think them to be the Elect of Jesus Christ. In a word, in the last Chapter he reckons up Forty one Marks to distinguish the False Apostles from the True, of which, says he, some are Infallible, and others Probable. In the beginning he protests that he had no Design of advancing any thing against any particular Person, or against any State or Order of Men, but only in general to declaim against the Sins of the Wicked, and the Perils of the Church: However 'tis easy to see, that he means the Dominican Friars, and that 'tis at them he aims, and whom he sets upon in this Book which he submits to the Correction of the Church.

This Treatise is follow'd by two Pieces wherein he resolves two Queries, viz. In the First, Whether it be lawful to give all one's Estate to the Poor and be reduc'd to Beggery? In the Second, Whether one ought to bestow any Alms on a lusty Mendicant? He resolves both in the Negative, founds his Resolutions on several Passages out of the Scriptures and Fathers, and proposes to himself the Objections which might be made to it, to which he returns his Answers. He concludes the Second Query by asserting, That the Preachers ought not to ask any Money lest it be an occasion to them of Covetousness, and lest they should seem to be guilty of Simony.

Those Writings are follow'd by the Answers which William of St. Amour made to the Erroneous Propositions which were laid to his Charge. He therein shews either that he never had advanc'd any such thing, or that they had put a false Construction on what he had said; or that they had added to and perverted his Expressions. (1.) They accus'd him of having said, That he who Preaches commits a Mortal Sin, if he receives or asks any thing of those to whom he Preaches. He replies, That he had never advanc'd this Proposition; that on the contrary he had said, That the Preacher who has a Lawful Mission may receive for his Subsistence, and that 'tis his Due. (2.) Of having said, That the Monks may not be Doctors nor hold Dignities. He replies, That he had not said that; but had only said, That the Monks who have abandon'd the World, ought not to be over-sollicitous in being made Doctors, as they ought not to hunt after the Riches, Honours, and Pleasures of the World. (3.) Of having having ſaid, That 'tis not lawful for Monks to reſide in the Courts of Princes and Prelates, He Replies, That he had only ſaid, that it was dangerous for them. (4.) Of having ſaid, That he who preſents himſelf to Preach without being call'd thereto, is guilty of a Mortal Sin. He replies, that he had only ſaid, That one ought not to intrude into that Miniſtery without being Call'd thereto. (5.) That he who admitted another's Pariſhoner to Confeſſion, was guilty of a Mortal Sin: To which, he replies, That he had added, without the Permiſſion of the Superior, (6.) That a Biſhop who Preaches out of his own Dioceſs, commits a Mortal Sin. He Replies, That he had never ſaid thus; but had only ſaid, That 'tis not Lawful for a Biſhop to Execute his Epiſcopal Functions out of his own Dioceſs, without the leave of the Ordinary. (7.) Of having ſaid, That he who gives away his whole Eſtate to live himſelf upon Charity, is not in a State of Salvation. He Replies, That he had only ſaid, That a Man in Health, who has not wherewithal to live, ought to Work with his Hands to get himſelf a Livelyhood: And to give a full Reſolution to this Head, he declares, That he who is not Skill'd in any Trade, may Beg till he has Learn'd a Trade: That thoſe who are naturally incapable of Working, ſuch as Children, Aged, and Infirm Perſons might likewiſe Beg: That the ſame might be extended to thoſe who are Habitually render'd incapable of Working; that thoſe who cannot get Work, or cannot get a Livelyhood by Working, may likewiſe Beg. Laſtly, That thoſe who by their Duty being Employ'd in Spiritual Functions have not Time to Work, may likewiſe Beg. (8.) Of having Aſſerted, That all thoſe who are in an Order, who have no Revenue, who are able to Work and do not, but Live on Alms; are not in a State of Salvation, and cannot be excus'd upon the Account of Preaching. He Replies, That he had only ſaid this upon the Account of the great number of Mendicants who are in the Nation, and eſpecially upon the Account of certain Young Perſons who were call'd Bons-Valets, and of certain Nuns, call'd Beguines, who are not of any Order Approv'd by the Holy See. (9.) Of having ſaid, That the Handſomneſs of Habits is not profitable nor unprofitable to Salvation. He Replies, That he never ſaid this, but only, That it was Lawful to wear a Fine Habit, provided it were not above the Quality of him who wears it, and againſt the Cuſtom of the Country. (10.) Of having ſaid, That he who wears a mean Habit beneath his Quality, ſins more than he that wears one above his Quality. He Replies, That he had never ſaid this, but, That there might be ſomething of Pride in wearing a Habit beneath one's Quality, and that this Pride is a greater Sin becauſe of the Hypocriſy that attends it. That moreover in theſe two Articles, he aims at the Beguines and Bons-Valets, who ſay, That one may not wear a fine Habit without endangering one's Salvation. (11.) Of having ſaid before the Biſhop of Maſcon, That the Spiritual Functions do not excuſe a luſty Mendicant, who lives upon Alms. He Replies, That he had already Anſwer'd that Head. (12.) Of having ſaid, That Women who take upon them the Religious Habit, or cut off their Hair, and ſtill lead a Secular Life, Sin heinouſly. He Replies, That he never ſaid this, but only, That it was not Lawful to take upon them an Habit different from that of their Profeſſion. (13.) Of having ſaid, That Jeſus Chriſt and the Apoſtles did not Beg. He Replies, That he had never Read in Scripture, that they had any Right of Receiving of thoſe to whom they Preach'd, things neceſſary for this Life: That after the Reſurrection of Jeſus Chriſt, the Apoſtles Preach'd, and that they Receiv'd what was voluntarily offer'd to them, with a great deal of Difficulty. (14.) Of having advanc'd ſeveral things againſt the Pope's Decree, by which it was order'd to admit the Dominicans into the Univerſity of Paris, and ſuch things as were prejudicial to that Order, and of having declar'd, That he was afraid, that they were the Men who crept into Houſes, who are Idle and Inquiſitive, who would be call'd Rabbi, Rabbi, &c. He Replies, That it was true, that he was preſent at the Treaty which was made between the Mendicants and the Univerſity; that he had heard thoſe Objections ſtarted by thoſe who Defended the Cauſe of the Univerſity; but that he had not Propos'd them, as being neither the Proctor nor the Governor of the Univerſity. (15.) Of having ſaid, That they could not Condemn the Books of Abbot Joachim, becauſe there were ſeveral Perſons who ſupported him. He Replies, That he never ſaid this, but only, That ſeveral Errors of that Abbot had been already Condemn'd, and that the others could not as yet have been condemn'd, becauſe they could not be Detected in ſo ſhort a time, by Reaſon of the great number of them, of the Buſineſs of thoſe who were Employ'd to Examine them, and of the Credit of thoſe who maintain'd them. I omit the following Heads, which contain only either general Reproaches, or particular matters of Fact, or are only a Repetition of what relates to the Habits and Poverty: And ſhall only ſpeak of that which relates to the Preaching and Miſſion of the Mendicant Friars. They had Accus'd him of having maintain'd, That all thoſe who Preach'd without being Call'd by the Curates, tho' Approv'd by the Pope, were Falſe Prophets. He Replies, That he never ſaid this, but only of thoſe who had no Miſſion either from their Ordinaries or the Pope. They Accus'd him likewiſe of having ſaid, That tho' the Prieſts Approv'd by the Biſhop may Confeſs, yet they may not Adminiſter the Sacrament of Pennance. He Replies, That he had only ſaid, That none but thoſe who have the Charge of Souls, or who have receiv'd their Miſſion from them, may Confer the Sacrament of Pennance. They farther Accus'd him of having ſaid, That the Biſhop in Collating a Curacy, granted the Whole, and retain'd the Whole. He Replies, That he had ſaid, That where a Biſhop gives a Cure to a Prieſt, the Prieſt has the immediate Juriſdiction thereof, and that the Biſhop has it mediante Presbytero; tho' he might ſometimes Exerciſe it immediately by himſelf, and that the Prieſt diſcharges the Biſhop non à toto ſed à tanto. Laſtly, he clear'd himſelf of the Charge laid againſt him, That he had advanc'd a great many Propoſitions againſt the falſe Prophets of his Time who crept into Houſes, not only before Men of Learning, but alſo before the Simple and Ignorant, and when the Seculars and Regulars were at Variance: He clear'd himſelf, I ſay, of this Charge, by declaring, That he had no Deſign of ſaying these things against the Order of the Dominicans, nor against their Persons, but only in General against all the false Prophets who crept into Houses: That it was a very Scandalous thing for those Religious to fly, That they were pointed at by the Works of these false Prophets, because they could not pretend any such thing, if those Works did not in some measure appear in their Actions: That tho' it might have been objected to them, yet the Truth ought not to be silenc'd upon that Account; and that the Scandal which they said would ensue thereon ought to be no hindrance for Publishing the Truth. That moreover with respect to the Book which they said had been Condemn'd by the Pope, and of which they made him the Author, it was Compos'd by the Doctors of Divinity, and in Justification of the University of Paris, to satisfy the Prelates of the Gallican Church, who being admonish'd to beware of the Perils which should happen in the Last Times, had desir'd that a Collection should be made of the Passages of Scripture, wherein those Perils were denoted; that he had set upon this Work jointly with several other Doctors, and reduc'd those Passages under different Heads: That it had been Alter'd Five times, and that it was the Third Edition which had been Disapprov'd by the Cardinals which had been Corrected in the Two next: That the Pope had only Disapprov'd of the Form of the Composure; that he was perswaded, that if he had seen the Fourth and Fifth Editions, he would never have Condemn'd them: And that Lastly, in the beginning of each Edition, they submitted the Work to the Correction of the Church, the Pope and the other Prelates: That the Authors had Corrected it themselves, and had no Design of maintaining the things which the Pope had Condemn'd.

The largest Collection of William of Saint Amour on this Subject is that which he made during his Exile, and which he sent to Pope Clement IV. It is divided into Five Parts.

In the First he Examines who those false Prophets are of whom he speaks, and shews how dangerous they are to the Church in general. In particular he shews in this Part, That the Honour, Jurisdiction, Order and Peace of the Church consist chiefly in maintaining the Rights of the Ordinaries, so that there be but one Bishop in a Diocese, one Arch-Deacon in an Arch-Deaconry, and one Curate in a Parish. That 'tis true, that in Cases of Necessity one may have recourse to extraordinary Supplies, and that the Pope who is the Superior of Bishops and the Ordinary of Ordinaries; may upon Lawful Occasions, send into several Churches Persons to Preach the Gospel, and to Preside over others. But that if he gave to a great many Persons a General Commission of Preaching and Administring the Sacrament of Pennance, it was not probable that by this General Grant he would give them Liberty of Exercising those Functions in all Churches without asking leave of the Prelates, and even in Defiance of them: That this would be to overthrow the Order of the Church, to disturb its Peace and subvert its Laws. As to the Maintenance of those Preachers, he owns, That he who Preaches has a Right to receive of those to whom he Preaches the Gospel wherewithal to Live; but he says, That the Ordinaries, that is, the Bishops and Curates have a Right to take what is necessary for them, as the Reward of their Labour: That those who are Delegated by the Pope, may likewise receive their Subsistence from those to whom they are sent; but that those who are sent by the Bishops or by the other Prelates who have settled Revenues for the Cure of Souls, ought to be maintain'd by those who send them. That moreover it is not probable, That the Pope intended to send an infinite number of Preachers who should be a Charge to the People, and the rather because Preaching and Administration of the Sacraments is forbidden to the Monks by the Canons, and reserv'd to the Prelates: That the General Licence which the Pope Grants to an infinite Number of Regulars, of whom he has no knowledge, can signify no more than to render them capable of Preaching and Administring the Sacraments, when they shall be Invited, and Employed by the Ordinaries in Case of Necessity.

In the Second Part, he Treats of the Idleness and Begging of those New Apostles. He maintains, That it is not Lawful for Persons in Health who can get their Living by their Labour, to live Idle and to Beg. He owns, that Ecclesiastical Employments dispense Men from Working with their Hands, but he particularizes several sorts of Spiritual Employments: Those of Prelates and Curates who have a Right of Receiving their Subsistence of those who are under their Care: Those of the Monks in their Churches and Monasteries, who ought to Live of their Revenues, and for whom the Bishop in case they have not enough may provide: Those of Persons who study to render themselves Serviceable to the Church; such as Secular Students, who ought to be assisted, and may require it in case they are not provided for: That Persons who are strong and in a Condition of getting their Living by their Work, do Sin so long as they are Idle, and that Begging engages them in such Circumstances, as render them in danger of their Salvation. That the Monks and Regular Clerks who attend at Prayers, Preaching and Study, are not thereby excus'd from Working with their Hands, and have no Right to Beg: That Jesus Christ and his Apostles did never Beg. He speaks likewise by the way, against the Monks being familiar with Women. Lastly, he demonstrates by several Arguments, That Labour is requisite to a Monastick Life, opposes the Curiosity and Ambition of the Monks.

The Third Part contains the Methods which those false Teachers make use of to insinuate themselves into the Affections of the Simple, which are Disguises, Hypocrisy, the affectation of a singular Sanctity, the meaness of their Habit, and the Austerity in their way of Living.

The Fourth Part contains the Marks whereby the false Prophets might be known, and the Methods, of Distinguishing them from the true Teachers, which are Fifty in all.

Lastly in the last Part he relates the means of preventing those Perils, and shows the Obligation which the Bishops and Pastors lie under of applying a Remedy thereto, and how they shall be Punish'd who are negligent therein.

There is likewise a Sermon of William of Saint Amour on the same Subject, Preach'd on the Festival of St. Philip and St. James, which contains the same Maxims.

The Style of this Author is plain, he Advances nothing but what he Confirms by a Passage of Scripture, or of the Ordinary Consonant, or of the Canon Law. In his great Work he likewise Cites the Fathers, particularly the Treatise of Saint Augustine about the Labour of Monks, Saint Jerome, Saint Gregory, Saint Hilary, Saint Austin, the Prophecies of Saint Hildegarde, &c. The Abstract of his Works which we have already given you, and the Authorities to the Contrary against him, are enough to acquaint us of his Real Sentiments; but any reader will have an Idea of the Malicious Application which he made of the Passages of Holy Writ to the Orders of the Mendicant Friars approv'd by the Holy See, and chiefly to those of the Dominicans. For tho' he declares that he did not aim at them, yet the occasion of his Writing, and the Method of undertaking the Task put it out of all question, that he had them in his Eye, and that 'tis them he attacks without naming them, but by describing them in a way wherein he could hardly be Mistaken.

CHAP. VIII.

Of the Errors advanc'd by Amaury, Abbot Joachim, and several others, and their Condemnations.

The Doctrine of Amaury and his Condemnation.

IN the beginning of the Thirteenth Century a Clerk Student at Paris, Nam'd Amaury, Born at a Village in the Diocese of Chartres, call'd Bene, after he had for a long time Taught Logick, and Expounded the Scriptures, kept still a particular Method and singular Opinions. Among other things he maintain'd, That every Christian was oblig'd to believe as an Article of Faith, that he was a Member of Jesus Christ. This Opinion having been Disputed in the Schools of Paris, the Author was brought before Pope Innocent III. who after he had Heard the Propositions of Amaury, and the Refutation of them by the University of Paris, Condemn'd the Opinion of Amaury. Being return'd to Paris, he was oblig'd to retract his Opinion with his Mouth, tho' not with his Heart. Within a short time after, he Dy'd and was Interr'd near the Monastery of Saint Martin in the Fields.

After his Death, some of his Disciples Publish'd other Errors more dangerous than the former; for instance, That since the time of the Law was past, the Sacraments were useless, and that no one is Justify'd by the Internal Grace of the Holy Spirit. That the Vertue of Charity takes away all sinfulness of an Evil Action, and according to this Maxim, they committed Crimes contrary to Modesty with the Women who follow'd them, and which they suffer'd to go unpunish'd, under the Pretence of Charity. Other Authors Accuse them likewise of Teaching, (1.) That the Body of Jesus Christ was no more on the Altar in the Consecrated Bread, than in any other Loaf. (2.) That God spoken by Ovid, as well as by St. Augustine. (3.) That there was no Resurrection, nor any Heaven or Hell, than good Thoughts and Mortal Sins. (4.) That one ought not to Honour Saints or their Reliques. A Goldsmith Nam'd William was the Head of this Sect: He call'd himself the Ambassador of God, and Prophesy'd, That before Five Years the World should be Ruined by Four Plagues; with Famine on the People, with the Sword on the Princes, with Earthquakes that should swallow up Cities, and with Fire on the Prelates of the Church. He call'd the Pope Anti-Christ, Rome Babylon, and all the Church-Men Members of Anti-Christ. He likewise foretold That King Philip Augustus and his Son should soon Reduce all Nations under the Obedience of the Holy Ghost. Peter Bishop of Paris, and Garin the King's Counsellor, being inform'd of this Sect, to discover who were of it, made use of a Man, who likewise pretended to be of it: By this means several were Discover'd and Apprehended, who being brought to Paris were Condemn'd in a Council Held 1209, and afterwards Burnt by the Order of King Philip. The Authors of this Sect reckon up Fourteen of them, whose Names and Qualities they tell us: These were some Priests, almost all had Study'd Divinity. Of those Fourteen Ten were Burnt, Three were Condemn'd to perpetual Imprisonment, and one who became a Monk before he was Apprehended. The Memory condemn'd the Memory of Amaury, his Bones were dug up and thrown into the Common Sewer. Those who discover'd those Heretick by pretending to be of their Sect, apply'd himself to the Abbot of Saint Victor, to Master Robert and Friar Thomas, who Confuted the Bishop of Paris and Those Masters about it, by whose Advice, he who had Discover'd those Hereticks continu'd with a Priest to feign himself to be one of them.

Aristotle's Works Condemn'd.

They Condemn'd in the Council of Paris Aristotle's Books of Metaphysicks and Physicks, lately brought from Constantinople and Translated into Latin. They order'd them to be Burnt, and had the Reading them under pain of Excommunication. This Prohibition was Confirm'd about the Year 1215, by the Pope's Legate who endeavour'd to Reform the University; but he allow'd the Teaching of the Logicks of that Philosopher. Gregory IX. in the Year 1231, renew'd it, but with adding, That he did not forbid the Reading Aristotle's Books, but till such time as they were Corrected. In the Year 1265, Simon Legate of the Holy See, in Reforming the University, Confirm'd the Constitution of the Year 1215, about the Books of Aristotle, without taking any Notice of the Correction. But in the Reform of the University in the Year 1366, they permitted the Reading the Books of Physicks, as well as the rest. This was the Fortune of the Works of that Philosopher at that time.

Abbot

Abbot Joachim having in his Books advanc'd several Propositions against the Irregular Morals of his time, and Exhorted Men to aspire after a greater Perfection, than that which was Practis'd in the World: Some took occasion from thence to believe, That the Law of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, which they thought imperfect, would suddenly expire, and that the Law of the Spirit a great deal more perfect, would succeed it. This Doctrine spread among a great many Spiritual Men, and one of them made a Book to establish it, to which he gave the Title of The Eternal Gospel. This Piece appear'd about the beginning of this Century; but what is the Author's Name, is not known: Matthew Paris ascribes it to the Order of the Jacobines, Aimeric to John the Seventh General of the Franciscans. Let the Case be how it will 'tis certain, that a great many Monks approv'd of this Work, and that some of them would have Taught this Doctrine Publickly in the University of Paris in the Year 1254, but the Bishops oppos'd it: And the Book of the Eternal Gospel was Condemn'd to be Burnt in the Year 1256, by Pope Alexander IV. who at the same time Proscrib'd those who maintain'd the Doctrine of that Book, as William of Saint Amour and Ptolemey of Lucca, assure us.

The Opinions of Abbot Joachim.

The Condemnation of that Book.

All the Errors of this Book turn upon this Principle, That the Law of the Gospel of Jesus Christ was imperfect, in comparison of the Law of the Spirit, which was to succeed it: For according to this Book, the Law of the Gospel was to last no longer than Twelve hundred and sixty Years, and consequently was upon expiring. The Author of that Book advanc'd, besides this, several particular Errors, viz. That none but Spiritual Men had the true Knowledge of the Scriptures: That only those who went Bare-foot were capable of Preaching the Spiritual Doctrine: That the Jews tho' adhering to their Religion, shall be loaded with good things and deliver'd from their Enemies: That the Greeks were more Spiritual than the Latines, and that God the Father should Save them: That the Monks were not oblig'd to suffer Martyrdom in Defence of the Worship of Jesus Christ: That the Holy Ghost receiv'd something of the Church, as Jesus Christ as Man had receiv'd of the Holy Ghost: That the Active Life had lasted till Abbot Joachim; but that since his time it was become useless: That the Contemplative Life had begun from his time, and that it should be more perfect in his Successors: That there should be an Order of Monks by far more perfect, which should flourish when the Order of the Clergy was perished: That in this Third State of the World the Government of the Church would be wholly Committed to those Monks, who should have more Authority than the Apostles ever had: That those Preachers persecuted by the Clergy, should go over to the Infidels, and might excite them against the Church of Rome. These are some of the Extravagancies, which the Authors relate, as extracted out of the Book of the Eternal Gospel.

The Errors of that Book.

The Maintainers of this Work are call'd Joachites, or rather Joachimites in the Council of Arles 1260, wherein their Doctrine was Examin'd and Condemn'd in these Terms: "Among the False Prophets who appear at this time, none are more Dangerous than those who taking for the Foundation of their Folly several Ternaries, in part true, and making false Applications of them, establish'd a very pernicious Doctrine, and wickedly affecting to do Honour to the Holy Ghost, do impudently derogate from the Redemption of Jesus Christ, by aiming to include the Time of the Reign of the Son and his Works within a certain Number of Years; after which the Holy Ghost shall Act: As if the Holy Ghost were to Act with more Power and Majesty for the future, than he has done yet since the beginning of the Church. These Joachites by a Chimerical Concatenation of certain Ternaries, maintain, That the time of the Holy Ghost shall for the future be inlighten'd with a more perfect Law; laying down for the Foundation of their Error, this Holy and Cœlestial Ternary of the Ineffable Persons of the Ever-blessed Trinity, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, and are for establishing their Error on the Basis of all these Truths. They add to this Sovereign Truth other Ternaries, by asserting, That there shall be Three States or Orders of Men, who have had, or shall have each their proper Season: The First is that of Marry'd Persons, which was in Repute in the time of the Father, that is, under the Old Testament: The Second is that of Clerks, which has been in esteem in the time of Grace by the Son in this Age of the World: The Third is the Order of the Monks, which shall be glorify'd in time with a larger measure of Grace, which shall be given by the Holy Ghost. Three sorts of Doctrines answer to these Three States, the Old Testament, the New, and the Eternal Gospel, or the Gospel of the Holy Ghost. Lastly, They distinguish the whole Duration of the World into Three Ages: The time of the Spirit of the Law of Moses, which they attribute to the Father; the time of the Spirit of Grace, which they attribute to the Son, and which has lasted 1260. Years; and the time of a more Ample Grace and of unveil'd Truth, which belongs to the Holy Ghost, and of which Jesus Christ speaks in the Gospel, when he saies, When that Spirit of Truth shall come, he will teach you all Truth. In the First State, Men liv'd according to the Flesh; in the Second, between Flesh and Spirit; and in the Last which shall endure to the end of the World, they shall live according to the Spirit. The Consequence which they draw from this Fiction of Ternaries, is, That the Redemption of Jesus Christ has no more place, and that the Sacraments are Abolish'd; which the Joachites have almost the Impudence to Advance, by asserting, That all Types and Figures shall be Abolish'd at this time, and that the Truth shall appear all naked without the Veil of Sacraments. Maxims these are which ought to be Abominated by all Christians who have Read the Holy Fathers, and who firmly believe that the Sacraments of the Church are visible Signs and Images of Invisible Grace; under the Elements of one of which the Son of God abides, as he has promised, in his Church to the End of the World.

The Condemnation of the Joachimites in the Council of Arles 1260.

This Council adds, That tho' this Doctrine had been Condemn'd a while ago by the Holy See in Censure of the Book of The Eternal Gospel; yet because several Persons maintain'd it under a pretence, That the Books which serv'd as a Foundation to that Error had not been Examin'd nor Condemn'd, demn'd, (viz. the Book of Concordances, and the other Books of the Joachites, which till then remain'd undiſcuſs'd, becauſe they lay conceal'd in the Hands of ſome Monks, and began then to appear in the World and to Infatuate the Minds of many) it Condemns and Diſapproves of thoſe Works, and prohibits the making uſe of them under pain of Excommunication.

The Propoſitions Condemned by William of Paris.

In the Year 1240, William Biſhop of Paris having Conven'd all the Regent Doctors of the Univerſity, Condemn'd Ten Propoſitions which had been Taught, as Matthew Paris obſerves by the Profeſſors of the Dominican and Franciſcan Orders, who willing to Diſpute with too much Subtilty, and to dive too far into Myſteries, were faln into Error by the juſt Judgment of God, ſaies that Author, to whom the Wiſdom and Simplicity of a firm Faith is more acceptable than too great Subtilty in Divinity; it being more Safe and Meritorious to receive and believe with Simplicity, what the Fathers have Taught, than to adhere to that which muſt be Prov'd and Diſcover'd by Humane Reaſon. The Ten Propoſitions are theſe. (1.) That the Eſſence of God ſhall not be ſeen by Men, or Angels. (2.) That the Divine Eſſence, tho' the ſame in the Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt, yet as it is, that Eſſence and the Form, 'tis one in the Father and the Son, and not in the Holy Ghoſt. (3.) That the Holy Ghoſt proceeds not from the Son, ſince he is Love and Unity, but only from the Father. (4.) That there are ſeveral Eternal Truths which are not God himſelf. (5.) That the firſt moment, the Creation and the Paſſion, are neither the Creator nor the Creature. (6.) That the Wicked Angel had been Wicked from the firſt inſtant of his Creation. (7.) That the Souls in Bliſs and even that of the Bleſſed Virgin her ſelf ſhall not be in the Empyreal Heaven with the Angels, but in the Cryſtalline Heaven. (8.) That an Angel may be in many Places at one and the ſame time, and even every where. (9.) That he who is endu'd with better Natural Parts, ſhall have more Grace than another. (10.) That the Devil had no Support to keep him from falling, nor Adam to keep in his State of Innocence. The Aſſembly after they had Cenſur'd theſe Propoſitions, declar'd, That Men ought firmly and without doubt to Beleive, (1.) That the Subſtance, Eſſence and Nature of God ſhall be ſeen by the Holy Angels and the Bleſſed Souls. (2) That there is but only one Subſtantial Eſſence and only one Nature in the Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt, even as it is the Form. (3.) That the Holy Ghoſt as Unity and as Love proceeds from the Father and the Son. (4.) That there is but only one Eternal Truth which is God, and that no other has been from all Eternity. (5.) That the firſt Moment, the Creation and the Paſſion are Creatures. (6.) That the Bad Angels have been Good, and became Bad by their Sin. (7.) That the Souls of the Bleſſed and their Bodies ſhall be in the Empyreal Heaven, as well as the Holy Angels. (8.) That the Angels are in a diſtinct Place, ſo that they cannot be in two Places at once, much leſs every where. (9.) That Grace and Glory are granted according to the Order and Predeſtination of God. (10.) That the Wicked Angels and Adam had Support to keep them from Falling, tho' not ſufficient to carry them on into Perfection.

The Recantation of William the Franciſcan.

About the ſame time William Profeſſor of the Franciſcan Friars having Advanc'd in a Sermon Preach'd on the Feſtival of St. John Baptiſt in the Church of his Monaſtery, ſeveral Propoſitions about Free Will and Free Grace, was oblig'd to Retract the two following, in an Aſſembly of the Doctors of Divinity of Paris. (1.) Free Will has a Natural Power to receive Grace, but not an Effective, or Co-operating Power for the entertaining of Grace. (2.) He who is Damn'd, has never been in a State of Grace, but has been always an Iſhmael or a Judas, never a Saint John.

Propoſitions Condemn'd by Stephen Templar Biſhop of Paris.

In the Year 1270, in December, Stephen Templar Biſhop of Paris Condemn'd other Propoſitions Taught by ſeveral Profeſſors in Philoſophy and Divinity of the Univerſity of Paris, which are Thirteen in Number. (1.) That the Underſtanding of all Men is one and the ſame in Number. (2.) That this Propoſition Homo intelligit, is falſe and improper. (3.) That the Will chuſes and wills by neceſſity. (4.) That all Sublunary things are ſubjected to the Influences of the Heavenly Bodies. (5.) That the World is Eternal. (6.) That there never was a firſt Man. (7.) That the Soul of Man as being the Form of him, is Corruptible. (8.) That the ſeparated Soul does not ſuffer Eternal Fire. (9.) That Free Will is a Paſſive, not an Active Power and that 'tis led by the Senſitive Appetite. (10.) That God has no knowledge of ſingular things. (11.) That he knows nothing Externally without himſelf. (12.) That the Actions of Men are not Govern'd by Providence. (13.) That God cannot give Immortality, or Incorruptibility to a Mortal, and Corruptible Creature. The Biſhop of Paris order'd the Rector of the Univerſity not to ſuffer that Queſtions of Faith ſhould be Diſputed in the Philoſophy-Schools, and the Univerſity provided againſt it by a Statute made April the Firſt 1271, by which it declar'd, That all thoſe who after they have propos'd Queſtions which may concern Faith and Philoſophy, ſhall Decide them againſt the Faith, or ſhall maintain thoſe Propoſitions true, according to the Principles of Philoſophy tho' contrary to the Faith; ſhall be expell'd the Univerſity.

Notwithſtanding this Maxim, That one and the ſame thing may be true according to Philoſophy, and falſe according to Faith, ſpreading it ſelf: The ſame Biſhop being admoniſhed by Pope John XXI. forbad it in the Year 1277, and Condemn'd a great many Errors which they took the liberty to maintain under this Pretence, as if there might be two Truths, one according to Philoſophy, and another according to Faith. He likewiſe Condemn'd a Book call'd, Of Love, or Of the God of Love, and ſome Writings of Geomancy, Necromancy and Witchcraft.

CHAP. IX.

An Account of the Sects of the Vaudois and Albigenses, and other Hereticks: Of their Errors, Condemnation, Adversaries, of the Inquisitions, Croisades and Wars Rais'd against them.

The Rise of the Sect of the Vaudois.

ABout the Year 1160. Peter Valdo a Rich Merchant of Lions being in an Assembly of his Brethren was so sensibly affected at the sudden Death of one of them, that he took upon him a Resolution of altering his way of Living, and explaining the Words of Jesus Christ against Riches in a Literal Sense, he distributed all his Goods to the Poor of the City, to make a Profession of Voluntary Poverty, and to revive, as he pretended, the way of Living among the Apostles. Several Persons having follow'd his Example, they Form'd a Sect of People whom they call'd the Vaudois, or Waldenses from the Name of their first Founder; The Poor of Lions, because of the Poverty of which they made Profession; Leonists, from the Name of the City of Lions, and Insabbates, upon the Account of certain Shoes or Sandals which they wore, cut on the Top to shew their bare Feet, in imitation of the Apostles, as they suppos'd. Valdo having some Learning, explain'd to them the New Testament in the Vulgar Tongue. He Instructed them so well, that they took the Fancy upon them not only of imitating the voluntary Poverty of the Apostles, but also of Preaching and Teaching, tho' they were Laicks and had no Mission. The Clergy of Lions having reprov'd them for it, they began to declaim against the Ecclesiasticks and against their Irregularities, giving out with a great deal of Haughtiness, That the only Reason why they oppos'd their Preachings, was because they envy'd the Sanctity of their Morals, and the Purity of their Doctrine. The Pope enjoin'd them Silence, judging that it did not belong to Laicks who had but very little Learning to Preach the Word of God; but they did not hearken to the Voice of his Holiness, and continu'd to Preach boldly. Pope Lucius III. Excommunicated and Condemn'd them with other Hereticks. His Bulls only serv'd to Exasperate them, to Confirm them in their Obstinacy, to put them upon shaking off entirely the Yoke of Obedience, and to engage them to maintain divers Errors. Their Sect spread it self in several Places, which oblig'd Alphonso King of Arragon to Condemn them in the Year 1194. Bernard Arch-Bishop of Narbonne Proscrib'd them, and some time after Held a Conference with them, wherein they were Convicted of several Errors. Notwithstanding these Condemnations, some among them apply'd themselves to the Pope, to obtain from the Holy See the Confirmation of their Institution; but the Pope having learn'd that there was Superstition in their Conduct, rejected them, and in their stead Approv'd of the Order of the Franciscans, who tho' they were not guilty of those Superstitious Practices, yet went barefoot, and made a Vow of Voluntary Poverty.

The Errors of the Waldenses or Vaudois.

The Waldenses or Vaudois in their first Rise were not guilty of any great Errors; but they fell into them by Degrees. We may find out the Progress of them from the Authors who have Treated of them. The Design of Valdo was not to establish a New Sect, nor to maintain new Tenets; but to set up a Society of Persons who should Practise according to the Letter, the Advices of the Gospel, and who should revive the Apostles way of Living. There was nothing to be blam'd in all this, if they had not made an Ostentation of Voluntary Poverty, and adher'd to such Superstitious Practices, such as cutting their Shoes to shew their naked Feet, the wearing of particular Habits, and never cutting the Hair of their Heads. They afterwards assum'd to themselves the Power of Preaching, tho' Laicks and without a Mission. At first they only Exhorted others to imitate their way of Living; but the Clergy opposing their Preaching, they began to Rebel against the Prelates, and to shake off the Yoke of Obedience: They Declaim'd against the Manners of the Ecclesiasticks, and maintain'd, That their Unworthiness rendred them incapable of their Ministery, that they were not oblig'd to Obey them, and that Laicks may Preach without their Permission. But going still farther, they Taught, That the Ministers whose Manners were Irregular could neither Consecrate, nor Grant Absolution, because they did not lead an Apostolical Life, and they Usurp'd that Right to themselves, even tho' they were only Laicks: They likewise maintain'd, That all Pastors were oblig'd to embrace a Life of Poverty, by entirely renouncing all their Estates: That it was not Lawful to Swear upon any Account whatever, nor to put Men to Death, tho' for an Offence. They afterwards oppugn'd the Doctrine of the Church about the Worshipping of Saints, their Relicks, the Indulgencies and Ceremonies of the Church, the Sacraments and Purgatory.

This was the State and Condition of the Sect of the Waldenses or Vaudois about the Year 1250, as we are inform'd by Rainerius Sacho, who reduc'd their Errors to Three Heads. The First contains the Blasphemies which they utter'd against the Church, its Institutes, and against the whole Body of the Clergy: The Second Comprehends the Errors which they advanc'd against the Sacraments of the Church and against the Saints; and the Third the Declamations which they made against the Landable Customs approv'd by the Church. A particular Account of those Errors we here give you, as they are related by Rainerius. 'In the First place they say, That the Church of Rome is not the Church 'of Christ, but a Church of Wicked Men, and that it has ceas'd from being so, ever since the time of 'St. Sylvester, when the Poison of Temporalities enter'd the Church. They add, That they are the 'Church of Jesus Christ, because they follow the Doctrine of Jesus Christ and the Apostles in their 'Words and Actions. The Second Error which they Teach is, That the Church is full of Vices and

The Errors of the Waldenſes or Vaudois.

'Sins, and that they are the only Perſons who live holily. The Third, That ſcarce any beſides 'them hold the Doctrine of the Goſpel. The Fourth, That they are the truly poor in Spirit, who ſuffer 'Perſecution for Righteouſneſs ſake, and for the Faith. The Fifth, That they are the True Church 'of Jeſus Chriſt. The Sixth, That the Roman Church is that Harlot mention'd in the Apocalypſe, be-'cauſe of its ſuperfluous Ornaments, of which the Eaſtern Church is not ſo nice. Seventhly, They 'deſpiſe the Laws of the Church, as being too many and too burdenſome. Their Eighth Error 'is, That the Pope is the Author of all Errors. The Ninth, That the Prelates are the Scribes, and 'the Monks are the Phariſees. The Tenth, That the Pope and all the Biſhops are Homicides becauſe 'of the Wars which they tolerate. The Eleventh, That they ought not to obey the Prelates but on-'ly God. The Twelfth, That all the Members of the Church are equal. The Thirteenth, That 'no Perſon ought to bow the Knee before a Prieſt. The Fourteenth, That they ought not to pay 'Tithes. The Fifteenth, That Clerks ought not to have Eſtates in Land. The Sixteenth, That 'neither Clerks nor Regulars ought to have Prebends. The Seventeenth, That the Biſhops and Ab-'bots ought not to have any Royalties. The Eighteenth, That one ought not to divide the Land 'and the People. The Nineteenth, That 'tis ill done to Found and Endow Churches. The Twen-'tieth, That nothing ought to be bequeathed to Churches by Laſt Wills and Teſtaments. They 'likewiſe maintain'd, That no Perſon ought to pay any Rent to the Church. They condemn'd the 'Eccleſiaſticks for their Idleneſs, and pretended that they ought to work with their Hands as 'the Apoſtles did. They rejected the Titles of Prelacies, of Pope, of Biſhops, &c. They conſider'd 'all the Eccleſiaſtical Benefices as Null and Void. They had no regard to the Privileges of the 'Church. They deſpiſ'd the Exemptions of Church-goods and Church-men. They valu'd not 'Councils and Synods. They pretended, That all the Privileges of Curates were of Humane Inven-'tion, and that the Rules made by the Monks are Phariſaical Traditions.

'In the Second place, They condemn'd all the Sacraments of the Church, and Firſt about Ba-'ptiſm they ſay, That the preliminary Admonition is worth nothing; that the Waſhing of Infants is 'of no avail to them; That the Sureties do not underſtand what they anſwer to the Prieſt: Laſt-'ly, They reject all the Exorciſms and all the Benedictions of that Sacrament. They Likewiſe re-'ject the Sacrament of Confirmation, and wonder that only Biſhops are allow'd to Adminiſter it. 'Concerning the Sacrament of the Euchariſt they ſay, That the Prieſts who are in any Mortal Sin 'cannot Conſecrate, and that Tranſubſtantiation was not effected in the Hands of him who Conſe-'crated Unworthily, but in the Mouth of him who received the Euchariſt Worthily, and that one 'might conſecrate on a common Table, according to what the Prophet Malachy ſays, They ſhall offer in all Places a pure Offering in my Name. They likewiſe condemn'd the Cuſtom of Chriſtians who 'Communicated only once a Year, becauſe themſelves Communicated daily. They ſaid, That 'Tranſubſtantiation ought to be made with Words in the Vulgar Tongue. That the Maſs was no-'thing, becauſe the Apoſtles never ſaid it, and they only ſaid it for their own Intereſt. They re-'ceiv'd not the Canon of the Maſs, but only made uſe of the Words of Jeſus Chriſt in the Vulgar 'Tongue. They call'd the Chanting of the Church an Infernal Crime. They rejected the Canonical 'Hours. They maintain, That the Offering made to the Prieſt at Maſs ſignifies nothing, and diſap-'prov'd of kiſſing the Pyx and the Altar. About the Sacrament of Pennance, they ſaid, That no bo-'dy could be abſolv'd by a Wicked Prieſt; and on the contrary a good Laick has that Power. That 'they remit Sins and confer the Holy Ghoſt by the Impoſition of Hands. That it was better to con-'feſs one's ſelf to a good Laick than to a bad Prieſt: That they ought not to impoſe large Pennances, 'but to follow the Example of Jeſus Chriſt, who ſaid to the Adultereſs, Go and ſin no more. They 'reject the Publick Pennances and the Annual general Confeſſions. They likewiſe caſt a ble-'miſh on the Sacrament of Marriage, by maintaining, That it was a Mortal Sin for a Man to have 'to do with his Wife, when ſhe was paſt Child-bearing. They did not acknowledge the Spiritual 'Alliance, nor the Impediments of Affinity and Conſanguinity appointed by the Church, no more 'than thoſe of Publick Order and Decency. They hold, That Women have no need of Benediction 'after their Lying in; That the Church was in the wrong in prohibiting the Clergy from Marrying, 'and that they who live continently do not Sin by Kiſſes and Embraces. They do not approve of the 'Sacrament of Extreme Unction, becauſe it was only given to the Rich, and ought to be admini-'ſtred by a great many Prieſts; That all the Laicks are as ſo many Prieſts; That the Prayers of 'Wicked Prieſts ſignify nothing. They laugh'd at the Clerical Tonſure. They ſay, That the La-'icks ought not to pray in Latin, that all the Laicks even the Women may Preach; That whatever 'is not in the Scriptures is Fabulous. They Celebrate and Adminiſter the Sacraments in the Vulgar 'Tongue. They learn by heart all the Text of the Scriptures, and reject the Deciſions and Expoſitions 'of the Fathers. They deſpiſe Excommunication, and have little or no regard to Abſolution. They 'laugh at Indulgences and Diſpenſations. They do not allow of any Irregularity. They believe no 'other Saints but the Apoſtles, and invocate no Saints, but God alone. They deſpiſe the Canoniza-'tions, Tranſlations, and Vigils of the Saints. They laugh at the Laicks who make choice of Saints 'in the Lots which they draw upon the Altar. They never ſay any Litanies. They do not believe 'the Legends. They ridicule the Miracles, and have no eſteem for Relicks. They look upon 'Croſſes as Common Wood. They Teach that the Doctrine of Jeſus Chriſt and the Apoſtles is ſufficient 'to Salvation, without being oblig'd to obſerve the Laws of the Church, and that the Tradition 'of the Church is the Tradition of the Phariſees. They do not allow of any Myſtical meaning in the 'Scriptures, nor in the Practices or Ceremonies of the Church.

'In the Third place theſe are the Errors which they held concerning the Uſages of the Church. They 'deſpiſ'd all the approv'd Cuſtoms which are not to be met with in the Goſpel, ſuch as the Feſtivals of Candlemas, and Palm-Sunday, the Reconciling of Penitents, the Adoration of the Cross, the Festival of Easter, with those of Jesus Christ and the Saints. They say, That all Days are equal, and work on Holy-days as well as on other Days. They do not observe the Fasts of the Church. They despise the Dedications, the Benedictions, and the Consecrations of Wax-Tapers, Boughs, Chrism, Fire, the Pasthal Lamb, Lying-in-Women, Pilgrims, Holy Places, Sacred Persons, Ornaments, Salt and Water. They would have no Wall'd Church; and disapprove of the Dedication of Churches and Altars, and their Ornaments; the Sacerdotal Habits, the Chalices and the Corporals. They would not have any lighted Tapers, nor any Incense offer'd, nor any Holy Water us'd. They condemn Images, the Chanting of the Church, Processions on Festivals or Rogation-Days. They find fault, That a Priest is allow'd to Say many Masses on one Day. They make Merry during the time of Interdiction. They go not to Churches, and perform the Duties of Christians only in appearance and Hypocritically. They Condemn the Ecclesiastical Burial, the Ceremonies of Interments, the Masses and Prayers for the Dead, and the Confraternities. They deny Purgatory, and maintain, That there are only Two States after Death, one for the Good and Elect in Heaven, and the other for the Reprobate and Damn'd in Hell. They Teach, That all Sin is in its own Nature Mortal, and that there is no such thing as a Venial Sin. They pretend, that it is Unlawful to Swear; whereupon those that are perfect among them chuse rather to Die than to Swear. Those who are not so perfect, Swear, but do not think themselves oblig'd to keep their Oath, and look upon those who exact it of them as more guilty than Homicides. They Condemn all Princes and Judges, being perswaded, That 'tis not Lawful to Punish Malefactors. Lastly, They Condemn the Ecclesiastical Judgments.

'Candle-

The Errors of the Waldenses or Vaudois.

Pelicdorfius who Wrote about an Hundred Years after Rainerius against the Vaudois, relates the Original of them after the same manner, and observes, That at first they only oppugn'd the Discipline and the Ceremonies of the Church without reflecting on the Sacraments, but that afterwards they thought fit to hear Confessions, to impose Pentances, and to grant Absolution, and that within a while after some among them intruded to Consecrate the Body of Jesus Christ, and to Communicate to others; but that several of their Sect had disapprov'd of that Conduct. The Errors of the Vaudois which Pelicdorfius refutes in his Work, are, (1.) That the Sacerdotal Order was sunk ever since the time of St. Sylvester, and that the True Faith was obscur'd, and only a few Elect in the World. (2.) That the Priests and the other Clergy of the Church of Rome being Fornicators, Usurers, Drunkards, &c. have not the Holy Ghost, cannot Confer it, and are not to be Obey'd. (3.) That the Blessed Virgin and the Glorify'd Saints do not regard what is done here on Earth, and do not Pray for us, that therefore it is needless to Invocate them, and that God alone is to be Prais'd, Honour'd, and Pray'd to. (4.) That there are but Two States after Death, and consequently no Purgatory. (5.) That 'tis not better to be Interr'd in a Church-yard than elsewhere: That 'tis needless to Consecrate Churches, Altars, Sacerdotal Habits; to Bless Water, Ashes, Wax-Tapers, &c. (6.) That the Chanting of the Church is Condemnable: That the Canonical Hours and all the other Prayers are useless, except the Pater-Noster, which is the only Prayer that ought to be us'd, and that all that is said at Mass ought to be rejected, as being of Humane Institution, except the Words of Consecration and the Lord's Prayer. (7.) That Pilgrimages, Indulgences and the Jubilee, ought to be rejected. (8.) That Excommunication is of no force. (9.) That one ought not to have any Images, or to pay them any Worship. (10.) That the Exorcisms which some Priests make over the Possess'd are Superstitions, and the rather because no Man since the Passion of Jesus Christ can be possessed by the Devil. (11) That the Study of the Languages and the Sciences are hurtful. (12.) That all Oaths tho' Judiciarily and Truly made, are Condemnable and Sinful. (13.) That the Pastors and Ministers of the Word of God ought to have nothing de Proprio, in imiration of Jesus Christ and the Apostles.

We do not think fit to add any thing to the Testimonies of these two Authors concerning the Errors of the Waldenses or Vaudois, which they have very largely insisted on. This Sect increas'd very much in the Thirteenth Century, in spight of the Inquisitors, and spread it self in Arragon, and in the Vallies of Piedmont, where it has remain'd, still holding the same Maxims till it was United in the Year 1530, with Oecolampadius and the other Sacramentarians, to whom the Vaudois sent Peter Masson, and George Morel who entred into a Treaty with Oecolampadius and Martin Bucer: These two latter propos'd to them the Rejecting of several of their Errors, by acknowledging, That a Christian might Swear Lawfully, and exercise the Office of a Magistrate; that the Ministers might Possess something de Proprio; That one might Punish Malefactors with Death; that Wicked Ministers might Administer the Sacraments, &c. And they engag'd them to maintain others which they had never maintain'd before, particularly, That the Body of Jesus Christ is not in the Eucharist, and that there was no necessity of Confessing their Sins, a Doctrine which the Vaudois never till then openly oppos'd. However notwithstanding this Union, most of the Vaudois persisted still in their own Principles till necessity forc'd them in the Year 1620, to take the Calvinists for their Pastors.

Rainerius likewise mentions several other Sects of Hereticks of his time, viz. the Buncaires who Espous'd the Errors of the Patarini, and who maintain'd, That no Mortal Sin was Committed by the lower Part of the Body, and upon this false Principle abandon'd themselves to all manner of Irregularities. These Men Disguis'd their Sentiments and never gave a direct Answer to the Questions they were ask'd. The Siscidos, who held the same Opinions with the Vaudois, only they had a greater Respect for the Sacrament of the Eucharist. The Ortlibenses or Orbibarians, who deny'd the Mystery of the Trinity; Taught that Jesus Christ was the Son of Joseph and Mary; believ'd the World to be Eternal; deny'd the Resurrection and the Last Judgment; and maintain'd, That Jesus Christ had not suffer'd really; Annull'd all the Sacraments of the Church, and Asserted, That the Eucharist was only only Bread. The Cathari, whoſe Sect was divided into Three Parts, that of the Albanoſi, that of the Concoreſoſi, and that of the Bagnoloſi. This Sect prevail'd chiefly in Lombardy. Their Common Errors were, That the Devil was the Author of this World, that the Sacraments are of no avail to Salvation, that Marriage is a Mortal Sin, as well as the Eating of Fleſh, Eggs and Cheeſe; that there is no Reſurrection, and that 'tis not Lawful to Puniſh Malefactors, nor to Kill Animals: That there is no Purgatory. They allow'd of Four Sacraments, but ſuch as had nothing beſides the Name agreeable with thoſe of the Church: For inſtead of Baptiſm, they made uſe of the Impoſition of Hands: Inſtead of Conſecrating the Euchariſt, they Bleſs'd a Loaf before Meals, and after having ſaid the Lord's Prayer they broke and diſtributed it to all there preſent: About Penance they Taught, That Eternal Glory is not diminiſh'd by Sin, nor the Puniſhment of Hell augmented by Impenitence, that no Perſon ſhall go into Purgatory, that the Impoſition of Hands remits entirely the Puniſhment and the Guilt of Sin. They made no other Confeſſion beſides a Publick acknowledgment of their Sins in General, and impoſe no leſs Pennances on the leaſt than they do on the greateſt Sinners. They allow'd of Four Degrees of Orders, the Biſhop, the Firſt Son, the Second Son, and the Deacon. Rainerius reckon'd up Sixteen Churches of thoſe Cathari, and obſerves that the Sect of the Albanoſi was divided into Two Parts; viz. One, of which Geleſmanza their Biſhop of Verona was the Head, and the Other which had for its Head John of Lions. He in particular related the ſeveral Errors of thoſe Sects, which Held the Extravagancies of the Manichees and Bulgarians, beſides they were of the Opinions of the Vaudois and Albigenſes with whom they were United. For in this Century as well as the foregoing, all thoſe Heretics agreed to oppoſe the Hierarchical Order of the Church, its Uſages, its Ceremonies, and its Sacraments, and ſeveral particular Sects were falln into Extravagant Errors and Abominable Diſorders.

The Inquiſition and Croiſades againſt the Albigenſes.

The Great Sect of the Albigenſes was a Mixture and Compoſure of all thoſe particular Sects: It ſpread it ſelf in Languedoc, Provence, Dauphiné and Arragon: Raymond Count of Toulouſe ſupported their Party, which was become very Numerous and Powerful, eſpecially in Languedoc, and grew every Day ſtronger and ſtronger by the Remiſneſs of the Prelates, and the Irregular Manners of the Eccleſiaſticks. Pope Innocent III. (being minded to put a ſtop to them) ſent in the Year 1198, two Legates Rainerius and Guy into thoſe Provinces, to endeavour the Extirpation of thoſe Heretics, recommended them to the Biſhops and Lords, that they would Aſſiſt them in this Undertaking, and Employ their Authority for to Puniſh the Heretics. In the Year 1199, he Order'd their Eſtates ſhould be Confiſcated. This Firſt Miſſion having had no great Succeſs, Pope Innocent gave Commiſſion to Arnold Abbot of Ciſteaux to employ the Abbots and Monks of his Order, and particularly Peter de Chauteau-Neuf and Radulphus Monks of Fontfroide, not only to Preach againſt the Heretics, but likewiſe to excite the Princes and People to Extirpate them, and to form a Croiſade againſt them. Theſe Miſſionaries making no great Progreſs at firſt, Held a Council in the Year 1207, wherein they Debated on the Methods of Converting the Albigenſes. Didacus Biſhop of Oſma declar'd, That in order to ſucceed in this Affair it was requiſite, that they ſhould lay aſide the Faſtus, the Pomp and the Magnificence which appear'd in their Habits and Equipage, that they ſhould embrace the Poverty of Jeſus Chriſt, and demonſtrate their Faith not only by their Words but alſo by their Actions, that ſo they might Save the Souls of thoſe whom theſe Heretics Deceiv'd by a falſe Semblance of Piety and Vertue. This Advice ſeem'd to them very good, all of them promis'd to follow it, and he was the firſt who put it into Execution by diſmiſſing all his Equipage, and retaining only a few Clerks among whom was Dominick afterwards Founder of the Jacobine Friars. The reſt follow'd his Example and continu'd their Preachings. The greateſt Adverſary they had in thoſe Errors was Raymond Count of Toulouſe. They Iſſu'd out againſt him Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures, and excited the Lords of his Province, who oblig'd him in appearance to Abandon the Party of the Albigenſes, and to receive Abſolution. But foraſmuch as his Repentance was not ſincere, he chang'd every Moment, and at laſt having had a Conference at St. Giles's in Provence with the Pope's Miſſionaries, he caus'd Peter de Chateau-neuf to be Aſſaſſinated in going out of that City. The Pope had no ſooner heard of it but he Iſſu'd out his Bulls againſt the Murderers, and eſpecially againſt Raymond Count of Toulouſe, whom he believ'd to be the Author of that Action, and exhorted Philip Auguſtus King of France and the other Princes and Lords of the Kingdom, to raiſe a Croiſade to Fight the Albigenſes and to Seiſe on the Demeans of Raymond. That Count to avoid the Storm which was coming upon him, ſent to aſſure the Pope, That he would do whatever they requir'd of him, that he would endeavour to deſtroy the Hereſy, and that he would receive Abſolution from the New Legate, which he entreated he would ſend him, becauſe the Abbot of Ciſteaux was too ſevere upon him. The Pope ſent one of his Chaplains Nam'd Milo, and Theodoſius Canon of Genes, with Order however to do nothing but by the Advice of the Abbot of Ciſteaux. Theſe two Legates having Held an Aſſembly of Prelates in the Caſtle of Montilly in Provence, agreed upon the Propoſitions which were to be made to Count Raymond. Milo afterwards ſent for him to come to Valenza, and oblig'd him to deliver up for the ſecurity of his Word Seven Towns of Provence or Languedoc, to cauſe it to be declar'd by the Conſuls of Avignon, Niſmes, and Saint George, That if he did not obey the Orders of the Legate, they ſhould not think themſelves oblig'd to keep any longer their Oath of Allegiance to him; and to Grant a County of that Country to the Church of Rome. The Count of Toulouſe conſtrain'd by the neceſſity of his Affairs, granted thoſe Conditions, and promis'd to do whatever that Legate would preſcribe to him. He began by delivering up the Seven Towns to Theodoſius, and afterwards came to St. Giles's where Milo was to Reconcile him. He was brought Naked in a Sheet to the Church-porch of St. Giles's, and Swore upon the Body of Jeſus Chriſt and upon the Relicks of the Saints, in Preſence of the Legate and Twenty Bishops who were met at that Place, to Obey the Church of Rome, to do whatever the Pope and his Legate would order him, to abandon the Hereticks and to Expel them, to restore to the Church what he had taken away from it; Submitting himself and his Successors to the Forfeiture of his Estate and to Excommunication, if he did not observe what was contain'd in his Oath. Afterwards the Legate put the Stole on his Neck, struck him with the Wand, and brought him into the Church after he had given him Absolution. He order'd him to Re-establish the Bishops of Carcassona and Vaison in all their Estates and Privileges, to drive out of their Territories the Arragonois, the Routiers, the Coseraux, and the other Hereticks, to exclude the Jews from all manner of Offices, to Treat as Hereticks those who should be Delated to him by the Bishops as such, and to Sign the Articles of Peace which the Legates of the Pope should draw up. The Counts, Barons and Consuls of Nisgnon and Montpellier took likewise their Oaths, and at last the Count of Toulouse made a Declaration, whereby he engag'd himself to maintain the Liberties and Immunities of Churches.

Legate

The Inquisition and Croisades against the Albigenses.

The Army of the Croisade having no more Concert with the Count of Toulouse, Turn'd its Forces against Beziers where the Albigenses were Fortify'd. The Town was Besieg'd, taken, and Burnt, and all the Inhabitants put to the Edge of the Sword. The Count of Beziers who was a Catholick made a Manifesto against the Cruelties offer'd to his Subjects, and retir'd to Carcassonne. The Army of the Croisado Besieg'd it, the Count held it out a long time; but he being taken, the Town was Abandon'd and left to the Croisado-Men, who Elected Simon Count of Montfort for their General. He carry'd on the War, and took a great many Places and Castles, not only from the Hereticks, but likewise from other Lords. The King of Arragon was offended at it, and the Count of Toulouse went himself to Rome to prefer his Complaints to the Pope, and to make his Agreement with him. The Pope promis'd to do him Justice, and on his part he engag'd himself to drive out the Albigenses out of his Territories. When this Count was upon his Return, there was a Treaty of Peace set on foot between him and the Count of Montfort. They met at Narbonne with the King of Arragon who was the Mediator of the Peace. The Abbot of Cisteaux propos'd to the Count of Toulouse, the Extirpating of all the Hereticks who were in his Territories; promising to Restore to him all his Towns and Castles, if he would do it. Propofals were likewise made of making a Peace with the Count of Foix, and of Restoring to him all his Castles except Pamiez. This Peace was not Concluded, and the Count of Toulouse still persisting to succour the Albigenses, and to make War for the recovering of his Territories; was Excommunicated by the Pope's Legate, who caus'd War to be Proclaim'd against him as well as against the Count of Foix, by Simon of Montfort, to whom they gave the Pillage of these two Princes. The Count of Montfort immediately drew out the Army of the Croisado into the Field, took from the Counts of Toulouse and Foix part of their Dominions, and forc'd them to shut themselves up in Towns, leaving him Master of the Field. Hitherto the King of Arragon had stood Neuter; but now declar'd himself for the Count of Toulouse, and being come to that City he propos'd to the Arch-Bishop of Narbonne, the Re-establishment of the Counts of Toulouse, of Comminges, of Foix and of Bern, offering in behalf of the Count of Toulouse, to give the Church Satisfaction for all the Wrongs which he might have been the Cause of, and in case they would not grant this Favour to the Father; he desir'd it for the Son: He likewise desir'd, That they would Restore to the Counts of Foix, Comminges and Bern, who were not Hereticks, the Lands and Castles which the Croisado-Men had taken away from them, upon Condition, That they would give the Church Satisfaction. The King of Arragon having given in those Proposals in Writing to the Prelates, met in the Year 1219, at Lavaur: They reply'd, That as to the Count of Toulouse, he had no farther Favour to expect; and for the rest, it was requisite, that before they demanded Justice of the Church, they should give it Satisfaction, and get themselves Absolv'd, and that afterwards they should have Justice done them. The King of Arragon perceiving, that they had rejected his Propofals, requir'd a Truce to be made till Pentecost, with a Design of retarding the Progress of the Croisade, and when they would not grant him that, he Appeal'd to the Pope, inform'd him of the Propofals which he had made, and sent him the Submissions of the Count of Toulouse, Foix, Comminges, and Bern. The Prelates Protested against this Appeal: Yet the Pope seem'd to have some regard for it, and at first appear'd favourable to the Demands of the King of Arragon; but the Deputies of the Council and of Simon of Montfort being Arriv'd at Rome, and having given him their Instructions, he declar'd himself entirely in favour of the Croisado, and Wrote about it to the King of Arragon. That Prince being incens'd at this Repulse, Rais'd an Army of 100000 Men, and being join'd with the Counts of Toulouse, Comminges and Foix, laid Siege to a Place near Toulouse, Nam'd Muret, in which the Count of Montfort had plac'd a Garrison. The latter having thrown himself into the Place with a Thousand or 1200 Men, made so Vigorous a Sally on the Besiegers, that he Defeated and cut them in pieces. The King of Arragon lost his Life in the Engagement. This Defeat was follow'd by the surrendring of the City of Toulouse, and the Conquest of a great part of Languedoc and Provence. In the Year 1215, the Pope in pursuance of a Decree of the Council of Montpellier granted to the Count of Montfort all the Territories of the Count of Toulouse and the others which had been Conquer'd by the Croisade-Men, but with a Charge, That he receive the Investiture of them from the King, and Pay him the Feodal Rights. The Fourth General Lateran Council Held in November the same Year, having Heard the Counts of Toulouse and Foix, and the Brother of the Count of Montfort, granted to the latter the County of Toulouse, and only reserv'd to the Son the Lands which he had in Provence, and Four hundred Marks per Annum. At this time Simon of Montfort took upon him the Name of Count of Toulouse, receiv'd the Investiture of the County from the King of France, and continu'd to carry on the War, against the Albigenses and the Men of Toulouse, whilst Saint Dominick and Cardinal Bertrand the Legate to Pope Honorius III. endeavour'd by their Missions to Convert the Hereticks. In the mean time Raymond

The Inquiſition and Croiſades againſt the Albigenſes.

Count of Toulouſe, who had withdrawn himſelf to Arragon, return'd with Forces into his own Country and ſeis'd upon the City of Toulouſe. Simon of Montfort laid Siege to it immediately, and after he had inveſted it Seven whole Months, he was kill'd in a Sally about the end of the Year 1218. His Son Amaury Succeeded him in his Conqueſts, and was aſſiſted by Philip Auguſtus King of France, who ſent his Son Lewis and ſome Forces to his Relief: But their Prince being recall'd, the Counts of Toulouſe, of Comminges and of Foix retook in a little time what had been taken away from them. Amaury perceiving himſelf too weak, quitted his Pretenſions, and yielded his Rights to Lewis VIII. who had ſucceeded his Father in the Kingdom of France. Raymond Count of Toulouſe being dead, his Son of the ſame Name ſucceeded him, who to keep himſelf in his Eſtates was for being reconcil'd to the Pope, to whom he promis'd entire Submiſſion. Honorius III. Commiſſion'd the Arch-Biſhop of Narbonne to make up the Peace, and that Prelate having in the Year 1224, call'd a Council at Montpellier, he therein took the Oaths of the Count of Toulouſe and his Barons, by which they engag'd themſelves to reduce their Country to the Obedience of the Roman Church, to reſtore to the Eccleſiaſticks their Revenues, to pay them Fifteen Thouſand Marks within Three Years for Dammages ſuſtain'd, to ſee Juſtice done upon the Hereticks, and to extirpate them out of their Country. In the foregoing Year the Albigenſes created an Antipope in Bulgaria and Dalmatia, againſt whom Conrade Cardinal Biſhop of Porto and Legate of the Holy See, held a National Synod of France at Paris. In the Year 1225, Cardinal Romanus held another National Council at Bourges, in which the Count of Toulouſe and the Count of Montfort appear'd and maintain'd the Rights and Pretenſions which each had to the County of Toulouſe. After they had been heard, Cardinal Romanus had a private Debate with the Prelates but came to no Concluſion. This Legate had Orders to demand for the Pope the Revenues of Two Prebends in all Cathedral Churches, two Places in the Abbeys, and one Prebend in the other Churches. He would likewiſe appoint Proctors to receive thoſe Revenues, and Four Abbots to be Viſitors of all Monaſteries of France. But the Prelates reſolutely oppos'd this Project, and declar'd boldly that they would never ſuffer ſuch an Oppreſſion. The next Year the ſame Cardinal held a National Council at Paris, wherein he Excommunicated Raymond Count of Toulouſe, and gave his Demeans to Lewis King of France and his Succeſſors, to whom Amaury yielded his Pretenſions. The King and Lords immediately took the Croſs from the Hands of the Legate, who caus'd the Croiſade to be Preach'd up throughout the whole Kingdom. The King March'd at the Head of the Croiſade-Men, took Avignon and became Maſter of all Provence. The Count of Foix ſubmitted to the King and the Pope, but he kept not his Word, and was again Excommunicated with Count Raymond, the Toloſians, and Trinavel Vicount of Beziers in the Council of Narbonne Held 1227. At laſt in the Year 1228. Raymond Count of Toulouſe was oblig'd to ſubmit to King Lewis and the Pope, and to make a Treaty with them upon what Terms they pleas'd. It was begun at Meaux, and ended at Paris in the Preſence of Cardinal Romanus the Pope's Legate and of the Lords of the Land. The Count promis'd the Legate and the King, That for the future he would be Faithful to the Church and to the King of France: That he would Extirpate the Hereticks and their Favourers out of his Territories; that he would ſet up the Inquiſition in them: That he would pay a certain Summ to thoſe who ſhould Detect an Heretick; that he would take care to Puniſh the Routiers: That he would maintain the Perſons and the Privileges of Eccleſiaſticks: That he would cauſe the Sentences of Excommunication to be duly Executed: That he would ſhun the Excommunicate, and oblige them to Re-enter into the Boſom of the Church: That he would ſet up Judges to ſuſpected of Hereſy: That he would reſtore to Churches and Church-men all the Eſtates which belong'd to them before the Croiſade; that he would cauſe the Tithes to be paid to the Churches: That he would give Seventeen Thouſand Marks for the Dammages done to the Churches, of which Ten Thouſand ſhould be diſtributed by the Direction of the Legate, Four Thouſand to the Abbeys of Ciſteaux, Clairvaux, Grand-Selve, and Candeil, Six Thouſand to Fortify the Caſtle of Narbonne, and the others which ſhall be put into the King's Hands, Four Thouſand to Found an Univerſity at Toulouſe: That after he had receiv'd Abſolution, he would take the Croſs from the Hands of the Legate, and depart within two Years to make War againſt the Saracens for Five Years: That he would give his Daughter in Marriage to the King's Brother, upon Condition, That after the Death of the Count, the City of Toulouſe and the Dioceſs thereof ſhould belong to that Prince, and that in caſe he ſhould Die without Heirs, that Country ſhould be annex'd to the Crown, and no other Children or Heirs of Count Raymond to make any Pretenſions thereto: That they would likewiſe leave him the Dioceſſes of Agen and Cahors, and part of that of Albi, but that the King ſhall retain the City of Albi, and what is on the other ſide the River Tarn towards Carcaſſonne: That he would do Homage to the King for the Territories left him, and that he would quit all his Pretences to the Country on this ſide the Rhone; That he would ſtand by what had been done by the Count of Montfort; that he would make War againſt the Count of Foix and the other Enemies of the Roman Church; that he would demoliſh the Fortifications of the City of Toulouſe and Thirty other Caſtles; that for a Guarantee of this Treaty he would put into the King's Hands the Caſtle of Narbonne, and ſeveral others, which the King ſhould detain for Ten Years, and keep at the Charges of the Count. This Treaty was Concluded at Paris on April 18. 1228. Afterwards the Count and thoſe of his Retinue, who had been Excommunicated went into the Church of Notredame at Paris on Good Friday bare-foot in a Sheet to receive Abſolution from the Legate. This done the Count remain'd Priſoner at Paris, till the Conditions of the Treaty were performed. About the Feaſt of Pentecoſt the King ſent him into his own Country, whither the Legate accompanied him, and held a Council at Toulouſe in the Year 1229. wherein he ſet up the Inquiſition, and made ſeveral Orders for the Extirpation of Hereticks. Count Raymond was not at firſt ſo violent againſt the Albigenſes, for which the Pope's Legate upbraided him in the Year 1232, in an Aſſembly held at Melun, where he was reſolv'd that this Count ſhould make Ecclesiastical Occurrences of the Fifteenth Century.

The Academies or Universities, which were already Establish'd, in this Century were reduc'd to a Form, and there were several newly Establish'd: Among the rest, that of Paris, which had began to be Form'd in the fore-going Century, became Powerful and Famous, upon the Account of the great number of Scholars who flock'd thither from all Parts, and of the Masters with which it furnish'd all Europe. In its first rise it was compos'd of Artists who Taught the Sciences and Philosophy; and of Divines, who made Commentaries on Peter Lombard's Book of Sentences, and Explain'd the Holy Scriptures. There is mention only made of these two Faculties in the Constitutions made in the Year 1215, by the Cardinal of Saint Stephen Legate of Innocent III. and in the Act of Donation made to the Jacobines in the Year 1217. Those Monks and the Franciscan Friars were soon after join'd to the Secular Divines, and afterwards the Bernardines. The Faculties of Law and Physick were a short time after made Part of the University. There is mention made of that of the Law in the Reform of the University by Gregory IX. and of all Four in the Letter which the University Wrote in the Year 1253, to all the Prelates of the Kingdom against the Jacobines, wherein it compares the Four Faculties to the Four Rivers of the Garden of Eden. At first the University was Compos'd only of Scholars and Masters and there were no particular Ceremonies us'd for the acquiring of that Degree: The time which they had spent in their Studies, and their Capacity alone conferr'd it on them. Afterwards they distinguish'd several Degrees, and fix'd the time they ought to Study, or Learn to acquire them. Gregory IX. seems to be the first who distinguish'd the Degrees of Batchelor, Licentiate, and Master or Doctor. They were the Batchelors who Taught Publickly: They began by Reading and Explaining the Holy Scriptures, and afterwards Compos'd Treatises on the Master of the Sentences. The former were call'd Biblici, and the latter Sententiarij. They bore the Name of Bacillarij, or Bacalarij & Bacilli, either because they were admitted by giving them a little Wand, or because they so call'd the Novices of the Militia, who Exercis'd with Sticks in order to Learn to Fight with Arms. The Batchelors were often exercis'd in Disputes, of which the Masters and Doctors were Moderators. This was the Original of School-Acts. When they had compleated the time prescrib'd for their Studies, and their Courses, they were Licentiated by the Chancellor of the Church of Paris, and were afterwards Admitted Masters or Doctors. The Chancellor of Genevieve pretended likewise to the same Right, and enjoy'd it for some time; but these Chancellors could only give Degrees to such as had went through the Course of their Studies in the Faculties, and pass'd the usual Examinations. So John of Orleans Chancellor of Paris in the Year 1271, having attempted by Virtue of his own Authority to give a Doctor of Divinity's Cap to Ferdinand the King of Arragon's Son, tho' his Quality might have seem'd to have a Privilege of Dispensing with the usual Laws; yet the University oppos'd it, and depriv'd the Chancellor of the Right of Licentiating and Nominated another in his stead. This was the cause of a Tryal between the University and the Church of Paris, which did last till the Death of the Chancellor. When the Chancellors would have exacted Duties for granting of Degrees, they were hindred from it by several Orders. The first Divinity-Schools were in the Cloyster of Notre-dame, at Saint Genevieve, and at Saint Victor. Afterwards there were more in several other Places, and several Colleges were Founded, where they held Publick Lectures. In the time of William of Saint Amour about the middle of this Century, there were Twelve Divinity-Professorships, Three in the Cloyster of Notre-dame, Seven among the Secular Doctors, and Two of the Dominicans: The other Monks increas'd the Number of them. The Sciences and Philosophy were Taught in several Schools by Masters; the Head of those Masters is call'd in the Edict of King Philip the Fair of 1200, Capital Scholarium, and afterwards had the Quality of Rector of the University. The Scholars and Masters were divided into Four Classes, who had their Proctors or Syndicks.

The History of the University of Paris.

The Authority of the Popes was as great in this Century as the last. The difference of the Princes of Germany in the Election of the Emperor, gave them an opportunity of maintaining their Right over the Empire, and of strengthning their Temporal Power in Italy. The Collection and Publication of the Decretals gave the last Blow towards the entire Ruin of the Ancient Law, and the Establishing the absolute and unlimited Power of the Pope, and were the cause of a world of Processes, which were brought before the Court of Rome.

The Authority of the Popes.

The Election of Bishops belong'd to the Chapters, and those of Abbots or Abbesses to the Societies in Italy, France, England, and Germany. The Prebends of Cathedrals were likewise bestowed by the Election of the Chapter, sometimes by the Bishop, and sometimes by both. But the Popes made use of several methods to get to themselves the Disposal of Benefices, as Favours in Expectance, as Reserves Processe upon Elections, Compromising between the Contending Parties, and lastly by the Right of Lapsing. This Right was establish'd to supply the Negligence of the ordinary Collators, in case they did not present to the Benefices within a set time, or in case those whom they should have Presented became unworthy or incapable. In these Cases the Right devolv'd to the Metropolitan or the Pope. Clement IV. reserving to himself all the Benefices Vacant in Curia, declar'd in his Bull Dated 1266. That the Disposal of all Benefices belong'd of Right to the Pope. The Princes were maintain'd by the Decreal of the Council of Lions in the Royalties they were in Possession of, and enjoy'd not only the Revenues of Vacant Churches, but had likewise the Presentation of those Benefices which depended on them.

Of Elections and Collations of Benefices.

In this Century was introduc'd the Commendam's of Benefices, and the distinction between Benefices with the Cure of Souls and simple Benefices. Pluralities were very common, but yet Condemn'd by several Canons, and by the Decision of the Divines of Paris in the Year 1238. The Age of those who were Promoted to Holy Orders was fix'd: A Sub-Deacon to be Eighteen Years Old, a Deacon Twenty, and a Priest Twenty five: Several Canons were made about their Habits, and their External Duties. The Juriſdiction, Privileges, and Immunities of the Clergy were ſtretch'd to the utmoſt Degree. However they were charged with Supplies by the Princes for the Neceſſity of the State, and by the Popes with Impoſts for the Croiſades, or under other Pretences.

The Conteſts between the Clergy and the Mendicant Friars about Confeſſion.

There is ſcarce any thing Remarkable in this Century about the Adminiſtration of the Sacraments and the Diſcipline of the Church, beſides what relates to the Right of Confeſſing and granting Abſolution. The Canon call'd Omnis utriuſque ſexus of the General Lateran Council, Held in the Year 1215, under Innocent III. Orders all the Faithful to Confeſs themſelves to their proper Curate or Paſtor, or if they would Confeſs themſelves to another, to get leave of their proper Prieſt; becauſe otherwiſe they could not be Abſolv'd. This Canon is Confirm'd and Explain'd to mean the Curate by ſeveral Provincial Councils of this Century, ſuch as the 13th. Canon of the Council of Toulouſe 1229, by the 46th. of the Council of Beziers 1260, by the 4th. of the Council of Sens 1269, by the 19th. 20th. and 21ſt. of the Council of Arles 1275, by the 8th. of the Synod of Cologne, 1280, by the 7th. and 9th. of the Council of Lambeth 1281. by the Synod of Niſmes 1284, by the 5th. Canon of the Synod of Exeter 1287, by the 6th. of the Council of Roan 1299, and by the 108th. of the Council of Bayeux in the Year 1300. Notwithſtanding the Mendicant Friars preſuming upon the Privileges granted them by the Pope, pretended to have a Right of Confeſſing and giving Abſolution to the Faithful without asking the leave not only of the Curates, but of the Biſhops themſelves. Gregory IX. was the firſt who gave leave to the Dominicans to Preach and hear Confeſſions by his Bull Dated at Anagnia, September the 26th. 1227, directed to all Arch-Biſhops, Biſhops, and other Prelates of Chriſtendom. The Dominicans deſirous to make uſe of this Privilege, and to Confeſs not only without leave of the Curates, but alſo of the Biſhops; rais'd the whole Body of the Secular Clergy againſt them. Innocent IV. maintain'd them in their Privilege by his Bull Dated May 14. 1244. Directed to the Biſhops of England, where this Diſpute was then higheſt. But thoſe Prelates inſiſting on the Canon of the Fourth General Lateran Council, rejected that Privilege, and the Divines of Paris being Conſulted with upon that Subject in the Year 1250, return'd for Anſwer, That it was not Lawful to Confeſs one's ſelf to the Pope himſelf, nor to the Biſhop, nor to their Penitentiary, nor to thoſe whom they ſhould Commiſſion, without the conſent of the Curate. Innocent IV. tir'd with the continual Complaints of the Ordinaries, and concern'd at the Abuſes which were occaſion'd by that Privilege which the Monks pretended to have of Confeſſing the Faithful without the leave of their Curates; prohibited the Monks according to the Determination of the Lateran Council, from Confeſſing the Faithful without their Curates leave. This Bull is Dated at Naples November the 21ſt. 1254. But Alexander IV. Repeal'd it by his Inſtitute Dated likewiſe at Naples December 22. the ſame Year, and by another Dated October the 21ſt. 1256. He Confirms the Privilege granted to the Monks of Confeſſing without the leave of the Curates; which was likewiſe Regulated by another Bull granted about the 2d. of October the Year enſuing againſt the Propoſitions of Odo of Douay and Chriſtian of Beauvais, who together with William of Saint Amour had aſſerted, That the Monks might not Preach, Confeſs, or give Abſolution without the conſent of the Curates and Ordinaries tho' they had a Miſſion from the Pope. Clement IV. likewiſe Condemn'd that Doctrine by his Bull of the 20th. of June 1265. Notwithſtanding the Synod of Clermont in the Year 1263, and the Provincial Council of Saltzburgh in the Year 1274, Order'd the Execution of the Canon, call'd Omnis Utriuſque Sexus, and declar'd, That the proper Prieſt was the Curate. This laſt Council entirely Repeal'd the Permiſſions of Preaching and Confeſſing granted to the Mendicants. Martin IV. willing to ſilence the Conteſt, granted to the Monks by his Bull of the 10th. of January 1282, the Permiſſion of Confeſſing, upon Condition however, That thoſe who Confeſs'd themſelves to them, ſhould Confeſs themſelves once a Year to their proper Curate. This Accommodation was ſeconded by the Council of Bourges in the Year 1286. But there aroſe another Difficulty; for the Biſhops and Curates pretended, That thoſe who were Confeſs'd to the Monks were oblig'd to Confeſs the ſame Sins to their Curates. The Monks maintain'd the contrary, and pretended, That the Precept was Obey'd by making a Confeſſion once a Year of ſome Sins to the Curate. It was neceſſary to have recourſe to the Holy See to get its Senſe on this Matter, and in the mean time it was determin'd, That it was neceſſary to Confeſs to the Curates. The Clergy of France ſent Deputies to Pope Nicholas IV. But he would not Decide this Controverſy. Boniface VIII. undertook it in his Decretal Super Cathedram, whereby he Order'd, That the Superiors of the Religious Houſes ſhould make their Application to the Prelates, and ask their leave to Adminiſter the Sacrament of Pennance for the Friars which they ſhould make choice of to Employ in this Miniſtry; that if they grant it them, they may Confeſs and give Abſolution; and if they refuſe it, he would grant it to them by the Plenitude of his Power; after they ſhould come to demand it of him. Benedict XI. alter'd ſomething of this Conſtitution by his Decretal call'd inter Cunctos, and expreſly declar'd, That thoſe who were Confeſs'd to the Monks were not oblig'd to Confeſs the ſame Sins to their Curate, excepting Excommunication, or in Caſe one was fraudulently Confeſs'd. He likewiſe orders, That the Superiors of the Monks ſhall demand this Licence in Writing of the Dioceſan Biſhops, and that if they do not grant it, they may Adminiſter this Sacrament without Licence: Yet he exhorts them to Admoniſh the Faithful to Confeſs all their Sins once a Year to their proper Curate. This Decretal of Benedict was afterwards Repeal'd by Clement V. in the Council of Vienna, by the Clementine call'd Dudum, which re-eſtabliſhes the Practice enjoin'd in the Decretal Super Cathedram of Boniface VIII.

The Inſtitutions of ſeveral Religious Orders.

The Original, Confirmation, and Progreſs of the Mendicant Friars is one of the great Events of this Century. The Waldenſes gave occaſion for this Inſtitution; for as they made Profeſſion of Renouncing all their Worldly Goods, of leading a Life of Poverty, of being conſtant in Prayer, in Reading

Reading the Scriptures, and in Preaching, and of Practising in the literal Sense the Advices of the Gospel; so there were several Zealous Catholicks who would Imitate them. Two New Converts of that Sect, Bernard and Durand of Osca were the first who made Profession of this sort of Life, and Instituted in the Province of Tarragon a Congregation which they call'd the Poor Catholicks, in opposition to the Poor of Lions. They Practis'd the Advices of the Gospel in the Literal Sense, gave all their Goods to the Poor, Study'd the Holy Scriptures, Work'd with their Hands, Disputed against the Hereticks, attended the Prayers, preserv'd their Chastity, Liv'd in Common, Pay'd the Tithes and Offerings, but affected nothing of singularity in their Shoes, that they might not give that Scandal which the Poor of Lions did. Innocent III. Approv'd of that Order, and Confirm'd the Order of the Humbled or Humilies, who Liv'd much after the same manner, and apply'd themselves to Preaching. There were at the same time a great many Zealous Persons who would have set up New Orders of Monks, so that the Lateran Council in the Year 1215, was obliged to restrain the Inventing of new Rules, or Establishing of new Orders of the Religious. Notwithstanding a little after, the Principal Orders of the Mendicants were Establish'd, and afterwards Approv'd by the Popes. For the same Year Dominick de Gusman, who had Preach'd a long time against the Albigenses, took up a Resolution, with Nine more of his Companions, to Establish the Order of Preaching Friars. He went to wait upon Pope Innocent III. to obtain the Confirmation of it. That Pope made a scruple of granting it to him, because of the Prohibition of the Lateran Council; but being admonished (if the Historians of that Order may be Credited) by an Heavenly Vision of the Good which the Order of Saint Dominick would do to the Church, he commended his Design, advis'd him, That he might not contradict the Decree of the Council, to take the Rule of Saint Augustine, and sent him to Toulouse to acquaint his Companions of it; which he did, and return'd afterwards to Rome. Whilst these Transactions pass'd Innocent Dy'd, and Honorius III. Approv'd of that Order; and in the Year 1218, consented, That those Monks should quit the Habit of Regular Canons, which they hitherto Wore, and take up a particular Habit, and observe new Constitutions. They were at first Establish'd at Toulouse, and a little after spread over all Christendom. In the Year 1217, they had a Monastery at Paris, which was at first between the Arch-Bishop's Seat, and L' Hôtel Dieu, and the same Year in the House of Saint James, from whence they were call'd Jacobines. In the first times, before they had alter'd any thing of the Rule of Saint Augustine they had Abbots, as the Regular Canons, but afterwards they Created to themselves a General over all the Order and Priors or Superiors. Saint Dominick Founded also Nuns of his Order.

The Poor Catholicks.

The Order of the Preaching Friars.

The Order of Minors or Franciscan Friars had been Instituted some time before in the Year 1208, by Francis of Assisy, who had drawn up a new Rule: It was Approv'd in the Year 1213, by Innocent III. and Confirm'd by Honorius III. in the Year 1223. They encreas'd in a short time, and in the Year 1216, were Establish'd in Paris, where they had their House given them in the Year 1218. and in the Year 1219, they went over to England.

The Minor or Franciscan Friars.

The Institution of the Hermits of Saint Augustine is not so well known. Some carry it so high as Saint Augustine, but without grounds; others make William Duke of Aquitaine to be the Author of it, who Liv'd in Saint Bernard's time, and who being return'd from his Journey to Jerusalem Founded in Italy several Monasteries of Hermits, who were call'd Williamites, and not Augustines. This Order which was almost extinct, was reviv'd by John Bon of Mantua, who Founded in Italy several Monasteries of Hermits, who were call'd the Friars of John Bon, or Zambonites. He Founded likewise several other Orders of Hermits, of which some call'd themselves Friars of the Order of Fabala, others Britini, the others, the Friars of the Penitence of Jesus Christ, or Saccites. Innocent had a Design of Uniting all these Orders into One, and it was Executed by his Successor Alexander IV. who made one Conventual of them under a General, and call'd them the Hermits of Saint Augustine, tho' he had drawn them from their Hermitages to Live in Towns, and to Employ them in the Affairs of the Church.

The Augustine Friars.

The Order of Carmelites which had been Founded about the Year 1121, receiv'd a Rule the Year 1199, from Albert Patriarch of Jerusalem, which was Approv'd by Honorius III. They came into the West in the Year 1238, Founded a Conventual, and spread there. Their Rule was afterwards Explain'd and moderated by Innocent IV. in 1245.

The Carmelites.

Besides these Four Orders of Mendicants, there were a great many other Religious Congregations Founded in this Century; such as the Order of the Holy Trinity, or of the Redemption of Captives, Founded in the Year 1211, by John of Matha, of Provence Doctor of Paris, and by Felix an Hermit of Valois, and Approv'd by Innocent III. Three Years after. The Order of Sylvestrines, who follow'd the Rule of Saint Benedict, Founded in the Year 1231, at Montefano by Sylvester Guzolini, who from a Canon, became an Hermite, and drew a great many into his Society. The Order of Saint Mary of Mercy, Founded by Peter Nolascus at Barcelona in the Year 1223, under the Authority of James I. King of Arragon, and by the Advice of Raymond of Pennafort, and Approv'd by Gregory IX. in the Year 1235. The Order of Servites, which began at Florence in the Year 1233, was Approv'd by Alexander IV. and Benedict XI. The Order of Celestines, Founded by Peter of Moron, who afterwards was Pope under the Name of Celestin V. and solemnly Approv'd of his Order by a Bull Dated August 28. in the Year 1294, which was Confirm'd by Benedict IX. in the Year 1304. The Order of the Valley of Scholars, Founded in France by William, Richard, Everard and Manasses, Doctors of Divinity in Paris, and by Frederick Doctor of Law, who retir'd into the Diocess of Langres in the Year 1219, with Thirty seven Scholars, who follow'd the Rule of the Regular Canons of Saint Victor, and had some particular Constitutions, which are to be met with in the Eighth Tome of the Spicilegium by Father Luke Dachery:

The Order of the Redemption of Captives.

The Sylvestrines.

The Order of St. Mary of Mercy.

The Servites.

The Celestins.

The Order of the Valley of Scholars.

The Order of the Valley of Scholars.

chery: This Order was Approv'd by Honorius III. in the Year 1218. There were many other Orders, whose Number grew so great, that Gregory X. was oblig'd in the General Council of Lyons Held 1274, to prohibit the Founding of new Ones, to abolish all that had been Founded since the Fourth General Lateran Council, without the Approbation of the Holy See, and even to order, That the Monasteries of such as had been Confirm'd by the Pope, but had not wherewith to subsist, should Admit no more Novices, nor make any more Progress. However he excepts the Dominicans and Franciscan Friars, and as to the Carmelites and the Augustine Hermites, whose Institution he said had preceeded the General Lateran Council of the Year 1215, he orders, That they should remain in the same State wherein they were till the Holy See should provide otherwise. Notwithstanding this Prohibition, about the latter end of this Century, there rose up the Freres, Begards, Beguines, and other sorts of Religious, who were suppress'd in the next Century.

Containing an Account of their Uses,

PREFACE.

THE Fourteenth Century furniſhes us with many Subjects very Pleaſing; for it repreſents to us the Conteſts between the Regal Dignity and Prieſthood, or rather the Kings and Popes (for the Kingly Function and Prieſthood do always fully Agree, although the Men who are raiſed to thoſe Great Dignities, differ much about the bounds of their Power) the Deſtruction of a famous and powerful Order, the Church of Rome divided by a Schiſm of Forty Years continuance, the decay of the Greek Empire, endangering the Ruin of it, the Greek Church diſturbed with frivolous Queſtions, the Order of Franciſcan Monks torn in pieces by odd Opinions, and extravagant Practices; Divers Errors taught by Divines, and condemned by the Biſhops, or Univerſities, and ſeveral Diſorders ſuppreſſed by the Conſtitutions of Councils, and Biſhops. The Divines which flouriſhed in this Age followed the Method of the Schools, as their Predeceſſors had done. The Commentators upon Holy Scripture, the Preachers, and Monks produced nothing great, nor excellent, and the Hiſtorians nothing exact, or perfect. But the Study of the Civil Law came to its Perfection almoſt, and Humane Learning, which had been a long time neglected, was much ſtudied and improved about the middle of this Age by a certain number of ingenious Men, who by imitating the Ancients, were eminent for their Skill in Languages, Oratory and Poetry, and brought again into the World a Deſire of Antiquity, and a Love of Profitable and certain Sciences.

AN Hiſtorical Account OF THE CONTROVERSIES IN RELIGION AND OF OTHER Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, IN THE Fourteenth CENTURY.

CHAP. I.

Of the Differences between Philip the Fair, King of France, and Boniface VIII. as well during his Papacy, and his Succeſſor Benedict XI, as in the Vacancy of the Holy See, and in the Beginning of the Papacy of Clement V.

The Election of Benedictus Cajetanus, named Boniface 8.

Benedictus Cajetanus, a Native of the City of Anagni [in the Campaign di Roma] was choſen Pope December 24. A. D. 1294, after the Voluntary reſignation of Celeſtine V. and aſſumed the Name of Boniface VIII. He immediately after his Elevation to the Papal Dignity, entertained a Deſign of rooting entirely the Gibeline-Party out of Italy, and ſo make himſelf abſolutely Supreme as well in Temporal, as Spiritual Affairs over all the Kingdoms of Chriſtendom. And of this he gave plain intimations, not only in the Accommodation, which he purpoſed to make between Philip the Fair King of France, and Edward II. King of England, by his own Authority; but alſo in receiving the Appeal of Guy Earl of Flanders, made to him againſt the ſaid King of France: and to that end, ſending his Legate the Biſhop of Meaux to that King, to require him to give Satisfaction to the Earl of Flanders, and in caſe he refuſed, to Summon him to Appear before the Pope, that the Difference between them might be decided before his Tribunal. Philip the Fair, being highly offended at theſe Proceedings, told the Legate, That it belonged not to the Pope to concern himſelf with the Temporal Affairs of Princes and Soveraign Lords; That he had a Court of his own to adminiſter Juſtice to his Subjects and Homagers, and that he would Acknowledge none his Superior, but God only. The Legate departed without effecting any thing;

The beginning of the quarrel between the King of France and the Pope, about the Earl of Flanders.

The Bull of Boniface, forbidding to Levy any Tax upon the Clergy.

thing; but the Pope in the Year 1296. publiſhed a Bull, wherein, having complained, that Kings exacted from the Clergy, Subſidies, Tithes and other Impoſts, which the Clergy payed them, without leave from the Holy See; He forbids all the Clergy to pay any thing out of their Eſtates to the Laity, or to give their Conſent to any Impoſition, without Permiſſion from the Pope. And all Emperours, Kings, Princes, or other Lords, and Judges to exact nothing of them upon Pain of Excommunication, and Interdict. This Bull concerned the King of France, more than any other, becauſe he had levyed Money upon the Clergy, to defray the Charge of the War; whereupon this Prince put out a Declaration on the 17th. of Auguſt, the ſame Year, whereby he Prohibited the carrying of any Silver coined, or uncoined out of his Kingdom; or any Strangers to remain there. The Pope thereupon ſent him a very ſharp Bull, in which he ſets forth, that this general Prohibition is prejudicial to his Subjects; and if he had a deſign to extend it to Eccleſiaſtical Perſons, it is a raſhneſs, which he ſtyles Folly, and that deſerves Excommunication; and if he had been induced to ſet out this Edict upon occaſion of the Ordinance made lately in favour of the Liberty of the Clergy, it was an ill Pretence, becauſe his Decree contained no new Conſtitution, but only confirmed what had been formerly ordained by Canonical Decrees, under new Penalties, and that he did not therein abſolutely forbid the Clergy to grant any Aid to the King for the Defence and Neceſſity of the State, but to do it without ſpecial leave from the Holy See; and that, upon conſideration of the intolerable Exactions, which the King's Officers had made upon the Clergy in his Kingdom: Moreover, that the Holy See had always been, and likewiſe for the time to come ſhould be ready, in the preſſing Neceſſities of the State, to oblige the Clergy of the Kingdom of France, to afford Succour to their King, without ſparing even the Chalices, the Croſſes, and other Sacred Utenſils, if need were, rather than ſuffer ſo great a Kingdom, and ſo dear to the Holy See, to want Neceſſary Succours for its Defence; but that at this juncture all Kings and Princes, Neighbours to France, complained of his Invaſions; and among others, that the King of the Romans alledges, That the King of France has ſeized on divers Imperial Towns, eſpecially on the County of Burgundy; and the King of England ſays, That he likewiſe keeps from him a Country in Gaſcony; that theſe Princes would very willingly referr themſelves to the Holy See, to whom the Judgment belongs, in regard it is a Sin to detain that which is anothers, and to make an Unjuſt War: In fine, the Pope declares, That he would not be underſtood in his Decree to ſpeak of the Impoſitions and Aids, which the Prelates and other Eccleſiaſtical Perſons, owe the King on the account of the Fiefs which they hold, dependant on the Crown. He conjures the King to follow his Advice, and to revoke his Ordinance, being deſirous to uſe all gentle means with him, before he would make uſe of Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures. He ſent the Biſhop of Viviers to him at the ſame time, that he might repreſent the thing to him Viva voce, and gave him a Letter of particular Credence, bearing Date the 2nd. of the ſame Month.

A Prohibition of the King, to carry Money out of the Kingdom.

The Pope's Bull againſt this Prohibition.

The King's Manifeſto againſt the Pope's Bull.

The King ſet forth a Manifeſto, in Anſwer to the Pope's Bull, wherein he obſerves, that before there were any Clergy in France, the King had the Protection of his Kingdom, and Power to make Laws which he judged neceſſary for its Defence; ſo that he could forbid the carrying Money and Arms out of his Kingdom, for fear his Enemies ſhould get ſome Advantage by them, that he had not abſolutely forbid the doing it, but only without his Permiſſion, with a deſign to grant it to the Clergy, in caſe that it brought no Prejudice to the Kingdom; that were it true, that the King detained by Violence the Perſons, and Goods of the Clergy, it would be ſurprizing enough, that the Pope ſhould not pronounce him Excommunicate; that the Church is not only compoſed of the Clergy, but alſo of the Laity, and that they are not only the Clergy, but likewiſe the Laity whom Jeſus Chriſt has delivered from the Slavery of Sin, and ſet at Liberty: That the Clergy have in truth particular Privileges, which have been granted to them by the Decrees of Popes, by the Bounty, or at leaſt by the Permiſſion of Secular Princes; but that they ought not to deprive Princes of the Government, and defence of their Kingdoms, nor of the Things neceſſary to that End: That we muſt give to Ceſar that which is Ceſar's, and that every one, whether Church-man, or Laick, who is not willing to contribute to the Neceſſities of the State, is an unprofitable Member, which muſt be cut off: That if the Enemy prevail'd, the Clergy would be they, who would Suffer moſt, and their Goods be moſt liable to the Spoil: That it overthrows the Ancient and Natural Right, to hinder one from ſuccouring one's ſelf: That it is a ſhame for the Vicar of Jeſus Chriſt to forbid the Paying of Tribute to Ceſar, and to thunder out his Cenſures againſt the Clergy, who lend their Aſſiſtance to the King and Kingdom, or rather to themſelves, while they are permitted to beſtow their Riches on Players, and their Friends, and to waſt them in ſuperfluous Expences: That it is Unjuſt; that the Church-men enriched by the Bounty of Princes, ſhould refuſe them neceſſary Aids for the defence of the State: That this is, to aſſiſt the Enemy, to commit Treaſon, and betray the State, to maintain ſuch a Prohibition; As to what concerns the King of England, the War, which he hath with him, ariſes from this, becauſe that Prince would not make his Appearance when Summon'd to do Homage for the Lands, he held of France, His Majeſty was obliged to ſeize them, till he had done his Duty; but in ſtead of doing it, he had declared War againſt him, and had renounced the Fealty, and Homage, which he owed him for thoſe Lands: And, as to the King of the Romans, that he had offer'd that Prince to referr himſelf, as to the Differences between them, to Four Umpires:

pires: That he had not taken the County of Burgundy, till after that King had declared War, and bid him publick Defiance. In fine, the Kings his Predeceſſors had been very liberal to the Clergy, who could not, without Ingratitude, refuſe to grant him ſuch Aids; to the end he might be in a Condition to oppoſe his Enemies.

The Letter of the French Prelates.

The King was not the only one, that oppoſed this Undertaking of the Pope, the Archbiſhop of Rheims, and the other Biſhops of his Dioceſs ſent him a Letter, wherein they humbly preſented to him, That the King, the Princes, Barons, and other Lords of the Kingdom, finding his Decree burdenſom and prejudicial to their Rights, had reſolved to Summon all the French, chiefly ſuch as ow'd Fealty to the King, of whom almoſt all the Prelates of the Kingdom had taken the Oath of Fidelity, to defend and preſerve the Rights and Honour of His Majeſty and his Kingdom: That they could not live in quiet, if they were not protected by the King: That if the Clergy did not grant the King, what he demanded, the Church of France, which hitherto had enjoyed Peace, and Liberty, would be in danger of falling into Trouble, and be toſſed with a Tempeſt, which might occaſion its Ruin: Wherefore they beſeech his Holineſs to find out a Way to appeaſe this Diſturbance, and to maintain Peace between the Church and State: That they therewith had ſent to him two Biſhops, to ſet forth more particularly by word of mouth the Danger, to which the Gallican Church is like to be expoſed.

An Embaſſy from the Pope for the continuance of the Truce.

In the mean time, the Pope ſent two Nuncio's to France, namely, Berardus Biſhop of Albania, and Simon Biſhop of Præneſte; to whom he gave Order to Levy the Money in that Kingdom for the Holy See, to tranſmit it to Italy, and to Declare the King, and his Officers Excommunicate, if they oppoſed them in it. He likewiſe ſent by them a Bull, by which he continued the Truce between the King of France, the King of England, and the King of the Romans, for the ſpace of two Years longer, under the Pain of Excommunication, to him, that ſhould break it. Theſe two Nuncio's being deſirous to preſent this Bull to King Philip the Fair, before he had read it, he proteſted, That the Temporal Government of his Kingdom belonged to him only: That he owned no Perſon above him in it; neither would he ſubmit himſelf therein to any Man whatever, and that his Reſolution was to maintain all his Rights, and defend them againſt all Men: That he meant not to be bound by the Bull, which mentioned the continuance of the Truce; but as to what related to his Soul and Spiritual Matters, he was ready to ſubmit to the Advice and Command of the Holy See, as far as he ought, and was obliged. He demanded of the two Nuncio's an Allowance of this Proteſtation, before the reading of the Bull, for lengthening of the Truce, the 20. of April, 1297.

The Explication of the Pope's firſt Bull.

On the 31. of July, of the ſame Year, the Pope declared by a Bull granted at Orvietum, that he had no Deſign by his firſt Bull, to hinder the free Gifts, which the Biſhops were willing to preſent to the King, or his Lords, nor the Feodal Rights, and other Services due to the King from the Clergy, no more than the Caſe of the Exigency of State, on which Occaſion the King and his Succeſſors have Power to oblige the Clergy to grant him a Subſidy, even without conſulting the Pope: And that this Exigency ſhall be declared by the King, and his Succeſſors, if they have attained to the Age of One and Twenty Years; or in caſe they have not, by the Aſſembly of the States.

The Proceeding of the Pope againſt the Colonni, and their Condemnation.

Whilſt Boniface ſoften'd Matters with the King of France, he carried them to Extremity againſt the Gibelines, and particularly againſt the Colonni, who were the Heads of the Party. He had then two Cardinals of that Houſe, James Colonni, Cardinal of the Title of St. Mary in Viâ latâ, and Peter Colonni, Cardinal by the Title of St. Euſtachius. The Pope accuſed them of Robbing the Treaſury of the Church, after the Death of his Predeceſſors, and of Diſperſing defamatory Libels againſt him: And on that account, he cauſed them to be Summoned the Fourth of May, to appear perſonally the ſame Evening before him, and the Conſiſtory of Cardinals, there to hear what he had to alledge againſt them, and to know of them whether he was Pope. On the 10th. of May, theſe two Cardinals drew up a Writing, in the Caſtle of Longetia, wherein they declared, That they would not appear to the Summons given them by the Pope, becauſe they believed it was not ſafe for them to repair to the place, where he was; but ſince Benedictus Cajetanus has noted in the cloſe of the Summons, that he would know of them, whether he were Pope? They declared to him, That they held him not to be lawful Pope; that they had brought their Accuſation of it to the Cardinals, and demanded, that they would take Care of the Welfare of the Church, by examining, whether Benedict were a lawful Pope, having heard it from Perſons of good Credit often ſaid, that there was room to doubt, whether the Renunciation made by Celeſtine V. were Lawful and Canonical, becauſe God alone being the Beſtower of the Papal Soveraignty, it could not be taken away by any Man; and if Biſhops cannot be depoſed, nor tranſlated, no nor voluntarily reſign their Biſhopricks, but by Authority of the Pope their Superiour; by an Argument, à fortiori the Pope, who has no Superiour, cannot be diveſted, no, not voluntarily, of the Papacy, the acceptance of which is in a manner a Vow which is ever obliging; and that altho' Celeſtine did renounce the Papacy, the Renunciation that he made was not Valid, becauſe he was engaged to do it by Fraud and Surprize; That, in fine, though his Renunciation might ſtand good, ſeveral things have ſince happen'd, which had made Void the Election of Benedict; That theſe Reaſons had made them of Opinion that he was no Pope; That they inſiſted on it, that a General Council ought to be called, to decide this Queſtion, being ready to ſubmit to their Determination; That in the mean time they forbid him all the Functions of the Papacy, and Appealed, as to all he could do againſt them, or againſt others, to a General Council, to the Holy See, or a future Pope; That they made open Proteſtation of it, and that not being able to have this Proteſtation ſignified to him, for fear he ſhould Arreſt thoſe, that ſhould ſignifie it to him; according as he had threatned them, they would publiſh it to the whole World. In concluſion they exhorted all Chriſtians to procure the Aſſembling of a General Council, and to withdraw themſelves from the Obedience of Benedict, till a General Council ſhall have decided this Matter. This Act was paſſed in the preſence of an Apoſtolick Notary of Præneſte, and divers Witneſſes, the greateſt part whereof were Frenchmen.

The ſame day Boniface publiſhed a thundring Bull againſt the Colonni, wherein after having at large recounted the Miſchiefs which that Houſe had done to the Holy See, and complained, That the two Cardinals Colonni would not cauſe to be yielded up, by Stephen Colonni their Nephew, the City of Præneſte, and the Caſtles he Poſſeſſed, with a Deſign to imploy them in Favour of Frederick the King of Sicily, an Enemy of the Church, he depoſeth theſe two Cardinals, declares them to have forfeited all their Benefices, and incapable to enjoy any Eccleſiaſtical Dignity, no not ſo much as any Benefice ſcituate an Hundred Miles from the City of Rome, and Excommunicates not only them, but all others, that ſhall acknowledge them to be Cardinals, or admit them to aſſiſt at the Election of a Pope. He deprives for ever John and Odo, Sons of John Colonni, the Brother of Cardinal James, and all his Poſterity of all Benefices, declares them uncapable to be promoted to a Cardinalſhip, or the Papacy, or to enjoy any Benefice even to the Fourth Generation; Orders, That theſe two Cardinals ſhall appear within Ten Days before the Conſiſtory; and in default thereof, he deprives them of all their Goods, moveable and immoveable. The Publication of this Bull was followed by a Cruſade, which the Pope ſet on foot to make War upon the Colonni; by means whereof, he ſpoiled them of their Eſtates, took their Places, and their Caſtles, and drave them out of Italy. Sciarra Colonni, one of the Heads of this Family, being withdrawn from Præneſte, was there Beſieged, and for fear of falling into the Pope's hands, eſcaped by Night with his Nephews, and retired to the Woods, where he remain'd a long time conceal'd and wandring, till he fell into the hands of Pirates, who put him in Fetters; from which Philip the Fair reſcued him. Stephen Colonni, and others fled into France, where they were well received by the King: This very much diſpleaſed the Pope. But that which made the Pope, and the King of France fall out downright, was the Judgment, which the former gave, between the King, the Earl of Flanders, and the King of England; by which he ordained, that Philip the Fair, ſhould reſtore to the Earl his Daughter (whom he kept Priſoner ſince the Year 1296.) to Marry her, as he pleaſed, as alſo ſome Lands he had taken from him; and that he ſhould go into the Eaſt to make War upon the Infidels. The Pope diſpatch'd a Bull of this Judgment, and put it into the hands of the Engliſh Ambaſſador, who carried it to Paris: But when it was read in the Preſence of the King, of Charles Earl of Valois his Brother, of Robert Earl of Artois, and the Earl of Evreux; the Earl of Artois ſnatched away the Bull in a rage, and threw it into the Fire, Swearing, That it ſhould not be ſo, and the Pope ſhould not revenge himſelf at the Coſt of the Kingdom. The King proteſted, That he would not put in Execution, what the Pope had Decreed; but as ſoon as the Truce was expired, he would begin the War afreſh.

The Pope's Bull in favour of the Earl of Flanders.

The appointment of a Jubilee by Boniface.

In the Year 1300. Boniface publiſhed a Jubilee, in which he granted Plenary Indulgences to all, who ſhould viſit the Churches of St. Peter and St. Paul, at Rome; decreeing, that the ſame thing ſhould be renewed every Hundred Years. The opening of the Jubilee drew a great Concourſe of People to Rome; and Boniface to make the Soveraign Authority, which he pretended to have over the Temporality, to be owned, appeared at the Ceremony, one while in his Pontifical Habit, and another in Imperial Robes, and took for his Motto, Ecce duo gladii.

Boniface quarrels anew with the King.

The King not willing to quarrel with the Pope downright, ſent to him the ſame Year William of Nogaret, Baron of Catviſſon, in Quality of an Ambaſſador, to give him Advice of the Alliance he had made with the Emperor, who on his part likewiſe ſent him an Ambaſſador. The Pope had no great regard to the one or the other, blamed the Election of the Emperor, and threatned him, that he would croſs it if he did not give him Tuſcany, ſaid many diſobliging things of the King, and did all he could to break off the Alliance between the two Princes. Nogaret, who underſtood the ill Deſigns of the Pope, upbraided him therewith to his Face, which exaſperated his Spirit, and made him yet more averſe, than before, to the King's Intereſts.

The Biſhop of Pamiez. Envoy to the King, gives ill Language, and is Arreſted.

Boniface propoſed to the Chriſtian Princes a Cruſado to go into the Eaſt againſt the Infidels. He ſent Bernard Saiſſet, Biſhop of Pamiez (a Biſhoprick he had Erected in the Year 1296. in ſpite of the King) with Orders, not only to ſet forward this Expedition with Philip the Fair, but likewiſe to demand the Enlargement of the Earl of Flanders, and his Children. The King refuſing to hearken to theſe Propoſals, the Biſhop forgot the reſpect he owed the King, telling him, That he held nothing of his Majeſty, but that he owed all to the Pope, whoſe Subject he was, both as to Spiritual and Temporal Concerns, threatned to Interdict the Kingdom, and maintain'd the Pope's Temporal Power over Soveraign Princes. The King offended at this Procedure, cauſed this Biſhop to be accuſed of divers Monopolies which he had had exacted, and of Rebellion; and ordered him to be cited before the Parliament; where appearing, he was sent to Prison.

Boniface enraged at this Imprisonment, in the Month of February, in the Year 1301. sent James Norman, Archdeacon of Narbonne, to the King, to order him to set this Bishop at Liberty: The which the King did, putting him nevertheless under the keeping of the Archbishop of Narbonne, his Metropolitan, to punish him for his Rashness, according to the rules of the Canon. Boniface not content herewith, required that the King should set him at full Liberty, and give him a Grant of all his Goods.

A Bull against the King's Privileges.

After that, by a Bull of the 4th. of December, in the same Year, he suspended the Favours, and Privileges, he had granted to the King of France and his Successors, and to his Counsellors, Clergy, or Laity, and particularly, those he had granted for the Relief of the State; and decreed, that the Clergy, without his consent, should not Pay the King, what he demanded under the Title of Tenths, or Aid, though he had consented to it, and had given time, till the 1st. of November, in the Year following, to make Report of the Privileges to the Holy See, to the end they might be Examined.

A Bull of the Sovereignty of the Pope, and against the Rights of the King.

Two days after he set forth another Bull, wherein he declares, that God had established him over Kings, and Kingdoms, to pluck up, to destroy, to scatter, to build; that the King of France ought not to think, he has no Superiour, and is not Subject to the Pope; that he, who is of that Opinion, is a Fool and an Infidel. He therein Discourses with the King about the Summs of Money which he exacted of his Subjects: He therein complains that he had fill'd the Benefices, and Prebends vacant in the Court of Rome, without the Pope's Leave; that he had seized on the Goods of the Clergy; that he vexed them with several Grievances; particularly the Church of Lions, though it be out of the Bounds of his Kingdom; by receiving the Revenues of the Cathedral Churches during the Vacancy, which he falsly calls a Right belonging to the Crown. He orders the Prelates, Chapters of Churches, and Doctors of Divinity in the Kingdom to attend him, in order to provide for the Reformation of the Realm. He inveighs against the King's Evil Counsellors, and exhorts this Prince to undertake the Holy War. By another Bull of the same Date, directed to the Prelates, Chapters of Cathedrals, and other Doctors of the Realm, he writes to them, that not being ignorant of the Oppressions which the Clergy suffer from the Kings, his Officers, Earls or Barons, he has taken up a Resolution, after he had communicated it to the Cardinals, to Summon them to Rome: He orders them to appear there on the First of November following, with Powers and Instructions necessary, and Promises them, that Care should be taken for the Preservation of the Honour and Freedom of the Gallican Church, and the Reformation of the State. He writes the same thing to the Abbots in a Bull very like it: But to the end his Bull might make the deeper Impression, he made an Abridgment of it, in these words: "Boniface "the Bishop, a Servant of the Servants of God, to Philip King of France: Fear God, and "keep his Commandments. We will you to know, that you are Subject to us, both in Spi- "rituals and Temporals. You have no Right to bestow Benefices, and Prebends; and if the "Custody of the Goods of some Vacant Benefices belongs to you, you ought to reserve the "Profits to their Successors. If you have bestowed any Benefices, we declare the Donation "Void, and revoke the actual Possession which ensued thereon. We declare them Hereticks, "who believe the contrary. Given at the Palace of Lateran, on the 5th. of December, in the 7th. Year of our Papacy.

The Assembly of the States against the Attempts of the Pope.

These Bulls were delivered, and published in the Kingdom by the Archdeacon of Narbonne. The King to obviate the ill Consequences, which they might have, caused the short Bull to be publickly burnt on the 8th. of February 1302. and called together the Three Estates of his Kingdom to advise about Ways of Self-preservation. This Assembly was held in the Church of our Lady at Paris, 10th. of April 1302. The King proposed there the Pope's Pretensions to the Temporalties of his Kingdom, and the Summons he had sent to the Prelates to appear at Rome. Peter Flotte, who spake for the King, represented to the Assembly the pernicious Designs of the Pope, the Injuries which the Court of Rome did to the Gallican Church by her Reservations, by * Provisions of Archbishopricks, Bishopricks and other Benefices, which she bestowed on Strangers, that were Non-resident, and by other Methods, by which she assumed the disposal of all Benefices, by Impositions upon the Clergy; by the right she challenged to take Cognisance and to Judge of all Causes. He Protested on the King's behalf, that he own'd God only his Superior in Temporals; that it was his intent before the Arrival of the Nuncio, if there were Occasion, to regulate the Behaviour of his Officers towards the Clergy; but that since he had Superseded the doing it, for fear the Pope should take Advantage by it, and believe it to be done at his instance and by his order. The King demanded the Opinion of the Assembly upon all these Points, and chiefly about his Soveraign Jurisdiction in Temporals. The Nobility, having withdrawn awhile to Deliberate, answer'd by the Earl of Artois, That they thanked his Majesty for the good Will he had to maintain the Rights and Honour of his State, and declared, that they were ready to expose their Lives and Fortunes in its Defence; and though his Majesty would suffer, or pass by these Attempts, they would oppose it; and said, that they own'd no other Superiour, but the King. The Clergy was unwilling suddenly to give their Answer, and desired time to deliberate more fully; but the King pressing them to speak their Mind, the Prelates declared, That they believed themselves bound to Defend the the King, and the freedom of the Kingdom, and that ſome of them were engaged thereto by Oath, and others by Duty. Nevertheleſs they beſought the King to permit them to attend the Pope, who had ſent them a Summons; but the King refuſed it, by the Advice of the Nobility. The third Eſtate was of the ſame Opinion, with the Nobles.

The Anſwer of the King and States to the Pope.

This Aſſembly being broke up, the King ſent the Pope a ſhort Anſwer, like his abridged Bull, in theſe terms. "Philip by the Grace of God, King of France to Boniface, who ſtiles "himſelf Supreme Biſhop, little or no Greeting. May your great Extravagance know, "that we are not Subject to any Perſon whatſoever, in Things Temporal; that the beſtowing of Vacant Churches and Prebends, does of Regal right belong to us; that we can "Appropriate the Fruits of them to our ſelves; that the Grants we have made, or ſhall "make for the time to come, are Valid; that we will Maintain powerfully, thoſe that are "in Poſſeſſion thereof, and we declare them Fools, and Senſeleſs, that think the contrary. The Dukes, Earls, and Barons of France, wrote to the Cardinals the ſame Day, "That "though they deſired to maintain the Ancient Union, which ever had been between the Holy "See, and the Realm of France, yet they could not ſuffer the Attempts, which Boniface "made upon the King, and Kingdom. They ſend them word, what was reſolved in the Aſſembly of the States; Prove that the King is not Subject to the Pope, in Temporals; and that the Pope has no right to ſend for the Prelates of the Kingdom, nor undertake to reform it; they repreſent the Prejudice, the Prelates going out of the Realm would cauſe to the State; upbraid Boniface, that he has taken great Summs of Money for the Grants of Eccleſiaſtical Dignities; that he had filled the Benefices, with Perſons of no Merit; that he beſtowed Benefices, the Grant of which belonged to the King. They beſought the Cardinals to hinder the Conſequences of this Undertaking, that the Church may continue in Peace. The Prelates wrote a little after the ſame things to Boniface, informed him what paſſed in the Aſſembly; the Complaints the King there made; in what manner the Nobility there ſpake; how that being asked, they deſired time to Conſult, with deſire to appeaſe his Majeſty, and to Eſtabliſh the Union between him and the Holy See; but that being obliged to anſwer upon the ſpot, that they might not be looked on as Enemies to the State, they had declared, they thought themſelves bound to Aſſiſt the King, and Preſerve his Perſon, his Honour, his Liberty, his Rights, and thoſe of his Kingdom, as well by the Oath of Allegiance, which ſome of them had taken to the King upon account of their Fiefs, as by the Duty of Faithful Subjects; They added, that they had beſought his Majeſty to permit them to go to Rome, whither his Holineſs had cited them; but that the King and the Lords had forbid them: They earneſtly beſought the Pope to apply a Remedy to the Miſchiefs that would neceſſarily enſue, if the Diſſention, which is begun between him and the King, continued; and prayed him to re-eſtabliſh the Union, and revoke the Summons, he had cauſed to be given them by his Nuncio. The third Eſtate wrote likewiſe a Letter to the Cardinals to the ſame Effect.

The Replies of the Pope and Cardinals to the King and States.

The Pope's Anſwer to the Prelates contain'd nothing, but Complaints againſt the Aſſembly, which the King had cauſed to be held at Paris, and principally againſt Peter Flotte, whom he calls Belial ſemividens corpore, & mente totaliter exœcatus, and reproaches, againſt them that had not taken his part. He affirms, That the Doctrine delivered in this Aſſembly is Schiſmatical, becauſe it tends to the Eſtabliſhment of two Supreme Heads; and that the Deſign of thoſe Perſons who compoſed this Aſſembly, was to ſeparate the Gallican Church from the Union of the Church Univerſal, and to Erect a See againſt the Vicar of Jeſus Chriſt. In the Concluſion, he exhorts the Prelates to do their Duty, and to obey him, deſpiſing Temporal Riches, and the Threats of Secular Judges. The Cardinals anſwered the Nobility, That the Pope had never pretended that the King ought to be Subject to him in Temporals, or to hold his Kingdom of him: And that the Archdeacon of Narbonne had not inſinuated it, neither by word of Mouth, nor in Writing, and therefore the Propoſal made by Peter Flotte was without Ground; that the Pope had ſent for the Prelates and Doctors of France to conſult with them, as with Perſons who could not be ſuſpected by the King; that 'twas no new thing for the Holy See to aſſemble Provincial, and General Councils; that the Pope had favoured the King, in not calling a General Council, where there would appear Prelates of other Kingdoms, which are not well affected to that of France; that if the Letter were conſider'd which he wrote to the King, 'tis ſo far from being a ground of Complaint, that there is reaſon to Thank him for his Paternal Care of the King and Kingdom, to procure their Quiet, and diſcharge the Clergy, and People from Taxes; that if the Pope had burthen'd the Church of France, it was in favour of the King, in allowing him to Levy the Tenth part of the Church-Revenues for ſeveral Years; that the Benefices, and Eccleſiaſtical Dignities, which he had granted within the Kingdom, he had given with regard to the King; that he had likewiſe granted him ſeveral Diſpenſations; that he had filled the Archbiſhopricks, or Biſhopricks of France, with no Strangers, except the Archbiſhop of Bourges and the Biſhop of Arras, who were not ſuſpected by the King, and whoſe Merit was well known; that as to the Canonries he had confer'd them on Natives of the Realm, and choſen Perſons worthy to ſupply them, and that for one Stranger, there were in them an hundred French; In fine, They complain that the Prelates had not given to Boniface the Title of Supreme Biſhop in their Letter, and had not uſed the terms of Reſpect, which were uſually given him. This Letter of the Cardinals is Dated the 26th. of June, in the Year 1302. They wrote the ſame day another Letter to the third Estate, containing much the same things, but shorter. The same things likewise are to be found in three Letters of three Cardinals directed to Robert Duke of Burgundy, who had written to them to find out Ways how to remove this Disturbance, on Condition the Pope would revoke the Suspension of the Privileges, and the citation of the Prelates, and other Ecclesiastical Persons to Rome. They answer'd him about this Proposition, that the King ought to put himself in a posture to receive these Favours of the Pope; that he should first make him Satisfaction by acknowledging he had done amiss. The same year the Pope held a Consistory, wherein Cardinal Porto spake boldly for the Authority of the Pope over the Temporalties of Kings. Boniface did the like, and spake several things against the King, concluding, that he could depose him, and persisted in his resolution to force the Prelates to come to Rome. The King on the other side forbad them to depart, or carry any Gold or Silver out of his Kingdom, and caused the Estates of those to be seized, who were gone out of the Kingdom without his Leave.

Treatises against the Pope's Claim.

While the Potentates thus disputed their Rights, the King's Officers and the Divines endeavoured for their parts to maintain the Rights of the Kingdom, and the Truth. We have among others, a Writing of one Peter Bosco, the King's Advocate at Constance, against the short Bull of Boniface, wherein he maintains that the Pope's Claim is Heretical. We have besides another Treatise more at large, where the Question concerning the King's Soveraignty in Temporals is discussed Pro and Con, and decided in favour of the King, by very solid Reasons, and by Quotations out of the Scripture, and the Fathers.

William Nogaret's Petition against the Pope.

In the Year 1302. the King foreseeing, that the Pope would push Matters farther, and desiring to prevent it, received the Accusation of William Nogaret against the Pope, contain'd in a Petition of his to the King, which he presented to him in the Louvre, in the presence of divers Prelates and Lords, the 12th. of March. He therein sets forth, that Boniface is no lawful Pope, because he was chosen during the Life of Celestine, whom he deceived and seduced, and in fine, caused to be put to Death; and that his Intrusion could not be rectified by a new consent of the Cardinals, it being null in its beginning. He there says, That it is the King's part to make use of the Authority which God had put into his Hands, to oppose this Usurper of the Holy See. He propounds afterwards Four Heads of the Accusation against him. 1. That he is no Pope; but that he holds the Holy See unjustly. 2. That he is an apparent Heretick. 3. That he is Guilty of Notorious Simony. 4. That he is Guilty of several open Crimes, in which he is harden'd, viz. The Robbing of Churches, Tyranny, Blasphemy, Extortion, &c. He declares, That he is ready to make good all these things in a General Council, which he demands to be held, and in the mean time, that Boniface be Imprisoned, and that one be Substituted to Govern the Church, until there be a Pope chosen; and adds, That he Addresses himself to the King for this. 1. Because of his Religion. 2. Because of his Dignity Royal, which engages him to extirpate all Criminals. 3. Because of the Oath he has taken to defend the Churches of his Kingdom, which this ravening Woolf tears in pieces. 4. Because he is the Patron, and Protector of the Churches. 5. Because he ought to follow the Footsteps of his Ancestors, in Delivering the Roman Church from the Oppression she lies under.

The Publication of the Bull, Unam Sanctam.

The Pope for his part publish'd on the 16th. of November, his famous Decretal, Unam Sanctam, wherein he declares, That the Church, which is one, has two Swords, one Spiritual and the other Temporal; that the Temporal is Subject to the Spiritual; and that none can deny this Truth, without admitting of two Supreme Heads, with the Manichees. The King having received the News of what passed in the Court of Rome, Summoned the First of December a new Assembly of his Prelates, repeated the Prohibitions made to all his Subjects, neither to Depart the Kingdom, nor to carry out of his Dominions, Gold or Silver, Arms, Horses, &c. and wrote to the Pope by the Bishop of Auxerre, that he should Prosecute none of his Clergy, for Non-appearance; but that he should blame him, who hinder'd it.

Propoſals of Cardinal Lemoine Nuncio in France.

The Pope sent into France John Lemoine, Cardinal of the Title of St. Marcellinus, and St. Peter, to Treat with the King upon these Points in difference, and charged him to propound to him the following Articles. 1. To revoke the Prohibition made to the Prelates of going to Rome. 2. To own that the Pope has Soveraign Power to dispose of Benefices vacant in Curiâ, or otherwise; and that no Lay Person has right to confer them without his Leave. 3. That the Pope has Power to send Legates, and Nuncio's into all Places, without asking Leave of any Person. 4. That the Supreme Administration of the Churches-Revenues belongs to the Pope, who alone has right to dispose thereof, and require a part of them. 5. That neither the King, nor other Princes have any right to seize, or possess themselves of the Goods and Rights of the Church, nor to accuse the Clergy before them for Personal Actions, nor for Real, which are not held of them in Fiefe. 6. To send a special Proctor to Rome to clear himself for burning of his Holiness's Bull, to make him Satisfaction, and to hear the Pope's Resolution, which is to revoke all the Privileges granted by the Holy See to the Kings of France. 7. Not to Abuse the Guardianship of Cathedral Churches, that are Vacant, by a right called abusively, Regal, to hinder any wast or wrong to the Revenues of Churches, and to reserve all the Fruits to succeeding Prelates, except the reasonable Charges of the keeping them. 8. To restore to the Clergy the Spiritual Sword, and permit them to make use of it, notwithstanding all Privileges pretended by the King, and his Officers. 9. To let him underſtand, that the change of the Coin, which he hath now twice practiſed, ruins his State, and he is bound to Reſtitution. The 10. and 11. To confeſs, That the City of Lyons is no part of his Kingdom, and to reſtore to the Church of that City, and its Archbiſhop, the Lands which belong to them by abſolute Right. 12. To ſignifie to the King, that he ſatisfie the Holy See about all theſe Articles, within a certain time; if not, that he will take order therein, by proceeding againſt him Spiritually and Temporally.

The King's Anſwer to the Articles propounded by the Nuncio.

The King made Anſwer to theſe Articles: To the Firſt, That the Prohibition he had made, was not upon the account of the Clergy, nor to injure the Church of Rome; but with reſpect to the Rebellion of the Flemings, and to provide againſt any Conſpiracy, which might be made in his Territories: That his intent was not to hinder his Subjects from going to Rome, and returning thence, and that he will give Orders, that the Goods of the Biſhops offending, which he had cauſed to be ſeized, ſhall be reſtored. To the Second, That the Granting of Benefices belonged to him, and that he injoyed it but as St. Lewis and his Predeceſſors had done, time out of Mind. To the Third, That he hindred not the Popes Nuncio's and Legates from coming into his Kingdom, if they were not ſuſpected by him, or if he had not ſome juſt reaſon to do it. To the Fourth and Fifth, That he deſign'd to do nothing, but what is juſtified by Right and Cuſtom, and if his Officers exceed their Commiſſion, he is ready to puniſh them. To the Sixth, That the Bull was not burnt in Contempt; but the Biſhop of Laon, and the Sheriffs of that City having a Suit depending before the Parliament, and the Biſhop having procured a Bull, the Sheriffs complain'd of a Deſign to remove the Buſineſs into another Court, whereupon the Parties were agreed not to make uſe of the Bull, and burnt it as uſeleſs. To the Seventh, That he pretended to innovate nothing, as to the Regale, or right of Patronage, but he enjoyed it as his Predeceſſors had done, without waſt or abuſe, and if his Officers committed any, he would take order about it. To the Ninth, That he hinders not the Churchmen from uſing the Spiritual Sword, in ſuch caſe as belong to them. To the Ninth, That he made a change in the Coin upon Neceſſity, and to be in a Condition to Defend the Kingdom, as his Predeceſſors had done on like Occaſions, and that he had already eas'd the Complaints of his Subjects, as to any ill Conſequence, that might attend it. To the Tenth and Eleventh, That he pities the Archbiſhop of Lyons, and his Church, for what they had ſuffered on the account of the Differences they have had with the People of that City, and for what the Archbiſhop has ſuffer'd for refuſing to take the Oath of Fidelity to his Majeſty; but 'tis the Archbiſhop's Fault; nevertheleſs he is ready to Debate this Matter, and to make it appear clearly, that the City of Lyons is part of his Kingdom, and that he is not willing in any wiſe to invade the Rights of the Church. In fine, In anſwer to the Laſt, he declares, That his intent is, to preſerve and increaſe the Union, which ever was between his Predeceſſors and the Holy See, intreats the Pope to proſecute the ſame Deſign, and not to croſs him in the Enjoyment of his Liberties, Franchiſes, and Privileges; adding, That if his Holineſs be not ſatisfied with theſe Anſwers, he is ready to ſubmit herein to the Judgment of the Earls of Britain and Burgundy, whom even the Pope himſelf offer'd to take for Mediators.

Bulls againſt the King.

The Pope was not at all ſatisfied with theſe Anſwers, and not only ſhewed his reſentment by the Letters he wrote the 13th. of April, to the Earl of Alanſon, the Biſhop of Auxerre, and Cardinal of St. Marcellinus; but he again commands this latter, to give a freſh Summons to the Prelates of the Realm, to appear at Rome within Three Months, and ſent him a Bull, wherein he declared, that the King had incurred the Penalty of Excommunication, ordered the Nuncio to ſignifie it to him, to declare all thoſe Prelates, and others of the Clergy Excommunicate, who ſhould Celebrate or Adminiſter the Sacraments to him, or in his Preſence; and to cite his Confeſſor to appear within Three Months, before his Holineſs. The Nuncio having received theſe Bulls by the hand of Nicholas de Benefracto, gave out Copies of them; but this no ſooner came to the Knowledge of the King, but he gave Order to Arreſt thoſe that diſperſed them; the Nuncio not thinking his Perſon in Safety, withdrew: The Archdeacon of Conſtance, and Benefracto were Arreſted at Troyes, and the King renewed the Order he had given and after Superſeded, to Seize the Goods of the Clergy, who were out of the Kingdom.

The Aſſembly of the States in the Louvre.

On the 13th. of June, was held in the Caſtle of the Louvre, an Aſſembly of the Prelates and Nobility, in preſence of the King; in which Lewis Earl of Evreux, Guy Earl of St. Paul, John Earl of Dreux, and William du Pleſſis, made Complaint againſt Boniface, accuſed him of Hereſie, and divers other Crimes, which they engaged to prove by Oath upon the Evangeliſts in a full General Council, and beſought the King, as Protector and Defender of the Church, to call one. The Prelates judging this Affair to be of great Importance, demanded time to deliberate on it. On the Morrow, the Aſſembly yet Sitting, William du Pleſſis read the Heads of the Accuſation, which he offer'd againſt the Pope; namely, That he was an Heretick; that he did not believe the Immortality of the Soul, nor an Eternal Life; that he doubted the reality of our Lord's Body in the Euchariſt, and ſhew'd it no reſpect; that he affirm'd Fornication to be no Sin: That he approved of the Book of Arnoldus de Villa-Nova, Condemned by the Biſhop of Paris, and burnt: That he had cauſed Images to be ſet up in Churches, to be adored: That he was a Sorcerer, and Simoniack: That he maintain'd the Pope could not commit Simony: That he forced the Prieſts to reveal Confeſſions; That he he Eat Fleſh at all times: That he Debaſed the Order of Cardinals, and ſome Orders of Monks: That he was a Sworn Enemy of France, and that he had a Deſign to deſtroy the Kingdom: That he had cauſed Celeſtine, his Predeceſſor, to die in Priſon: That he had nulled the Marriage of ſeveral Perſons, and had made the Nuns, without any Ground, to leave their Convents. After he had read theſe Accuſations, he proteſted, 'twas not out of any hatred to Boniface, that he produced theſe Crimes, but for the good of the Church; and declared, he was ready to prove them in a General Council, which he deſired to be Called; and becauſe he fear'd, that Boniface would thunder againſt him, he appealed to the next Council, next Pope, or to the Holy See, adhering to the Alligations inſinuated by Peter Nogaret, and demanded an Act of his Declaration. The King ſaid, That he conſented to the Calling of a Council, that he would thereto contribute his whole Power, deſiring the Prelates to joyn with him; and to avoid the Proſecutions of the Pope, he appealed, as to all he might be able to do, to the next Council, or Pope. The Prelates likewiſe own'd, that the calling of a Council was Neceſſary, and adhered to the Appeal of the King unto the next Council. In purſuit of the Requeſts of this Aſſembly, the King wrote to all the Cities, Churches, and Communities of his Kingdom, that he might gain their conſent to the calling of a Council, and to the Appeal to be made to the next Council; and in a little time after, the Clergy, the Nobility, the Commons, the Chapters, the Univerſities, the Secular Orders, and the Regular, even the Mendicants (except that of the Ciſtercians) and ſeveral ſingle Prelates of the Realms of France and Navarre, ſign'd Acts in form of their Conſent and their Appeal. The King gave Order for the calling of a Council, and gave Notice to the Kings and Princes of Europe, of his reſolution. The Pope on the other hand ſent out his thundering Bulls againſt the King, and all that adhered to his Appeal, Interdicts the Univerſities and other Societies, deprives the Chapters of their right of Election, complains loudly of what paſſed in the Aſſembly, oppoſes the calling of a General Council, and threatens to proceed againſt the King, notwithſtanding his Appeal.

The Pope taken by Nogaret at Anagni.

Nogaret was then in Italy, where he received the Reſolution of the Aſſembly held in the Louvre, with order to publiſh it, and ſignifie it to the Pope, who was withdrawn to Anagni, where he cauſed, on our Ladies Birth-day, to be publiſh'd a Bull, whereby he Excommunicated the King of France; and releaſed his Subjects from their Oath of Allegiance. He went to Anagni, attended by Sciarra Colonni, Renaldus de Supino, and Three hundred Horſe, and ſome Foot; and having gained ſome of the Inhabitants of Anagni by Money, he entred the City the 8th. of September, with his Troops, carrying the Standard of France, and crying, Let Pope Boniface Periſh, but let the King of France Live; Muoia Papa Bonifacio, è viva il Ré di Francia. Their deſign was to go directly to the Pope's Palace, but having been Attaqued by the Marquis Cajetan his Nephew, in paſſing before his Palace, they were obliged to force his Palace, and the Houſes of thoſe who had embraced the Pope's Party. Sciarra Colonni Attacked the Caſtle where the Pope was, took it, ſeized Boniface, and rifled his Treaſury. Nogaret twitted the Pope with what he had done in France, challenged him to call a Council; Sciarra Colonni would oblige him to renounce the Papacy; but Boniface having made him Anſwer, that he would ſooner loſe his life, Sciarra ſtruck him on the Face with his Gantlet, and had killed him, if Nogaret had not interpos'd. The Pope thus deſerted by all his Friends, and in the hands of his moſt cruel Enemies, raiſed the Compaſſion of the Citizens of Anagni, who declared for him, and ſet him at Liberty. He was conducted by his own Order to a publick place, ſpake to the People, pardon'd thoſe of the City, except ſuch as had plunder'd the Treaſures of the Church; declared, that he would be reconciled to the King of France, and the Colonni, and that he would Pardon them, and even Nogaret himſelf. Nevertheleſs he ſoon left this City, and went to Rome, attended with ſome Troops. He arrived there Five Weeks after his being taken, and died with Grief and Melancholy, the 12th. of October 1303. in the Ninth Year of his Papacy. This was the end of this Pope, who had, whatever his Enemies may ſay, great Endowments, and a great deal of Wit; but Ambition and an itch to exerciſe an Authority, which belonged not to him, did caſt him headlong into inevitable Miſchiefs, never to be eſcaped by any, that attempt to uſurp the Rights which appertain to ſuch Princes, as are in a condition to defend them.

The Pope's Deliverance and his Death.

The Letters of Boniface VIII.

This Pope cauſed to be Compoſed and Publiſhed a new Body of Decretals, Intituled, Sextus, divided into Five Books, containing ſome Decretals of his Predeceſſors, from the time of Gregory the Ninth, and many of thoſe which he made in his own Pontificate. This Collection was not only rejected in France, but there was even a time when no body durſt make uſe of it, or quote it. Rainaldus, Bzovius, and Waddingus have inſerted divers of his Letters, and Decrees into their Annals, and there are ſome of them likewiſe in the Regiſters of the Bulls.

The Election of Benedict XI.

Ten days after the Death of Boniface VIII. on the 22. of October, in the Year 1302. Nicholas, the Cardinal, Biſhop of Oſtia, Native of Treviſi, who was of the Order of the Friars Preachers, was choſen Pope, and took the Name of Benedict XI. He was a Man of good Morals and of a very Holy Life. Soon after his Advancement Peter Peredo, Prior of la Cheſa, whom the King had ſent into Italy after the Death of Boniface, preſented to him a large Memoir, wherein he demanded the holding of a General Council, and propounded ſeveral Heads of Accuſation and Complaint, which the King and Kingdom made againſt Boniface. Nogaret ſignified likewiſe, that he would continue his Proſecution; but Benedict having deſired him by the Archbiſhop of Toloufe to proceed no further till he received freſh Orders from the King; aſſuring him, that he would remove this Scandal, and re-eſtabliſh the Union between the Church of Rome, and the King of France, he yielded to this Requeſt, and return'd into France, to report this News, and adviſed the King to ſend Ambaſſadors to the Pope, furniſhed with ſufficient Power to treat of this Accommodation. He was joined with the other Ambaſſadors, who were Bernard Lord of Mercœuil, William du Pleſſis, and Peter de Belleperche; but the Pope would never Treat with him. His Holineſs, who earneſtly deſired Peace, began with Abſolving the King from the Cenſures he had incurred, by a Bull of the 4th. of April 1304. By another of the 17th. of the ſame Month he revoked the Reſervation which Boniface the Eighth had made to provide for all the Cathedral and Regular Churches in the Kingdom: And by a Third of the 13th. of May, in the ſame Year; he alſo gave Abſolution to all Prelates, Lords and other Officers, who had hinder'd the King's Subjects from going to Rome, and even thoſe, who had a hand in the taking of Boniface, except William Nogaret. He made void likewiſe all the Sentences, and Bulls of Boniface, by which he revoked the Privileges granted to the King of France, and his Officers, re-eſtabliſh'd the Univerſities; and in fine, to extinguiſh intirely the whole Matter of Difference, he revoked by other Bulls the Sentence given by Boniface againſt the Families of the Colonni, and Montenigro, and all their Adherents, re-eſtabliſh'd them to their former Condition, excepting to the Dignities of Cardinal, Benefices, Goods confiſcate, and the Capacity of being advanced to the Papacy. Notwithſtanding all theſe Revocations the King's Agents inſiſted upon the calling of a Council, and William Nogaret deſired to be cleared, or abſolved at any rate. But the Pope was ſo far from doing it, that being at Perus, he publiſhed on the 7th. of June a thundring Bull, wherein he declares Nogaret Excommunicate*, with all thoſe who had aſſiſted at the taking of Boniface, and Summons them to appear before him, to receive Judgment; otherwiſe he declares, that he ſhall proceed againſt them according to Law. This was the laſt Bull of ‖ Benedict, for he died at Peruſia the 8th. of July following. He left behind him divers Letters, whereof ſome are mention'd by the Writers of the Annals [of the Church.]

Revocation of the Bulls of Boniface VIII. againſt France, and the Colonni.

* Excommunication of Nogaret and his Aſſiſtants in taking of Boniface.

‖ Death and Letters of Benedict XI.

After his Death the Holy ſee remain'd void for the ſpace of three Months; the Cardinals aſſembled at Peruſia not coming to an Agreement about the Choice, by reaſon of the Conteſts of two Factions, of which the one was for France, the other for Boniface. Nogaret believing this Vacancy favour'd him with an Opportunity to do ſomething towards his Juſtification, paſſed two Acts the 7th. of September, before the Official of Paris; One by which he ſets himſelf againſt the Partiſans, and Adherents of Pope Boniface, and Appeals to the next Council, to the Church, and to the next Pope, to hinder the Cardinal's Electing for Pope any of that Party, who are Excommunicated by the Canons; The other contains his Proteſtations, and his Excuſes, and a Declaration he makes, that all he ſaid againſt Boniface is true; that he is well inform'd of it, and though he demand Abſolution ad cautelam, he does not believe he is in any manner bound by this Pope. Then he renews his old Accuſations framed againſt Boniface, and recites a Hiſtory of all that paſs'd, as well under this Pope, as under Benedict his Succeſſor; offers to juſtifie his Innocence before a General Council, and even before the Holy See, provided, he may be Heard, and be aſſured of the Safety of his Perſon; becauſe he cannot otherwiſe venture thither. There are beſides three other Acts of Nogaret of the ſame Nature, and the Letters of Attorney, which he gave to Bertrand d'Aguaſſa, to proſecute his Buſineſs in his Name, before the Holy See, and to demand ſafe Conduct, that he might accuſe the Memory of Boniface, and juſtifie himſelf from the Robbing the Church Treaſure, which was laid to him, and demand Abſolution in caſe it were neceſſary. The French and the Colonni did likewiſe make requeſt to the King, that the Proceſs againſt Boniface might be haſtened. Theſe latter making uſe of the Opportunity, procured a re-eſtabliſhment in their Eſtates and Dignities by a Decree of the People of Rome, who condemned Peter Cajetan, Boniface his Nephew, to give Peter and James Colonni an Hundred Thouſand * Florins of Gold, or Lands of the ſame Value, to recompence them for the Loſſes they had ſuſtained; made void and null all that had paſſed againſt them, and ordered Pancellus Urſi to reſtore to the People of Rome the Town of Nepi, which Sciarra Colonni had given them.

The Petitions of Nogaret and the French, againſt the Memory of Boniface.

* An Ancient Golden Coin, anciently Current in France, worth 2 s. ſterling.

The Cardinals of the two Factions beginning to be weary of being confined to the Conclave, Cardinal du Prat, Chief of the French Party, conferred with Cardinal Francis Cajetan, repreſented to him, that they did great Injury to the Church by this delay; and demanded, if he had not ſome Expedient to bring Matters to an Agreement. Cardinal Cajetan found out one; That the Italian Party ſhould chuſe Three Ultramontane Archbiſhops, and the other ſhould chuſe out of the Three, One, whom they pleaſed, Forty Days after. Cardinal du Prat having accepted of this Propoſal, Cardinal Cajetan named the Three Archbiſhops; the firſt of which was Bertrand Got, who had been heretofore Biſhop of Comminges, and was then Archbiſhop of Bourdeaux, Born a Subject of the King of England at Villandreau in Bajodois, and the King's Enemy. Du Prat forthwith gave Advice hereof to Philip the Fair, who wrote preſently to this Archbiſhop, and ordered him to meet him in a Wood near to St. John d'Angeli, where he declared to him, that 'twas in his Power to make him Pope, and that he would do it with a Proviſo, that he would Promiſe to do him Six Favours, which he ſhould demand of him. The Archbiſhop threw himſelf at his Feet, and ſaid to him, " Sir, Now I know that you love me, and " that you render me Good for Evil, do you but Command, and I will Obey: The King raiſed him up, embraced him, and ſaid thus to him, " The Firſt is to reconcile me throughly with the " Holy Church, and to Pardon me the Miſchief I may have done in cauſing Pope Boniface to " be Arreſted. The Second is, to reſtore me to the Communion of the Church, and them that " aſſiſted

The Election of Clement V.

" assisted me. The Third, to Grant me all the Tithes of my Kingdom for Five Years, to make " good the Charge I have been at in my War with Flanders. The Fourth, to blot out the Me- " mory of Pope Boniface. The Fifth, to restore to the Dignity of Cardinals, the two Colonni's. As " for the Sixth, I reserve my self, says the King, to declare it to you, in convenient time and " place, in regard it must be very Secret. The Archbishop promised all these things with an Oath, by the Body of JESUS CHRIST, and gave him his Brother, and two of his Nephews for Hostages: The King on his part Swore, That he would cause him to be chosen Pope. They parted, after they had said these words; and the King wrote presently to the Cardinals of his Party, that they should chuse the Archbishop of Bourdeaux. The thing was done with so much Diligence, that the Answer was returned to Pernsia in Five Weeks. As soon as it Arrived, they proceeded to the Election, and Bertrand Got was chosen Pope, according to the Agreement made the 5th. of June, 1305. He accepted the Popedom gladly, was named Clement V. and was Invested in the Month of August at Lyons, whither the Cardinals came to meet him. The King, his Brother Charles of Valois, and a great Number of Princes and Lords of France assisted at this Ceremony. The King having for some Paces held the Reins of the Pope's Mule, resign'd them to his Brother Charles, and the Duke of Britain, to mount on Horseback, and ride by the Side of the Holy Father. In the Cavalcade an old Wall loaden with a throng of People fell down, crushed to Death John Duke of Britainy, and a Brother of the Pope's, dangerously Wounded the King's Brother, and slightly, the King himself, and beat off the Pope's Mitre.

The Revocation of Boniface's Bulls by Clem. V.

The first thing which Clement did, was to confirm the Absolution, that Benedict XI. had given to the King; to revoke the Bull of Boniface, touching the Subsidies to be demanded from the Clergy, and all that followed thereupon; and to declare, That the Bull Unam Sanctam, should do no Prejudice to the King, or Kingdom of France; and that all things should remain in the same posture they were in before that Bull. In fine, he re-established the Cardinals Colonni in their Dignities, and thus acquitted him of Four of the Articles, he had promised to the King. It was more difficult to satisfie him in the Fifth, which concerned the Memory of Pope Boniface. The King observing, that Clement did nothing in that point, spake with him about it at Poitiers in the Year 1307. and pressed him to proceed against the Memory of Boniface. This Proposal gave the Pope much trouble, and to shift off the performance of it, he answer'd by advice of Cardinal Prat, that this Business required the Meeting of a General Council, which he ever since design'd to call. Nevertheless being solicited by the King, and his Creatures, to set this Affair on foot, he heard some Witnesses, Summon'd the Accusers, part whereof appeared, and among others Nogaret and du Plessis. The first boldly maintained his Accusation against Boniface, and undertook to make it good. Cardinal Francis Cajetan defended his Unkle's Memory: Divers Writings there were on both Sides, and the King daily pressed the Conclusion of this Affair; on the contrary, the Defenders of Boniface put off Judgment as much as possible. The Pope considering the Importance of this Affair, used his utmost endeavour to pacifie the King, and to spin out the time; and to bring it to Effect, he wrote to the Earl of Anjou, in a manner to cause the King his Brother to submit, touching this Dispute, to what should be Decreed by the Church and the Pope. The King was sometime before he could resolve; but at last being pressed by the great Ones of the Kingdom, he declared by his Letters Patents given at Fontainbleau, in the Month of February 1310. that he left the Judgment of this Affair to the Pope and a Council: Lewis Earl of Evreux, and Guy Earl of St. Paul, did the like. The Pope continued to carry on the Process, received Petitions, Writings, Memoirs and Deeds, named the Cardinals to Examine the Proceedings, caused to be made thereof a tedious Verbal Process, which contained all that had been said on both Sides, from the 16th. of March 1310. till toward the close of the said Year. It contained likewise the Informations of Fourteen Witnesses, who Swore horrid Crimes of Impiety, Sodomy and Uncleanness against Boniface. At last the Pope, to rid himself of this Affair, gave out a Bull the 17th. of April, in the Year 1311. wherein he revoked all the Sentences, Decrees, and Declarations of Boniface, which were not inserted in the Sixth Book of the Decretals, so far forth as they imported any prejudice to the Honour, Rights and Liberties of the King of France, the Kingdom, and his Subjects, except those two Extravagants, Unam Sanctam and Rem non novam, which were to stand according to the Modifications heretofore made by his Holiness. He annuls likewise all the Revocations and Suspensions of Privileges, Excommunications, Interdicts, Deprivations, Depositions, and all other Processes of Deed or Right, made as well by Boniface, as Benedict his Successor, since All Saints Day in the Year 1300. as well against the King, as his Children, his Brothers, and his Subjects, even against Informers and Accusers, by reason of any Informations, Appeals, Demands of a General Council, Blasphemies, Ill Language, taking the Person, invading the House of Boniface, and other parts of the Difference the King had with this Pope, he Abolisht the Spot of Infamy and the Mark of Reproach that might, in these Cases, stick upon the King, his Posterity, on the Accusers, Prelates, Barons, or others; Discharges them from all Condemnations, sets them to Rights, and restores them to their ancient State; Ordains, That the Sentences, Suspensions, and other Acts made against them, should be raised out of the Registers of the Church of Rome, but all this without prejudicing the principal Cause, and the Prosecution, which might be made thereupon: He declares nevertheless, That he comprises not in this Abolition and Remission, William Nogaret, nor Sciarra Colonni, and some others which he Names. As for Nogaret, who had demanded to be Absolved ad cautelam,

The preparing of the Process against the Memory of Boniface VIII.

ſalem, the Pope grants it him, upon condition he would undertake ſome Pilgrimage, and upon the firſt Opportunity go into the Holy Land with Horſe and Arms, there for ever to remain; at leaſt till the Pope permit him to return. By another Bull of the ſame Date, he declares, That the King, nor his Succeſſors ſhall not in any wiſe be moleſted, nor involved in the Proſecution, that ſhall be made in the Affair of Boniface. By another Bull he extends the Abſolution mentioned in the preceding Bull to the Inhabitants of Anagni, except ſuch, as he has named: And by the laſt, he not only Excludes Nogaret; but alſo ſome other Lords and Prelates of the Kingdom of France, from the Favour granted by his Bull.

The Judgment of the General Council at Vienne, about the Affair of Boniface.

The General Council was opened at Vienne in Dauphine, in the Month of October, in the Year 1311. King Philip came thither, the Year following in Mid-Lent, with a great Company of Princes and Lords, and was preſent at the opening of the Second Seſſion. The Affair of Boniface was there brought into debate, as 'twas promiſed the King, but he had therein no Satisfaction; for it was Voted, That Boniface had ever been a good Catholick, and that there was no proof of his being a Heretick; There was no mention made of other Crimes, whereof he was accuſed, and which had been Sworn by the Witneſſes. The Reaſons of his Juſtification were alledged by Cardinal Richard of Sienne, Doctor at Law; by the Cardinal John of Namurs, Doctor of Divinity; and by Cardinal Gentil, Doctor and Canoniſt. There appear'd alſo two Knights of Catalonia, who maintained that Boniface was a good Catholick by a Challenge to the Combat, which was not accepted by any Body. The Pope and the Cardinals, to content the King, made a Decree, importing that the King, nor his Succeſſors ſhould never be diſturbed, nor call'd to account for what had been done againſt Pope Boniface. Thus ended the Conteſt, which laſted for many Years, between the King of France and the Holy See, about the Differences of Philip the Fair, and Pope Boniface.

CHAP. II.

The Hiſtory of the Condemnation of the Templars.

The Settlement, Progreſs, and Declenſion of the Order of Templars.

THE Affair of Boniface was not quite finiſh'd, when Philip the Fair, undertook another, which he brought to Effect more ſucceſsfully, and with greater Eaſe; this was againſt the Order of the Templars, which he was reſolved wholly to Extirpate. This Order was Eſtabliſh'd, as we have ſaid, in the Year 1118. by Hugo de Paganis, Jeoffry of St. Omer, and Seven other Knights, who made a Vow between the Hands of the Patriarch of Jeruſalem, to live according to the Rule of the Canons Regular. They were appointed to Guard the Roads, and to defend Pilgrims, that went to Jeruſalem. Baldwin II. King of Jeruſalem, gave them for ſome time only a Houſe near the Temple; from whence they took the Name of Templars. The Council of Troyes held in the Year 1118. approved of their Inſtitution, gave them a Rule, and order'd their Habit they were to wear for the time to come, ſhould be white. Eugenius III. added hereto a red Croſs, and ordered, that the Knights and the Friars ſhould wear it on their Cloak. In the beginning they were Poor, and few in Number; but by little and little they Multiplied, grew very Rich, and ſpread over all Chriſtendom, where they had an infinite number of Houſes, and vaſt Riches. Their Wealth made them Proud and Inſolent: They ſhook off the Yoke of Obedience, which they owed the Patriarch of Jeruſalem, exempted themſelves from the Juriſdiction of the Ordinaries, and from paying of Tithes, and their Power carried them out to do ſeveral Unjuſt Enterprizes, and render'd them formidable to Princes and Kings. While they reſided at Jeruſalem, they imployed their Strength againſt the Infidels: The City being taken by Saladin in the Year 1187. they retreated to St. John of Acre, and after that to a Caſtle near Caſarea; from thence they continued to make War upon the Infidels, but they were almoſt all Slain at the Sacking of the City of Acre or Acon, in the Year 1191. There remain'd of them but Ten, who withdrew to the Iſle of Cyprus; from whence they made Inroads upon the Saracens. They poſſeſſed themſelves of the Iſland of Tortoſa, from whence the Sultan of Babylon expell'd them. They Equipped a Fleet in Sicily, with which they over-run all the Coaſts of Greece, which they Plunder'd and Ranſack'd, invaded Thrace, took Theſſalonica, laid waſt the Helleſpont and Peleponneſus, took Athens, where they ſlew Robert de Brenne, who commanded there; inſomuch, that abuſing their Strength and Power, they turn'd thoſe Arms againſt the Chriſtians, which they ought to have imployed only againſt the Infidels. They no longer made War from a Principle of Devotion, as did their Predeceſſors, but to enrich themſelves, and oftentimes engaged the Saracens to make Incurſions upon the Chriſtians, to make themſelves Neceſſary, and to draw great Summs of Money from Chriſtian Princes, not being able to endure any other, but themſelves ſhould engage in this War. They had no ſooner forſaken their Duty, but they fell into Diſorders and Out-rages, which Licence and Impunity increaſed, and puſh'd on to a ſtrange Exceſs. They remain'd a long time conceal'd, but were at laſt diſcover'd by two Knights, Condemned for their Crimes; the one, the Prior of Montfaulcon of the Province of Tholouſe, an Apoſtate condemned by the Great Maſter of the Order,

The Informers againſt the Templars.

Brother

Brother to Squinus of Foriam, put in Prison for his Crimes; The other named Noffo Dei, a Florentine, condemned to rigorous Punishments by the Provost of Paris. These two Criminals took a Resolution to rescue themselves out of the Misery wherein they were, or else to involve their whole Order in the same Infamy, to discover the hidden Disorders of their Brethren. King Philip the Fair, who hated the Templars, and sought occasion to do them a displeasure, ordered that these two Informers should be examined, and their Depositions taken. They declared things so strange, and Crimes so heinous, that the King hardly believed them. Nevertheless, he would have the Matter searched to the bottom, and know the Truth. But in regard this Affair concern'd an Order spread through all Christendom, he discoursed of it with Pope Clement the Fifth, when he assisted at his Coronation, and also had it spoken of to him at Poitiers by his Ambassadors. The Pope could not believe the Crimes charged on them to be true, they were so very incredible, and appeared impossible. The Great Master of the Temple, and many Templars of divers Countries, whose Concern it was to justifie their Order, besought him to inform himself of these Accusations, submitting to the most severe Punishments, if they were found Guilty of what was charged on them. The Pope let the King understand it, by his Bull of the 23d. of August, in the Year 1306. in which he sends him word, that in a few days he should go to Poitiers, and there begin to make Inquisition concerning this Order; praying the King to transmit to him the Informations he had already taken.

The Templars Arrested, and their Estates Seized.

Nevertheless the King fearing, lest this Business being discovered might cause Disturbance in the Kingdom, the Order of the Templars being so very Powerful in France, sent Letters to all the Judges of his Kingdom, with a Command to Arrest all the Templars on the same Day; and that the Matter might be kept the more Secret, they had Orders not to open the Letters, till the Evening before the Day 'twas to be put in Execution. This was punctually observed, and all the Templars throughout the Kingdom saw themselves Arrested and clapt into Prison the 5th. of October, in the Year 1307. if we may credit the Historians. But there are Bulls of the Pope dated in the Second Year of his Papacy, which ended in the Month of June 1305. and by consequence before October 1307. which suppose the Templars already Arrested: which might make it be thought, that that Accident ought rather to be referred to the Year 1306. than to that of 1307. if all the Historians of that time did not with one consent relate it done in the Year 1307. and Clement V. himself in a Bull dated the 12th. of July, in the Third Year of his Popedom. Wherefore it is most probable, that there is some Mistake in the Dates of Clement's Letters. The Great Master of the Order named James Molay, of the City Besançon, who was present in the Temple of Paris, was Arrested among the rest: The King possess'd himself of the Temple, and caused the Estates of the Templars to be seized. On the Morrow after the King Assembled the University, and caused it to be told them by Peter of Nogaret, who was the principal Actor in this Affair, what were the Reasons which had induced him to cause the Templars to be Arrested, and the heinous Crimes whereof they stood accused. The Pope took the Proceeding of the King ill, and sent him a Bull dated the 27th. of October, in the Second Year of his Papacy, Complaining, That he had caused the Templars, Subjects of the Roman Church to be Imprisoned absque medio, and had seized their Estates, though it belong'd not to the Secular Powers to judge Ecclesiastical Persons. He adds, That he has so much greater reason to complain of this proceeding, for that he had given him intimation, that he was getting Information against them, and sending to him two Cardinals [Berengarius Cardinal of the Title of the Saints, Nerea, and Aquilein, and Stephen, Cardinal of the Title of St. Ciriaca] to treat with him about this Affair, that he might put into their hands the Prisoners, and their Effects.

Informations against the Templars.

While these things were transacting, the King gave a Commission to William Paris, of the Order of the Friars Preachers, Inquisitor for the Pope in France, to make ready the Process against all the Templars, and order'd all the Lords of the Kingdom, and his Officers, to Arrest all the Templars they could light on, and thereupon to referr the Judgment and Cognisance to the Ecclesiastical Judges.

The Crimes they be Charged with.

The detestable Crimes, whereof they were accused were, 1. That they obliged all those that entred into this Order, at the time of their Admission, to abjure Jesus Christ, and to spit three times upon a Crucifix. 2. That they obliged them, to Kiss him that admitted them, on the Mouth, on the Navel, and on the Extream part of the Back. 3. That they forbad them to converse Carnally with any Woman; but allowed them to commit Sodomy with their Brethren of the Society. 4. That they made them worship a Silver and Gilt wooden Head, with a great Beard; which they likewise exposed to be Adored in their General Assemblies. William Paris examined upon these Interrogatories an Hundred and four Templars in the Month of November, in the Year 1307. touching these Pranks. The Three first Heads were Confessed by almost all that were Impeached. The Fourth was owned to be true by some, but the others said, they knew nothing of it. There were in this great Number of Examinants, but Three, who said they had never seen any ill in the Order, and that they had taken notice of nothing therein, but what was of good Repute. James Molay, the Great Master of the Order, Hugh Perraut, and Guy, Brother of Dauphin de Viennois, who were the most considerable Persons among the Templars, were heard to this Information, and Confessed one Part of these Deeds. One of the Examinants, which was Jeffery of Gonneville, who had been received in England, declared, That at his Admission, having refused to abjure JESUS CHRIST, the Governour

Swore

Swore to him, that it could not hurt him; that it was the Cuſtom of the Order, which had been introduced by a wicked Great Maſter, who having been taken Priſoner by a Sultan, had not been ſet at Liberty, but on Condition he would introduce this Cuſtom into the Order; that others ſaid, this had been brought up by Roncelin, Great Maſter of the Order, others by Thomas Berauldus, a Great Maſter likewiſe of the Order; and others, in fine, that it was in imitation of St. Peter, who denied JESUS CHRIST thrice. The greater part of the Examinants teſtified, they did not this, but with regret, that they had confeſs'd and repented of it.

There were ſeveral other Inquiſitions, taken in divers places; to wit, one of an Hundred and Eleven Templars, by the ſame William Paris at Troyes, who agreed in all the Articles, except the Adoration: Another taken at Bigorre, by Bertrand d'Agaſſe, Preſident of that City, who allowed hearing to five Templars: Another of thirteen Templars at Caen, by the Monks, who received a Commiſſion for this purpoſe, from William Paris: One of theſe Thirteen denied the Articles; but being put to the Queſtion, he confeſſed them: Another of ſeven Templars taken at Cahors, by John d' Arreblay: Another of ten Templars taken at Pont de l'Arche, by the Bailiff of Roan, and others: In fine, that, which was taken the ſame Year at Carcaſſonne, wherein ſeven Templars were Examined, who confeſſed the Articles, and thereto added remarkable Circumſtances; among others John de Caſſanbus Maſter to the Houſe of Negaredo near Pavies, who declared, that when he was admitted into the Order, they ſent to him two Knights, who demanded of him, whether he would enter into it? who having anſwer'd, 'twas his intention; they told him, that it was a great Undertaking, and that their Rules were hard to be obſerved, and he ſaw nothing, but the outſide; that perſiſting in his Reſolution, they admitted him; that he fell on his Knees before the Maſter, aſſiſted with about ten Brethren of the Order, who held a Book in his Hand, and asked him what he Craved? and that having made Anſwer, he deſired to enter into the Order, he made him put his Hand upon the Book, which he held, and Swear that he had no Incumbrance of Debts, Marriage, or any other ſervile Obligation whatever; That next to this, he ſaid to him, You muſt Promiſe to God and us, that you will live without Property, keep Chaſtity, and obſerve the Uſages and Cuſtoms of the Order, and that you believe in God the Creator; that he is Dead, and ſhall not Die; the ſame, which he Swore. He after that cloathed himſelf with a Cloak, whilſt a Prieſt read the Pſalm, Ecce quam bonum, &c. That this being done, the Maſter kiſſed him on the Mouth, and next to that lay down on the Bench, whereon he ſat; that he kiſſed the Maſter above the Fundament, upon his Garments, and the ſame being ſet, the other Brethren kiſſed him on the Navel: That after this, the Maſter pluckt out of a Box a Copper Image of a Humane Shape, placed it on a Cheſt, and ſaid; Sirs, behold a Friend of God, who ſpeaks to him, when he will; give him Thanks for that he hath brought you unto the Dignity you have ſo much deſired, and hath accompliſhed all your Wiſhes; that forthwith they worſhipped this Image three times, falling on their Knees, and they produced a Crucifix, to ſhew, that they renounced it, and ſpat thereon; that the Maſter gave him a ſmall Girdle of Cord, and gave him leave, when he felt any Provocations of the Fleſh, to make Uſe of his Brethren; that this being finiſhed, he was conducted to another place inveſted with the habit of the Order, and brought back to the Maſter, who inſtructed him how he muſt behave himſelf at Church, in the War and at Table: Another of the Templars added to theſe Particulars, That the Maſter ſhewing the Image, kiſſed it, Saying, Talla, which is a Saracen word. It is related in the Hiſtory of Provence, That one of the Commiſſioners deputed by the King about Beaucaire, named Odoardus des Moulins, wrote to his Majeſty, how he had Arreſted Five and forty Templars, whereof there were five Knights, and one Prieſt; who being examined, they all Agreed as to the Denial of JESUS CHRIST, the Permiſſion of Sodomy, and the ſhameful Kiſſing: That as to the Image, they ſaid, that they never worſhipped it, but once at a Provincial Chapter held at Montpellier; That the Prieſt added, how he that did admit him, had enjoined him never to Pronounce the Words us'd at the Conſecration of the Hoſt; the which he had obſerved in his diſtribution of it to the Brothers of the Society, but not as to that, which he ſhewed to the People, though he had been commanded not to Conſecrate it. Some Authors accuſe them further of other Crimes; as of burning the Body of thoſe who died firm in their Idolatry, and of giving their Aſhes to be Swallowed down by Novice-Templars; of Roaſting the Children of the Women they had Abuſed, to rub their Image in the Greaſe, that dripped from them, and to cover it all over with the Skin of a Man; but theſe Accuſations were not Proved by their Interrogatories. The greateſt part of theſe Inquiſitions were taken at the end of the Year 1307. and the beginning of the Year 1308.

The Pope forbids the Ordinaries and the Inquiſitor to meddle with the Affair of the Templars.

The Pope, to put a ſtop to theſe Proceedings, which he thought intrenched upon his Authority; forbad the Archbiſhops, Biſhops and Inquiſitors of France to intermeddle herein, and ordered the Cauſe to be Heard before himſelf: The King hereupon ſignified to him his Reſentment, and repreſented to him, that he was amazed, that his Holineſs ſhew'd ſo great coldneſs in the Proſecution of this Affair; that 'twas, as if he conſented to the Crimes of the Impeached, and would ſhew them a way to defend themſelves; that he ought rather to ſtir up the Prelates, and Ordinaries of Places to do their Duty in the Extirpation of this Order; that they could better ſearch out this Matter in their Dioceſes, than Strangers; that 'tis a great Injuſtice to take from the Biſhops without reaſon, the Adminiſtration wherewith God hath entruſted them, and the Merit of Defending the Faith; that neither the King, nor they could endure it; that the Suſpenſion of the Inquiſitors Power gave hopes to the Templars to find Favour in the Pope's Court,

Court, and to ſpin out the time. The King, who deſired to diſpatch it out of hand, propoſed it to the Divinity-Faculty at Paris, to be ſatisfied, whether he could not order Proceſs againſt the Templars before Secular Judges. They anſwered him by their Reſolve of 25. March, in the Year 1308. Shewing, 1. That the Authority of a Secular Judge, cannot extend ſo far as to proceed againſt any one for the Crime of Hereſie, if it be not required by the Church, and ſhe hath not reſign'd up the Criminal to him; nevertheleſs, in caſe of Neceſſity, and where there is Danger, the Secular Judge may order Hereticks to be Arreſted; but with a Reſolution to reſign them into the Power of the Church. 2. That thoſe who are liſted for the Defence of the Faith, and have made Profeſſion of a Religion eſtabliſhed by the Church, ought to paſs among the Religious, and enjoy the benefit of Exemption. 3. That their Eſtates ought to be reſerv'd to be employed to the Ends for which they were conferred on them. This Reſolve diſcover'd the Wiſdom and Steadineſs of the Divinity-Faculty of Paris, which ſeeks not to pleaſe the King by agreeable Anſwers, and conform to his Deſigns, but explains to him the Truth ſincerely without any Evaſion or Diſguiſe.

The Anſwer of the Divinity-Faculty at Paris.

The King, that he might take juſt Meaſures, reſolv'd to go himſelf to Poictiers, and before he repair'd thither, he appointed at Tours a Meeting of the Deputies of the Cities of the Kingdom by Letters Patents ſent to the Bailiffs on the 25th. of March, in the Year 1308. But in Concluſion, having no way to do it otherwiſe, he reſigned into the hands of two Cardinals ſent to him by the Pope, ſome of the Principal Templars, and ordered them to be conveyed to Poictiers, where the Pope was, to the end he might know the Truth from their own Mouth. The Pope having examined them in preſence of the two Cardinals, who had been ſent to the King, and of three others; they confeſs'd the Crimes, whereof they were accuſed, and perſiſted in their Teſtimony. He underſtood likewiſe the ſame things from one of his Domeſticks, a Knight of this Order, who confeſſed ingenuouſly all the Evil which was committed among them. The Pope being by this convinced of the Neceſſity of proſecuting this Affair, by a Bull directed to the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and to the Inquiſitors of the Kingdom, dated the 5th. of July, in the Year 1308. he took off the Suſpenſion of their Power, and permitted them to proceed in their Dioceſſes againſt the Templars, even to the Sentence, which ſhould be pronounced in their Provincial Councils, reſerving nevertheleſs to himſelf, and the Holy See the Proceſs againſt the Great Maſter of the Temple, and againſt the Maſters and Heads of that Order in France, the Lands beyond the Seas, Normandy, Poictou, and Provence. He took Care of the keeping and preſervation of their Eſtates by four other Bulls of the ſame Month, willing, that they ſhould be reſerved to the ſame end for which they had been given; that is to ſay, for the Relief of the Holy Land, without prejudicing the Rights, which the King, and the other Lords might have to them; that to this Effect he would Name two Adminiſtrators-General to make up the Account with them, who ſhould be named on the King's behalf; and that the Money ſhould be imployed for the Relief of the Holy Land, according to the Appointment of the Pope. The King conſented to this Buſineſs, and named Adminiſtrators on his part: As to the Perſons of the Templars, the Pope Commiſſion'd Peter Capella Cardinal, Biſhop of Præneſte, that they ſhould be put into his Cuſtody, and joined to the Ordinaries, to prepare the Proceſs againſt the Templars, two Canons of each Church, and two Grey Fryers. The King repreſented to him, that he meant not that what he had done in this Affair ſhould be prejudicial to his Rights, and the Pope conſented thereto in one of his Letters.

The Pope himſelf examines the Templars.

The Pope permits the carrying on the Proceſs againſt the Templars.

The Pope whether it were, that he had no entire Confidence in the Inquiſitors of France, or rather, that he was willing to teſtifie, he had done nothing in this Affair, but with great Precaution, deputed three Cardinals, Berengarius, Stephen, and Landulphus, to underſtand from the Priſoners themſelves, whether the Examinations taken by the Inquiſitors were true. The King made the Principal Priſoners to be removed to Chinon, where they were again Examined by the Cardinals, and they perſiſted in the Confeſſion they made at Paris, among others the Great Maſter of the Order, Hugh Perraut and the Maſter of Cyprus; theſe three laſt and divers others prayed Abſolution, and received it. The Cardinals made Entries of all this, on the 15th. of Auguſt, in the Year 1308. and gave the King to underſtand, that they intreated him to ſhew the Templars ſome Favour, on conſideration they had Acknowledged, what they had done; but both the Pope and the King had a deſign wholly to break this Order. Whereupon the former, upon the Information of theſe Cardinals, in the cloſe of the Month of Auguſt, in the Year 1308. directed ſeveral Bulls to the Archbiſhops, and Biſhops of Chriſtendom, wherein after the Recital of what had been already diſcover'd of the Templars Exploits; he orders them to make ready their Proceſs, and ſends them likewiſe the very Articles, on which they were to be Examined. The King on his part held an Aſſembly at Tours, where were preſent the Deputies of the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Lords, and Commonalty of the Towns, furniſhed with Letters of Attorney, giving them Power to appear before the King and the Pope, there to intreat of this Affair. After the Meeting of this Aſſembly, the King accompanied with one part of the Deputies, went to meet the Pope at Poictiers, and having conferr'd with him, they Agreed upon the Articles following: That the Templars ſhould be kept in Cuſtody by the King's Authority, at the Requeſt of the Pope and the Prelates; That the Prelates might Judge the Templars in their reſpective Dioceſſes, except ſome few, whoſe Judgment was reſerved to the Pope. That in caſe of putting down the Order, their Wealth ſhould be imployed for the Relief of the Holy Land, and that no other uſe might be made thereof: That the Eſtates of the Inquiſitions taken by three Cardinals at Chinon.

Bulls againſt the Templars.

the Templars ſhould be put into the Hands of the Adminiſtrators nam'd by the Pope; in the mean while the Pope order'd, that all the Templars ſhould be Arreſted, and put into the Hands of the Inquiſitors, and named by his Bull dated the 11th. of Auguſt, of the Third Year of his Papacy (which muſt fall in the Year of our Lord 1307. if the Years of his Papacy be counted from the 5th. of June 1305. but according to the Authors of that Age, in the Year 1308.) the Archbiſhop of Narbonne, the Biſhops of Bayeux, Mande, and Limoges, with Four other Clergymen of the ſecond Order; to make Proceſs againſt the whole Order of the Templars in any of the Towns in the Province of Sens. Theſe Commiſſioners met at Paris, in the Month of November, of the Year 1309. to hear the Depoſitions of the Witneſſes, and the Anſwers of the Accuſed. James Molay, Great Maſter of the Order being Conven'd before them, they asked him, if he would defend his Order: He made Anſwer, That his Order having been approved of, and honour'd with divers Privileges by the Holy See, had no need of a Defender; that he was ſurprized, they would ſo ſuddenly aboliſh a conſiderable Order, ſince the Sentence of Depoſition againſt Frederick had been deferred for Two and thirty Years: that he was not wiſe enough to Undertake this Defence, but he would do what he could; That he had been a Captive, neither had he a Sous to defray the Charge; he demanded, that they would allow him Councel, and ſome Aſſiſtance; he deſired, that, to know the truth of what concern'd his Order, they would take not only his Depoſition, and thoſe of his Order; but likewiſe the Teſtimonies of all the Kings in the Earth, of the Princes, Barons, Earls, and alſo of the Prelates. The Commiſſioners adviſed him to have a care what he adventur'd on, after the Depoſition he himſelf had given againſt his Order; and told him, that in a Plea of Hereſie, and of what concern'd the Faith, they proceeded ſingly, and without aſſiſtance of Councel or Advocate. The Commiſſioners hereupon cauſed their Commiſſion to be read to him; and when they came to the Place, where mention was made of the Points, which, 'twas ſaid he had confeſt, he appear'd amazed, made the ſign of the Croſs, and ſaid, That if the Commiſſioners were of another quality, he knew what he would ſay to them; and as to their reply, that they were not in condition to accept a Challenge, he return'd, that that was not his meaning, but he prayed God to uſe his Slanderers in the ſame manner, as the Turks and Saracens uſed Impoſtors, whoſe Heads they cut off, or cleaved them aſunder. The Commiſſioners told him, That the Church Judged Hereticks, and deliver'd up the Obſtinate to the Secular Power. He withdrew, and having conferr'd with a certain Lord, he asked time till Friday, which was granted him; and appearing on that day, and being demanded, if he would defend his Order, he ſaid, he was Poor and wanted Skill, but had underſtood in one of the Bulls read to him, that the Pope had reſerved the Judgment of him, and ſome other Maſters of the Order to himſelf; ſo that he could do nothing at preſent but declare, he was ready to appear before the Pope; and entreated them to bring it about, that his Holineſs might admit him to his Preſence. The Commiſſioners ſhewed to him, that they were not entruſted with the Judgment of particular Perſons, but that of the Order, and that he had liberty to ſpeak, if he would offer any thing to hinder their inſiſting upon the making this Matter ready for a Hearing: He ſaid, No; but he demanded of them only to behave themſelves with Juſtice and Fidelity: as for the reſt he thought himſelf obliged to lay before them, for diſcharge of his Conſcience, three Things on the behalf of his Order. The Firſt, That he believed, there were no Churches, except Cathedrals, which had better Ornaments, more Reliques, or where they performed Divine Service better, than in thoſe of his Order. The Second, That no Religious Order was more Charitable, than theirs, in regard they had a general Rule in all their Houſes, of giving Alms three times a Week to all that preſented themſelves to receive it. The Third, That he knew no Order, nor Nation, which expoſed their Lives more freely for the Defence of the Faith againſt the Enemies of the Chriſtian Religion, and which was more fear'd by the Infidels. The Commiſſioners told him, that this was to no purpoſe without Faith: He replied, that was true; but that he believed in God, in a Trinity of Perſons, and all that which is of Faith; that he was perſwaded, there was but one God, one Faith, one Baptiſm, one Church; and that, when the Soul ſhall be ſeparated from the Body, we ſhall know the Good and the Bad, and that every one ſhall know the Truth of what paſſes at preſent. Nogaret affirmed to him, that their Order had obeyed Sultan Saladin, and that this Tyrant had upbraided them with the Vice of Sodomy: He excuſed the Agreement he made with Saladin, from the Neceſſity they were in, to preſerve the Towns and Caſtles, which they could not have Defended, if they had not Compounded with him.

Judges deputed to Proceed againſt the Order of the Templars.

An Inqueſt taken by the Commiſſioners of the Pope.

A great many other Templars of ſeveral Provinces in the Kingdom, being after this by the King's Order at Paris brought before the Commiſſioners, the Articles were read to them, upon which they were Impeached, and about which they were Examined. Threeſcore and Fourteen maintain'd the Innocence of their Order, and declared they were ready to defend it, and named Peter of Bononia for their Proctor, publickly averring, that all thoſe ſhameful, foul, unreaſonable, deteſtable and horrid Articles, upon which they were Impeach'd, were ſo many Falſities, Lyes, and Slanders, forged by their Enemies, and atteſted by falſe Witneſſes; that their Order was pure, without Stain, and free from all Crimes; they demanded their Liberty to be in a Condition to defend it, and leave to go in Perſon to a General Council; they anſwer'd to the Depoſitions of their Brethren, who had confeſſed theſe Crimes, That it was a Confeſſion, which fear of Death and Torments had extorted from them, or that they had had done it, to ſave themſelves, being corrupted by Intreaties, or Promiſes. In fine, they intreated, that Juſtice might be done them, and they deliver'd from the Oppreſſion they lay under. Bononia, by Virtue of this Power, with Nine other Templars preſented a Memorial, in which he declares as well for himſelf, and theſe Eight Knights, as for the reſt, they are ready as well in the general as in particular to defend themſelves in a General Council, or any where elſe, when they ſhall be ſet at Liberty; They proteſt, that whatever any of their Brethren have ſaid againſt their Order, ought not to hurt nor prejudice them; they deſired that the Brethren of their Order, who had quitted their Habit, ſhould be put into Priſon: That when any of their Brotherhood ſhall be Examined, no Lay Man be preſent; they ſay, it is ſtrange more credit ſhould be given to the falſe Depoſitions of ſome few, extorted by Fear, or ſurprized by Promiſes, than to thoſe of ſo many Martyrs, who ſuffer with Conſtancy, Torments and Impriſonment; They add, that out of the Kingdom of France, none of the Templars had ſaid any ſuch thing of their Order; which makes it plain, that thoſe who have depoſed theſe things in France, have been conſtrain'd by force, or wrought upon by Money; That in defence of their Order they ſay plainly, it is founded on Charity and Brotherly Love, in honour of the Virgin Mary, and to defend the Holy Church, and the Chriſtian Faith, and to deſtroy the Enemies of the Croſs principally in the Holy Land; that their Religion is pure, and without ſpot, before God; that the Rules and the Diſcipline of it are, and ever have been moſt exactly obſerved; that it hath been approved, and honour'd with many Privileges by the Holy See; that thoſe, who enter into it, make Four principal Vows, of Poverty, of Obedience, of Chaſtity and of Warfare, to Conquer, or to Preſerve the Holy Land; that they are admitted with a Kiſs of Peace; that the Habit is deliver'd to them together with a Croſs, which they always carry in honour of JESUS CHRIST crucified; that they are inſtructed in their Rule, and the Cuſtoms, which they obſerve by the Church of Rome, and the Holy Fathers; that ſuch is the Ceremony of the Profeſſion, which is obſerved, and hath always been generally obſerv'd through their whole Order; that the heinous and abominable things charged on them are Lyes invented by Apoſtates from their Order, expell'd for their Crimes, who have been ſuborned by others, and have deceived the King and the Pope: that many of thoſe who have Confeſſed through fear of Torments, are ready to retract, if they had freedom to ſpeak the Truth, and did not fear being burnt for contradicting their Oaths. One of theſe Eight Templars added, That all the Depoſitions made uſe of againſt them are void, becauſe that by a ſpecial Privilege none of their Number ought to Anſwer, unleſs before the Pope, and that no one can renounce that Privilege: That particular Perſons ought not to be admitted to give Teſtimony againſt their Order; and that thoſe who had been Sworn, were forc'd to ſpeak what they knew not. The Commiſſioners replied, That it was not in their Power to ſet them at Liberty, becauſe it was not they, who had put them in Priſon; but they were the Pope's Priſoners, in whoſe Hands were the Revenues of their Order; that they had been very much traduced; that in reſpect to the Privileges, which they alledged, they took not place in Point of Hereſie; that for themſelves they had no other Charge, but to inquire into Matters of Fact, comprehended in the Memorial ſent them by the Pope. So the Commiſſioners began their Inquiſition, notwithſtanding the Declarations of theſe Templars, who moreover gave in another Memorial, in which they ſet forth, that they had obſerved no judicial Form in making ready their Proceſs, that ſeveral Violences had been exerciſed upon them, they had been Arreſted, put in Priſon, their Eſtates had been ſeized without any reaſon, they had been compelled by force of Torture, or by Promiſes, or by Rewards to Swear falſe things againſt their Order; that all the reaſonable Preſumptions were on their Side. 1. Becauſe it was not to be believed, that any Body ſhould have been ſo much a Fool as to engage, or continue in an Order ſo abominable. And, 2. Becauſe their Order was made up of People of Quality, of good Morals, who would never have ſuffered theſe Diſorders: They demanded a Copy of their Commiſſion, the Articles of their Impeachment, and the Names of the Witneſſes which had Sworn, or of thoſe that deſigned to Swear hereafter; that they would diſtinguiſh them, that had already been Sworn, from thoſe that were yet to make Oath; that they ſhould be made to depoſe, they would ſpeak the Truth; and that they would Suborn no Perſon; that inquiry might be made into the manner, how ſome of their Brethren came to their end, and the reaſon, why ſome of them declined to appear; that among others, it may be known of Friar Adam of Valencour, who had deſerted their Order, to be enter'd in that of the Carthuſians, and after that came back to it again, whether what was reported of their Order, were true.

A Provincial Council held at Paris againſt the Templars, in the Year 1310.

While the Pope's Commiſſioners were informing themſelves againſt the whole Order, the Archbiſhop of Sens held a Provincial Council at Paris, in the Month of May, in the Year 1310. wherein he undertook to proceed againſt the particular Members. The Knights engaged in the defence of their Order in General, ſet forth that it was not juſt, while the Pope's Commiſſioners were taking their Inqueſt, the Archbiſhop of Sens ſhould attempt to make out their Proceſs: That they appealed from all this Archbiſhop could do; and that if in bar of this Appeal any Execution were brought againſt them, 'twere an Injuſtice: That they would put themſelves under the Protection of the Pope: That they prayed the Commiſſioners to forbid the Archbiſhop of Sens, and other Biſhops of the Realm, to proceed againſt any Templar, and that they would give them leave to ſignifie this Appeal to the Archbiſhop of Sens, and to make it Publick. The ſame Evening they preſented another Writing directed to the Archbiſhop of Sens, containing their Appeal. The Commiſſioners made Anſwer, That the Matter, which was handled by the Archbiſhop of Sens, and his Suffragans in their Council, was far different from that which they treated of: That they were likewiſe deputed by the Holy See, and that they had no Authority over them; and hereupon they did not believe, they could oblige them to delay the making out Proceſs againſt the particular Members of the Order; nevertheleſs they ſhould debate it more fully. The Commiſſioners went on with their Inqueſt, and heard Two hundred and one and thirty Witneſſes, who took their Oaths againſt the Order, from the cloſe of the Year 1309. to the Month of June, in the Year 1310. The greater part confeſs'd the Facts, whereof their Order ſtood accuſed; but ſome denied them, and others, after their Confeſſion, retracted, and ſaid they had not Sworn thoſe things, but for fear of Puniſhment, or becauſe they had perceived, they did deſign to Burn ſuch of their Fellows, as had aſſerted the Innocence of their Order. But before the Inquiſition of the Commiſſioners was finiſhed, the Provincial Council of Sens pronounced ſeveral Judgments upon particular Men of this Order: Some were Abſolved, others Condemned to certain Penances, and afterwards releaſed: ſome confined more cloſely, or condemn'd to perpetual Impriſonment, and Nine and fifty, who perſiſted in the diſowning of what they had confeſſed, were degraded as Relapſed, and deliver'd up to the Secular Power, and condemned to be Burnt; which was accordingly put in Execution without the Gate of St. Anthony, in the Month of May in the Year 1610. Theſe poor Wretches declar'd to the laſt moment, that they were Innocent. They dug up the ſame Year the Body of John de Turreio, who had been Treaſurer of the Temple, to burn his Bones.

The Execution of the Templars at Paris.

Proſecutions of the Templars in ſeveral Kingdoms.

They proceeded likewiſe in other Kingdoms againſt the Templars, in purſuance of the Pope's Bulls. In Italy the Archbiſhop of Ravenna cauſed thoſe of his Dioceſs to be Arreſted, and got Information againſt them. After that, he aſſembled a Council of his Province, wherein he made Report of the Charge he had againſt them, and asked, whether they ought to be put to the Rack: it was concluded in the Negative, though the Inquiſitors maintained, that Hereticks ought to be put to it; It was demanded, whether they ſhould be ſent back to the Pope; they ſaid, No; ſeeing a General Council was ſuddenly to be called; that they ought to be abſolved, or clear themſelves. On the next day, the Biſhops being met, declared, That the innocent ought to be diſmiſſed with Abſolution, and the guilty puniſhed according to the Law: that the Order ought to be kept up, if the greater part were ſound and innocent. The Examinations taken by the Archbiſhops of Piſa and Florence, and other Perſons Commiſſion'd by the Pope, to inquire in Lombardy and Tuſcany, were leſs favourable to the Templars; for the Witneſſes depos'd, that they had ſeen, heard, and had Knowledge of the horrid and deteſtable Crimes, of which they were accuſed. James II. King of Arragon, having received a Letter from the King of France againſt the Templars, charged the Biſhops of Valentia and Saragoſa, and the Inquiſitor General of his Kingdom, to get Information againſt them; and notice being given him that the Templars retreated to their ſtrong Forts, he caus'd all to be Arreſted, that he could light on, and prepared to force the others in their Caſtles, while the Inquiſitor General, who had cited them to Valentia, made ready their Proceſs. The Knights of this Kingdom writ to the Pope, that they were falſely accuſed; that their Innocence was known to all the World; that they were ſo far from denying JESUS CHRIST, that there were now a great Number of their Brethren in the hands of the Infidels; who choſe rather to continue in Captivity, and ſuffer divers Torments, than renounce the Faith: That if ſome had confeſs'd Abominable Crimes, they ought to be Puniſhed; but that it was not juſt, the whole Order, or the Innocent ſhould Suffer: they beſought the Pope to grant them his Protection, declaring, that they ſubmitted to his Judgment, and that waiting for his Anſwer, they were retired to their Fortreſſes. The King of Arragon took ſeveral of their Caſtles, and the Pope commiſſion'd the Biſhop of Valentia to proceed upon them, who were taken. In Caſtile King Ferdinand IV. cauſed all the Templars to be Arreſted, and took Informations againſt them, by the Archbiſhops of Compoſtella and Toledo, and by the Inquiſitor Aimerick. Their Eſtates were ſeized, and the Biſhops appointed Guardians. The Matter having been debated in the Provincial Councils, the Templars were declared Innocent, and nevertheleſs ſent back to the Pope. In England they were all Arreſted the ſame day, examined in an Aſſembly held at London, which laſted for two Months, and they there confeſſed the Crimes whereof they were accuſed. The Pope ſent a Commiſſioner into Germany to Examine thoſe of that Country, and Exhorted the Princes and Prelates of Germany to proſecute the Templars; but it appears not that they did any thing againſt them. He gave Order alſo to Arreſt them in the Iſle of Cyprus, but Almericus, Lord of Tyre and Governor of the Kingdom, ſent him word, that he could not put that Order in Execution, becauſe the Templars had taken Arms upon the Notice they had of it: that nevertheleſs Ten of the Chief came and reſigned themſelves into his Hands, and had promiſed to obey. In Provence Charles II. King of Sicily, and Earl of Provence Arreſted them all, the 24th. of January, in the Year 1308. and ſeized their Eſtates. They were condemned to Death and Executed, their Perſonal Eſtates divided betwixt the Pope and the Earl, and the Real kept for the Hoſpitallers.

The Pope's Judgment in the Council of Vienne, againſt the Templars.

The time of the General Council, which the Pope had appointed, drawing near, King Philip the Fair, wrote to the Pope in the beginning of the Year 1311. That ſince the Templars appear to be Charged ſo fully by the Informations, they ought to be rooted out by the Judgment of the future Council. He beſought his Holineſs to order it ſo, that their Goods might be employed in ſome new Expedition, or rather be transferred to ſome Military Order already eſtabliſhed bliſhed for the Relief of the Holy Land. The Pope agreed to this Propoſal, by his Bull of the Month of March, in the ſame Year.

In fine, the General Council of Vienna being Aſſembled, and the Firſt Seſſion held the 16th. of October in the Year 1311. the firſt thing, that the Pope propoſed, was the Affair of the Templars. There were divers Opinions about them. Some were of the Mind, that they ought to be heard before they aboliſhed the Order; others on the contrary were of Opinion, that it ought to be no longer deferred; and that if it were, 'twould be a great Scandal to the Church, after the enormous Crimes, of which they ſtood Convict. William Durantus, Biſhop of Menda, was of this Opinion, and deliver'd a Memorial to the Pope to prove it. On Wedneſday in the Holy Week, in the Year following, which was the 19th. of March, the Pope held a particular Aſſembly of Cardinals and Prelates, in which the Deſtruction of the Order of the Templars was reſolved on. The Bull of it was Publiſhed in the following Seſſion held the 22. of May 1312. at which the King was preſent. The Subſtance of it was this; That the Templars being convicted of a great Number of Crimes, he decreed the Aboliſhing of them, with the Approbation of the Council, not in form of a definitive Sentence, becauſe it could not in rigour of Juſtice be carried ſo far, according to the Informations and the Proceſs, which had been made, but in form of Proviſion, or an Apoſtolical Direction, and that he forbid any whomſoever to enter into that Order for the future, and to take, or wear their Habit, on Pain of Excommunication ipſo facto. That all their Eſtates ſhould remain in the diſpoſal of the Holy See; and that from this preſent time, after Mature Deliberation, and by the Advice of the Prelates of the Council, he did unite them for ever to the Order of St. John of Jeruſalem, as well Moveables, as Immoveables, together with all their Rights, and their Privileges, excepting nevertheleſs the Goods which they had in the Kingdoms of Caſtile, Arragon, Portugal and Majorca, which ſhall not be given to the Hoſpitallers, and yet reſerved to the diſpoſal of the Holy See. In fine, he enjoins, under Pain of Excommunication, all Perſons of what Degree ſoever, even Kings themſelves, who have any thing in Poſſeſſion belonging to the Templars, to return it into the hands of the Hoſpitallers, within one Month after the Publication of this Bull. And to that end, the Pope commiſſioned the Biſhop of Nevers, the Abbot of St. German des Prez, and the Dean of Chartres, to put the Knights of the Hoſpital into Poſſeſſion of the Goods, which the Templars had in France; and gave out ſeveral other Bulls, upon this Subject. The Judgment upon the Proceſſes of particular Members of the Order were ſent away to the Provincial Councils, and it was decreed, That thoſe who were found Guilty, ſhould be ſeverely Puniſh'd, and that Penſions ſhould be aſſign'd to the Innocent, out of the Goods of the Order. As to the Great Maſter, the Brother of the Dauphin, and ſome others, whom the Pope had reſerved to his own Judgment, he ſent Cardinals to Paris, to declare what he would have done on their ſcore. Theſe Cardinals order'd a Scaffold to be Erected before the great Gate of the Church of our Lady, in the Month of March, in the Year 1313. and having cauſed the Great Maſter, the Brother of the Dauphin, Hugh Perrauld, and another Knight to be fetched, they read to them the Sentence of the Pope, by which they were depos'd and condemned to perpetual Impriſonment. The Great Maſter, and the Dauphin's Brother upon hearing this Judgment, declared, That what they had Sworn againſt their Order, was falſe; that they had done it at the inſtance of the Pope and the King, and that they were ready to Die in defence of this Truth. The Cardinals delivered them up to the Provoſt of Paris; and the News thereof being carried to the King, he preſently called his Council together, in which it was reſolved, that in the Evening the Great Maſter, and the Brother of the Dauphin ſhould be Burnt at the Point of the Iſle of the Palace, between the King's Garden, and the Auguſtin Friars; which was performed accordingly. Theſe Wretches endur'd the Puniſhment with Reſolution, and perſiſted unto the laſt to aſſert their own Innocence and that of their Order: this made many believe that they died innocent. The two others, which ſaid nothing, had their Lives ſaved.

The Execution of the Great Maſter and another Templar at Paris.

This was the End of the Order of Templars, which was aboliſhed in all the Countries of Chriſtendom, except Germany; where they ſtopt the Publication of the Bull, and procured Abſolution in a Provincial Council. The Knights Hoſpitallers in France were put in Poſſeſſion of their Immoveables, but they were obliged to leave to the King two Thirds of their Moveable Goods, for the Expence he had been at in the Proſecution of the Templars, according to the Agreement made between King Lewis Hutin and the Great Maſter of the Hoſpital, on the 14th. of February, in the Year 1315. In Arragon the Pope, at the inſtance of King James, annex'd the Eſtates of the Templars to thoſe of that Order of Calatrava, which was made an Order ſeparate and independant from that of Caſtile of the ſame Name, having a Great Maſter reſident in Arragon, and depending on the Order of Ciſtercians. The King of Arragon detain'd nevertheleſs Seventeen ſtrong Forts, which had belonged to the Templars. Ferdinand IV. King of Caſtile, would not comply with the Sentence of the Pope, which join'd the Templars Eſtates to the Order of St. John of the Hoſpital, but laid to the ancient Inheritance of the Crown, the Towns, Lands, and other Goods, which they had in his Eſtate. Dionyſius King of Portugal, by advice of the Pope, inſtituted in his Kingdom, an Order of Knights of Chriſt, which was approved by Pope John XXII. and founded out of the Goods of the Templars, whoſe principal Imployment was to make War upon the Moors. In England, it was reſolved in a Parliament held in the Year 1324. that the Eſtates of the Templars ſhould be united to the Order of Hoſpitallers; which gave occaſion to ſome Engliſh of that Order, to think they were diſcharged from their Vows, and at liberty to Marry, which the Biſhops of England oppoſed.

Arguments which may be alledged for the juſtification of the Templars.

It is one of the famous Queſtions in Hiſtory, to wit, whether the Templars were Guilty of all the Crimes, whereof they were accuſed, and juſtly condemned; or whether they were imputed to them falſely, and whether they were not compelled by the violence of Torments and Fear, to confeſs things which they had not done, to grow rich by their Spoils, and ſeize on their Effects, as ſome Hiſtorians have aſſerted. It may be alledged in their Defence, 1. That the Informers were two Wretches condemned for their Crimes, no way worthy of Credit, who thought of this Project, to reſcue themſelves from the Puniſhment, to which they were condemned. 2. That the Crimes whereof they ſtand accuſed are ſo horrid and execrable, and at the ſame time ſo extraordinary, that they muſt, if Guilty, have loſt not only all ſenſe of Honour and Religion, but alſo Modeſty, Common Senſe, and Underſtanding. Now is it credible, that a vaſt Number of Men of all Nations and Degrees, ſpread throughout all Chriſtendom, ſhould all fall into ſo horrid an Exceſs of Wickedneſs and Extravagance; and that neither Religion, nor Shame, nor fear of Diſcovery, nor any diſtaſt, which any of the Order might have taken, ſhould induce none of them to reveal their Actions? This Silence is ſtrange, if the Thing be true: A Silence, which laſted for almoſt an Hundred Years, which was obſerved religiouſly by all thoſe of the Order. During this time many Malecontents left the Order; how could it poſſibly be, that not one of them, to juſtifie his Deſertion, ſhould offer for a Reaſon the Diſorders he had there met with? How could an infinite Number of People, who preſented themſelves to be admitted with a good intent, and not being yet corrupted, reſolve at their Admittance to make ſo damnable a Profeſſion, and therein perſevere? 3. That they confeſſed not theſe Crimes, but for fear of Torments, wherewith they were threatned, and in hopes, which were given them, of being well uſed, and likewiſe rewarded for their Confeſſion: that ſuch as refuſed to own them, were put to the Rack, that Torments might force from their Mouths the Confeſſion of what was Falſe: that notwithſtanding there were ſome, who would never Swear againſt their Order, and honourably aſſerted their Innocence: that the greater part of thoſe, who were Cowardly enough to yield to Fear, or be wrought on by Promiſes, had recanted, and perſiſted in that Recantation to their Death, ever proteſting, that they had been impoſed upon, or that they had ſpoken falſely, and that theſe Confeſſions were extorted from them by Threats or Promiſes, or by Violence: that they had ſhewn as much Conſtancy in this Retractation, as they had teſtified Weakneſs and Change from their former Depoſition: In fine, that they choſe rather to be Burnt alive, and going to Execution they declared aloud, that they died innocent; the time, in which the fear of Hell, and the Judgment of God before whom they muſt appear, forces the Truth from the Heart and Tongue of the moſt Wicked. 4. That there were found no other Witneſſes againſt them, than themſelves: that 'twas only in France, where they were conſtrained to confeſs theſe Crimes: that every where beſides, whatever Proſecution was made againſt them, they were not found Guilty of theſe Crimes, neither did they confeſs them. 5. That their Judges were Parties; That Philip the Fair, had a Mind to this for a long time, accuſing them of raiſing and fomenting Sedition againſt him: that he was the particular Enemy of the Great Maſter: that he owed them Money: that he deſired to enrich himſelf with their Spoils, as it came to paſs: that he engaged himſelf in the Proſecution of this Affair, with Zeal and Partiality: that he practiſed unheard of Cruelties on the accuſed: that the Pope was unwilling at the firſt to enter on this Buſineſs, as being acquainted with the Injuſtice of it; but that at the laſt he ſuffered himſelf to be prevailed with by the importunity of the King of France, and the offers he made him to leave the diſpoſal of the Templars Poſſeſſions to his Holineſs: that in fine, the Pope, the King of France, and other Princes found the Deſtruction of this Order would turn to Account, and made Advantage of their Eſtates in whole or in part. 6. That the Proceedings againſt them were Irregular, and againſt the Forms preſcribed by the Law: that at the firſt they were arreſted upon ſlight Suſpicions by the Authority of the King, and without having conſulted the Pope; unto whom alone it belonged to judge them, becauſe of their Privileges: that the firſt Examinations were taken either by the King's Officers or by the Inquiſitor: that their Proceedings were not againſt the whole Order: that they were not Summon'd, nor their Proceſs prepared according to Form: that the Pope acknowledged all theſe things, in declaring, that he could not of right give a definitive Sentence againſt this Order, according to the Inqueſt, and the Method wherein the Proceſs was prepared: Non per modum definitivæ Sententiæ, cum eam ſuper hoc ſecundum inquiſitiones & proceſſus ſuper his habitos non poſſumus ferre de jure. That he Condemn'd them nevertheleſs and Abrogated their Order, by way of Proviſion, as if the utter aboliſhing of an Order could be decreed by Proviſion, when 'twas acknowledged, it could not be decreed of right.

The Reaſons, which prove the Juſtice of aboliſhing the Order of Templars.

It may be anſwer'd to theſe Arguments, That in Matters of Fact, we are not to make uſe of Conjectures, and Reaſonings againſt the Depoſitions and Confeſſions themſelves of the Criminals, upon which they were legally Condemned: That we have the Interrogatories of a vaſt number of Templars, who have Acknowledged the Crimes whereof they were accuſed: That it matters not, who are the Informers, provided that in the Sequel the Fact be Evident: that the Crimes, whereof they are accuſed, are in good earneſt very heinous; but Men that give themſelves over to their Paſſions and Luſts, are capable of all of them, and there is no diſorder ſo ſtrange, into which they may not fall: That thoſe, whereof the Templars are accuſed, are of two Sorts, Impieties, pieties, and a kind of Idolatry, and the Vice of Sodomy; that the Commerce which they had with the Saracens, might engage them in the former, which is the more Extraordinary, and that Debauchery hurried them to the Second: that theſe Diſorders had been a long time kept ſecret, becauſe all the Members were concern'd to conceal them: that 'twas the Order gave them their Settlement and Fortune, and that they could not accuſe it without undoing themſelves, and accuſing themſelves of Shameful Crimes; beſides that it was dangerous to bring about their Ears an Order ſo powerful, on which they had their dependance: which was likewiſe the Reaſon, why thoſe, who had deſerted the Order, made no Diſcovery: that ſome had revealed theſe filthy acts to particular Perſons; who did not dare to mention them: that many of them, who had confeſſed theſe Crimes, had done it voluntarily, and without Conſtraint: that they all agreed in their Depoſitions; but that ſome had not Sworn to all the Articles, becauſe they had knowledge but of part, which proves their Sincerity: that they all ſpeak of Circumſtances ſo particular, that it is hard to imagine they ſhould be invented: that the greateſt part ſtuck to their Depoſitions: that ſuch as had retracted, did it not, till they ſaw they muſt undergo the Puniſhment their Fault deſerved, and to cover their Diſgrace: that ſince they kept theſe Diſorders very ſecret, and diſcover'd them not, but to thoſe of their Order, it is not to be wonder'd at, if the principal Witneſſes were ſuch as were accuſed: that tho' they prepared not their Proceſs in Form in other Kingdoms; yet for all that there was proof enough found againſt them to pull down their Order: that King Philip the Fair acted not in this Matter, but upon a Principle of Juſtice: that he had not ordered them to be Arreſted ſo ſuddenly, but becauſe it was to be fear'd, leſt, ſince they were Powerful, if they had had notice of the Deſign, they ſhould have made an Inſurrection in the Kingdom: that he had cauſed an Inquiſition upon them to be taken for his own Juſtification, and thereupon left the Judgment to the Pope, into whoſe hands he reſign'd them: that he enriched not himſelf with their Eſtates, but always offer'd they ſhould be employed for the good of the Holy Land: that he conſented to the Incorporation of them into the Order of the Hoſpitallers, and had reſtored them to it without any Deceit, retaining only what he was obliged to expend in Suing out the Proceſs: that the Proceedings, and Examinations taken againſt them, were ſufficient to prove the Irregularities of the Order in general: that it was Neceſſary to aboliſh it, and there was no Remedy to be applied otherwiſe, though poſſibly according to the Formalities of Law there muſt have been another manner of Proceeding, in order to the giving a Definitive Sentence: Yet this hinder'd not, but that by way of Proviſion, that is to ſay, of Diſcipline, Equity and Juſtice, the Order might be wholly aboliſhed, and their Eſtates given to an Order, which ought to put them to the uſe to which they were deſigned. Theſe Reaſons are ſufficient to maintain the Judgment given by the Pope in the Council of Vienna, againſt the Order of the Templars, and to juſtifie the Behaviour of Philip the Fair, in this matter.

CHAP. III.

An Hiſtory of the Popes, who had their Reſidence at Avignon from Clement V. to the Death of Gregory XI. and of what Remarkable Things happened in the Empire, Italy, and in the Church, under their Pontificates. And among other Things, what Quarrels Lewis of Bavaria had with thoſe Popes. The Conteſts between the Grey-Friars, and Pope John XXII. And about the Queſtion concerning the Happineſs of Souls, moved by that Pope.

The Election of Pope John XXII.

AFter the Death of Clement the Vth. Three and twenty Cardinals, which were at Carpentras, where that Pope held his Court, entred into the Conclave, and remained there from May to July 22. in the Year 1314. but could not fix upon the Election of a Pope. The Italian Cardinals were very deſirous to have a Pope of their Nation, who might have his Reſidence at Rome, and the Gaſcoignes were for a French-man, who might reſide on this ſide the Alps. The Italians propounded the Cardinal of Præneſte, who had been before a Biſhop of Aix, and wrote for him to the King; but he was not at all liked by the French. Theſe Conteſts laſted ſo long, that the People gathering together under the Conduct of Bertrandus, and Raimondus Gott, the Nephews of the deceaſed Pope, and coming Armed to the Conclave, demanded, that the Italian Cardinals ſhould be delivered to them, and crying out, That they would have a Pope, ſet Fire on the Conclave. The Cardinals hereupon made their Eſcape and were diſperſed, and it was a very hard thing to get them together again after this Accident; for the Cardinals of Gaſcoigne were eager that the Conclave ſhould be held at Carpentras, where Pope Clement V. died, or at leaſt at Avignon; but the Italian Cardinals thinking it not ſafe or conſiſtent with their Liberty to meet in thoſe Cities, were importunate it ſhould be at Rome. They had perhaps both proceeded to a ſeparate Election, which would have cauſed a Schiſm, if Philip the Fair had not written to them them to diſſwade them from it, by propoſing to them the City of Lyons, as a proper place for an Election, which could not be ſuſpected by either Party. The Cardinals nevertheleſs could not agree upon a Meeting, till after the Death of Philip the Fair, which happened Nov. 29. 1314. and in the Reign of Lewis Hutin, who Succeeded him, Philip that King's Brother, Earl of Poictiers, was ſent to procure the Cardinals to meet, and to proceed to an Election of a Pope. He cauſed them to meet at Lyons, and having had ſeveral Conferences with them, without bringing them to an Agreement, he ſent them on a certain Day to the Houſe of the Friars-Preachers at Lyons; and having exhorted them to come to an Agreement about the Election of the Pope, he withdrew, and left them ſhut up in the Houſe, having given order, that they ſhould not be let out, till they had choſen a Pope. In the mean time, he received the News of the Death of Lewis Hutin, which happen'd June 5. 1316. who having left his Wife Clemence great with Child, he was forced to return on a ſudden to the Court of France, without recalling the Orders which he had given. Laſtly, The Cardinals Forty days after they had been ſhut up, upon Aug. 17. choſe James d' Oſa, or Euſa, a Native of Cahors, who had been Biſhop of Frejus and after of Avignon, and was then Cardinal Biſhop of Porto. Some Authors write, that the Cardinals having put it in his Power to chooſe a Pope, he choſe himſelf; but this is not certain, and it was never objected to him by his Adverſaries, but on the other ſide the Hiſtorians of the time agree, that he was choſen by the Votes of the Cardinals. Some Authors report, That he had Sworn that he would not ride upon any Horſe or Mule, that did not carry him to Rome; but this alſo is a Story without Ground. This Pope after his Election took the Name of John XXII. was Crowned at Lyons, Sept. 25. and immediately went from thence to take up his Reſidence at Avignon, where he Arrived, Octob. 2. Queen Clemence was brought to Bed of a Son, Nov. 15. who dying Eight days after, Philip was Crowned Jan. 6. 1317. Some time after that Pope John XXII. was arrived at Avignon, he diſcovered that Hugh Giraldi, Biſhop of Cahors, had contrived to Poiſon him, and was Guilty of divers other Crimes. He thereupon had him Examined before the Cardinals, cauſed him to be formally Degraded, and Condemned to perpetual Impriſonment in April, the ſame Year, and having delivered him to the Secular Power, he was Condemn'd to be Flea'd, Drawn through the City, and Burned; which Sentence was Executed upon him in Auguſt, of the ſame Year.

Pope John Erects new Archbiſhoprieks and Biſhopricks.

At the ſame time John XXII. endeavoured to make a new Archbiſhoprick and ſeveral Biſhopricks in France. The Dioceſe of Tholouſe was of a great Extent, and very conſiderable for its Revenue. Clement V. had ſome Thoughts to make it a Province, and John XXII. being reſolved to put his Deſign in Execution, made Tholouſe a Metropolis, taking it from the Juriſdiction of the Archbiſhop of Narbonne, and preferr'd John de Cominges, who had been Biſhop of Magalona---to be Archbiſhop of it, having deprived Hugh de Preſſac, Pope Clement V's. Nephew of that Biſhoprick. He divided the Dioceſs of Tholouſe into Six Biſhopricks, and placed their Sees in Six ſmall Cities, viz. Montalbanum, which was before partly in the Dioceſs of Cahors, S. Papoul, Rieux, Lombez, Lavaur, and Maripoix, to which he added the Biſhoprick of Pamiez, then newly Erected. He alſo Created two new Biſhopricks in the Archbiſhoprick of Narbonne, viz. Alet and S. Pons. He took away Caſtres from the Dioceſs of Albi to make a Biſhoprick of it, Toul from that of Limoges, Surlac from that of Perigueux, S. Flour from that of Clermont, Vabres from that of Rhodes, and made two of that of Poictiers, Maillezais and Luçon. He alſo Erected ſeveral Colleges in the Province of Tholouſe, and in the Dioceſs of Albi. In the following Year he divided the Province of Tarragon into two Parts, made Saragoſa a Metropolis, and Subjected the five Suffragans of Tarragon to it. Some ſay he alſo made a Biſhoprick of the Abby of Mont Caſſin; but we find before his Pontificate Biſhops of that Title.

The State of the Empire, and Italy.

While John XXII. lived in Peace at Avignon, Italy was diſturbed with the Factions of the Guelphs, and Gibelines, who continually made War one againſt the other, and put the City of Rome into ſtrange Confuſion. The Emperors of Germany had no Authority almoſt in Italy. Apulia and all the Kingdom of Naples were under the Dominion of Robert the Son of Charles II. King of Sicily, who maintained the Party of the Guelphs againſt the Gibelines. The Empire was then under Conteſt between Lewis Duke of Bavaria, and Frederick Duke of Auſtria; for after the Death of Albert Duke of Auſtria, who was Slain in the Year 1308. by one of his Nephews, Henry Earl of Luxemburg was choſen Emperor, and his Election was Confirmed by Clement V. who had favoured him privately, by breaking his word with Philip the Fair, who would have had his Brother Charles de Valois choſen Emperour. Henry, who was the Seventh Emperor of that Name, ſpent the Year 1311. in Italy, to appeaſe the Troubles of that Country, and to cauſe himſelf to be Crowned Emperor, as he had promiſed the Pope; he required the People of Florence and Aretium,---that they would entertain him and his Army, but they refuſed; yet he kept on his March, ſeized on Milan, where he was Crowned, brought the greateſt part of the Cities of Italy into Subjection to him, marched directly to Rome, where he was received in ſpite of the Contrary Faction, and was Crowned there by the Cardinals. Notwithſtanding the Oppoſition of Clement V. and took an Oath of the People of Rome; but preſuming to impoſe a Tribute upon them they revolted, and by the Aſſiſtance of Robert King of Apulia, conſtrained Henry to retire to Tivoli; from whence he went to Piſa, where he began the Quarrel with King Robert, againſt whom he declared War, and departing from thence to go into Apulia with his Troops to invade that Kingdom, he fell Sick by the way, Aug. 15. at the Caſtle of Benevent, where he died the 24th. of the ſame Month, being Poiſoned, as our Hiſtorians relate, by a Dominican minican Friar called Peter de Chaſteau-Renaud, who gave him a Poiſoned Hoſt. Nevertheleſs, the Dominicans obtained a Letter ſeveral Years after, dated May 17. 1346. from John King of Bohemia; in which that Prince declares, That the Reports, which have been ſpread abroad againſt theſe Monks, were Falſe and Groundleſs.

Two Emperors Elected in Germany.

The Electors of Germany being Aſſembled at Franckfort in the Year 1314. were divided in their Choice of an Emperor to Succeed him: The Archbiſhop of Mentz, and Treves, John King of Bohemia, and Wolemarus Marqueſs of Brandenburg, gave their Votes for Lewis Duke of Bavaria; but the Biſhop of Colen, and Rodolphus of Bavaria Count Palatine, gave their Votes for Frederick Duke of Auſtria. Lewis was Crown'd at Aix la Chapelle, by the Archbiſhop of Mentz; and Frederick at Bonne, by the Archbiſhop of Colen. The Cities of Germany took part, ſome with Lewis, and others with Frederick. The firſt was Acknowledged by the Cities of the Lower Rhine, as far as Strasburg, and by the Cities of Suabia; and the other by the Cities of the Higher Rhine, and Suitzers. Lewis of Bavaria apply'd himſelf to Pope John XXII. to have his Election confirmed as the only Lawful One, ſince he had the greateſt Number of Votes; but the Pope refuſed to do it, not only becauſe 'twas conteſted, but becauſe he had attempted to do ſome Things, which he affirmed to be above his Power; whereupon he declared the Empire vacant, and that the Adminiſtration of Affairs belonged to the Holy See; and upon that account Depoſed the Governors and Deputies, which the Emperor had ſet up in Italy: This was the beginning of the Quarrel between John XXII. and Lewis of Bavaria: Theſe two Competitors for the Empire, made War againſt each other, while Italy was troubled with the Factions of the Guelphs and Gibelines. Matthew Viſcount of Milan being in League with the Gibelines, Beſieged Genoa. The Genoeſes having put themſelves under the Protection of Pope John XXII. and Robert King of Apulia; this laſt came to relieve them, and the Pope thundered out Excommunications againſt Matthew, and invited Philip of Valois to Succour Genoa; but that Prince being retired without doing any thing, the Pope publiſhed a Cruſado againſt Matthew, and begged of Frederick Duke of Auſtria to furniſh him with ſome Troops, promiſing him to confirm his Election to the Empire, and make his Brother Archbiſhop of Mentz. Frederick allured by theſe Promiſes ſent his Brother Henry with 300 Men into Lombardy, who ſhould joyn themſelves with the Soldiers of the Croſs; but Matthew having humbly ſhewed him, that he acted contrary to the Intereſts of the Empire, becauſe if King Robert and the Church got the Poſſeſſion of the City of Milan, they would make themſelves Maſters of all Tuſcany, he recalled his Brother. The Pope thereupon clapped up a League between Robert King of Apulia, and Frederick King of Sicily, upon condition, that the City Rhegio, and whatever Frederick had Conquered in Calabria, ſhould be put into the hands of his Holineſs; which he had no ſooner gotten, but he delivered them to Robert. This provoked Frederick ſo much, that he broke the League, which brought on him the Pope's diſpleaſure; but he eſcaped the dint of it, by giving his Kingdom to his Son Peter.

The Wars in Germany, between the two Emperors.

While theſe things paſſed in Italy, Germany was involved in Wars, but at length Lewis of Bavaria, in September 1323. defeated the Army of Frederick Duke of Auſtria, and took him Priſoner, with his Brother Henry. Their third Brother Leopold appealed to the Pope, who pronounced the Sentence of Excommunication againſt Lewis of Bavaria; by which he Commands him to renounce his Election within three Months, and to appear before him in Perſon to juſtifie himſelf againſt an Accuſation brought againſt him, that he was a favourer of Hereticks, Schiſmaticks, and other Rebels againſt the Church; forbids all Chriſtians to own him, as Emperor, and declares all ſuch as favoured him, if they were of the Clergy, ſuſpended from their Offices and Benefices, and if Lay-men Excommunicate. Lewis of Bavaria appealed from this Judgment to a General Council, which he reſolved to Call, or to the next Pope lawfully Choſen, and accuſes John XXII. to be the Cauſe of the Troubles of Germany and Italy, to overturn the Church and Empire, to Invade the Rights of Princes, to Rob the Church, and laſtly, to Teach an Heretical Doctrine concerning the Poverty of JESUS CHRIST, and his Apoſtles. A Copy of this Appeal dated in the Year 1324. is publiſhed by Mr. Baluſius, among the ancient Acts, which he joined to the Lives of the Popes of Avignon. Lewis of Bavaria at the ſame time ſent Ambaſſadors to Rome to juſtifie himſelf, promiſing, that he would be kind to the Church; but the Pope would not give over the Proſecution, but excommunicated Lewis of Bavaria, and condemned him as an Heretick. Lewis appealed again from all theſe Proceedings. Italy ſuffered much by this Diviſion between the Empire and the Church. The Pope invites into Tuſcany Charles the Son of Robert King of Apulia, who made himſelf Maſter of Florence, and publiſhing Plenary Indulgences, raiſed Soldiers, which he ſent into Italy againſt the Gibelines, and particularly againſt Galeaſius and his Brethren, Viſcounts of Milan, who Succeeded to their Father, who died excommunicated. Theſe Troops were defeated, and the Pope obliged to fly to the King of France, to raiſe a Tax upon the Clergy of that Realm to keep the War ſtill on foot; which the King granted him, upon condition, that he might receive the Tenths for himſelf the two next Years. The Tax, which the Pope impoſed, was unreaſonable, being almoſt the Value of the whole Revenue of all their Benefices. Galeaſius and the Gibelines on their part, prayed Lewis of Bavaria to come into Italy. The Senators and the People of the City of Rome, ſent Ambaſſadors to the Pope to beg of him to come, and reſide at Rome, and threatned him, if he did not, that they would in due time and place provide another Pope for the Holy See, and Church. The Pope having excuſed himſelf, they ſent to Lewis of Bavaria, to pray him to come come to Rome. This Prince promiſed them, and ſent away their Ambaſſadors very well ſatisfied, and called the Princes of the Empire together at Spire, to conſult about that Voyage. Here it was reſolved on, and in the Year 1327. Lewis of Bavaria paſſed the Alps with a Body of Horſe, and arrived at Trent, where he held a Meeting of the Deputies of the Cities of Lombardy, and then he went to Milan, where he was Crowned. The Pope renewed his Excommunication, againſt Lewis of Bavaria, and condemned him as an Heretick and an Excommunicate Perſon; and after he had Summoned him once more, he declared, That he had forfeited all his Goods, Moveable and Immoveable, his Rights, Eſtates, and Juriſdictions, which he poſſeſſed. Lewis of Bavaria did not yet deſiſt from advancing his Intereſts in Italy, and having gotten a conſiderable Summ of Galeaſius and the Viſcounts, whom he deprived of the Government of Milan, he made himſelf Maſter of the greateſt part of the Cities of Italy, went to Rome, was received by the Clergy and Senators, who came to meet him, and was Crovvned Emperor there Jan. 17. 1328. by the Order of the Clergy and the People of Rome, and by the hands of Cardinal Steven Colonni.

Nicholas V. Anti-Pope.

Sometime after the Coronation of Lewis of Bavaria, the Romans conſulted to chooſe a Pope who ſhould make his Reſidence at Rome; grounding their Fact upon this Pretence, That when a Pope being required by the People of Rome would not, or did delay to come to the Holy See, the Power and Right of chooſing another Pope was devolved upon the Canon of St. Peter and St. John of the Lateran. Lewis of Bavaria conſented freely to this Election, and to effect it, depoſed John XXII. by a ſolemn Edict, dated Apr. 28. and made a Law, that the Pope, which ſhall be choſen by the conſent of the Emperor and People of Rome, ſhall reſide at Rome only, ſhall not go above Three days Journey from it, nor ſtay above Three Months in the Year from it, and if he be longer abſent, and being required Three times, does not return, he ſhall be deprived of his Papal Dignity. In purſuance of the People's Requeſt, and with the Emperor's Conſent, they proceeded to the Election of another Pope, and choſe Peter Rainalluci of Corbario, a City of the Dioceſs of Riatino, a Monk of the Order of the Friars Preachers, Apoſtolick Penitentiary in Rome, who was reputed of for his great Sanctity. He was Crowned May 12. 1328. placed according to the Cuſtom upon the Chair of St. Peter, and named Nicholas V. He immediately created ſeveral Cardinals, but all of them almoſt Friars Mendicants, and of the Gibeline Faction; he Crowned the Emperor a Second time, and Confirmed the Judgment, which he had given againſt John XXII. who on his part proceeded againſt this Anti-Pope and his Adherents. Peter de Corbario tarried at Rome as long as Lewis of Bavaria continued there, but went from thence with him, and came to Piſa, where he kept his Court, till he became odious to the Inhabitants there, which obliged him to conceal himſelf, and at length to withdraw himſelf to the Caſtle of Count Boniface, who delivered him in Aug. 1330. into the hands of the Archbiſhop of Piſa, and William Biſhop of Lucca, who cauſed him to be carried to Avignon; where he humbly confeſſed his Fault before the Pope and Conſiſtory, on the 25th. of the ſame Month, and acknowledged, that Lewis of Bavaria was an Heretick, and that it went againſt him to Acknowledge him for Emperor; That he had ſuffered himſelf to be choſen and conſecrated Anti-Pope; That he had created Cardinals and made Bulls; That he had approved of the Doctrine of Michael de Ceſenna, General of the Order of Grey-Friars, conſented to the Depoſition of John XXII. Perſecuted, Depoſed, Interdicted and Excommunicated thoſe who were of his Party, diſpoſed of the Goods of the Church of Rome, &c. Promiſed and Swore to obey the Pope, and deſired Abſolution. The Pope granted his Deſire, with reſervation of impoſing Penance on him, and cauſed him to be ſtrictly Guarded in a Chamber of his Palace; where he died three Years after, in his Pious and Penitential Sentiments.

The Death of John XXII.

The Departure of Lewis of Bavaria, was followed with new Troubles in Italy; John King of Bohemia, being invited thither, ſeized upon ſeveral Cities, which held Intelligence with the Pope. The Romans ſent to Lewis of Bavaria to pray him to return, but his Affairs kept him in Germany; and in the midſt of theſe Matters Pope John XXII. died at Avignon, Dec. 24. 1334. in the 19th. Year of his Papacy.

The Conteſt of the Grey Friars about their Habit.

But now to return to the Affairs of the Church, which happened under this Pope; the Courſe of which we have interrupted to relate the Tranſaction of the Empire: we will begin with the Hiſtory of the Conteſt, which he had with the Grey-Friars all his Papacy. Some Perſons of that Order had for a long time differed about the Senſe, and Practice of ſome Things, or Points belonging to their Rule, and particularly about the form of their Habits. Some would wear an Hood and ſhort Gown, ſtrait, and of very courſe Stuff; and called themſelves, Spiritual Brethren. Others, who called themſelves, The Brethren of the Community; wore a looſe Garb, long, and of finer Stuff. The Popes uſed their Endeavour to regulate and decide theſe Differences among theſe Monks, and to that end ordered them to referr the Controverſie of their Habits to their Superiors, and to ſubmit to the form and manner that they preſcribe. Nicholas IV. and Clement V. put out ſome Bulls upon this Subject; but the Spiritual Brethren being intent upon the Practice, would not deſiſt from it, ſeparated themſelves from the Community, made a Body by themſelves, and betook themſelves into Languedoc, where the Convents of Beziers, Narbonne, and ſome other Cities, were made up of theſe Spiritual Brethren. Pope John XXII. to extinguiſh this Schiſm in the Firſt Year of his Pontificate, Summoned the Brethren of this Faction, who ſent their Deputies to Avignon, of whom the Chief was Bernard Delitioſi de Montpelier. The Conteſt was debated before the Pope, who gave Judgment in favour of the Brethren of the Community by his Bull, Quorundam, in which he leaves it in the Power of the Superiors to determine of what length and largeneſs, courſeneſs or fineneſs, form or figure the Habits of the Grey-Friars ſhould be, as well as to their Hood, as Gown; and thereupon orders them to follow the Will of their General, their Provincials, and Guardians; as alſo declares, That they may have Granaries and Cellars, and keep their Corn and Wine, if their Superiors judge it convenient, leaving the Ordering of them to the Guardian, and grave Perſons of every Convent, and enjoyning all the Grey-Friars to leave their ſhort and ill-ſhapen Habit, and conform themſelves to the Uſage of the Brethren of the Community. This Sentence did but enrage the Spirituals, and confirm them in their Obſtinacy. They ſet themſelves to Preach arrogantly, that they ought not to obey any Superior, who ſhould order them, who profeſſed the Rule of St. Francis, to leave their ſhort and ſtrait Habit to aſſume the Habit of the Community contrary to their Rule, and conſequently to the Goſpel and to the Faith, becauſe their Rule made uſe of the Goſpel; That to oppoſe this Practice, and to oblige thoſe who wore the ſhort Habit to leave it, and to perſecute them, was contrary to the Truth of the Goſpel and the Faith; That the Pope had no Power to make ſuch a Conſtitution, as that called Quorundam; That they ought neither to obey him, nor their Superiors, as to the Contents of that Conſtitution; becauſe it was contrary to the Counſel of JESUS CHRIST, and their Rule, which the Pope could not deſtroy. The Pope gave a Commiſſion to Friar Michael, Inquiſitor in Provence and Languedoc, to proceed againſt theſe Stubborn Friars. This Commiſſion is dated Nov. 1317. This Inquiſitor, according to his Commiſſion, Proſecuted Four Grey-Friars, named John Barani of Tholouſe, Deodate de S. Michael, and William Sauton Prieſts, and Poncius Roche a Deacon, and ſome others, who being Arreſted, maintained, That Pope John XXII. had no Power to make theſe Declarations, which he had publiſhed in his Decretal, called Quorundam, concerning the Habit and manner of Living of the Grey-Friars; becauſe ſuch Declarations were contrary to the Rule of St. Francis, and derogated from the perfect Poverty, that JESUS CHRIST and his Apoſtles had practiſed. Theſe Four Grey-Friars being queſtion'd, obſtinately perſiſted in that Opinion. Notwithſtanding the Requeſts of the Inquiſitor, and Biſhop of Marſeilles; inſomuch, that the Inquiſitor having taken Advice of ſeveral Divines, who declared the Doctrine of theſe Grey-Friars to be Heretical, being aſſiſted by the Biſhop of Marſeilles, and ſeveral other Perſons of Eccleſiaſtical Dignity, condemned them as Hereticks, degraded them from their Orders, and delivered them to the Secular Power, which Condemned them to be Burnt, and the Sentence was executed upon them at Marſeilles. A Fifth, who had aſſerted the ſame Doctrine as the others, but declared his Repentance for it, was Degraded, and Condemned to be kept immured the reſt of his Life, and to wear two yellow Croſſes; the one on his Breaſt, and the other on his Back. Theſe Puniſhments were not ſufficient to repreſs the Boldneſs of theſe Monks, ſo obſtinate were they: They gave themſelves greater Liberty to declaim with more violence againſt the Pope, and publickly Preached, That he was the Myſtical Antichriſt, or the fore-runner of Antichriſt; That the Church of Rome was the Synagogue of Satan; That they ought not to obey John XXII. nor look upon him as Pope; That the Grey-Friars who were Burnt were true Martyrs, and that they were ready to ſuffer the ſame Puniſhment; and ſome of them were ſuch Fools, as to go and offer themſelves to the Stake. Bernard Delitioſi, who was, as is aboveſaid, the Chief of the Deputies ſent by the Grey-Friars of Languedoc to Pope John XXII. was Apprehended a little after his Arrival at Avignon, upon the Information of the Inquiſitors of his Country, who accuſed him for a Deſign to procure the Death of Pope Benedict XI. Clement's Predeceſſor, for ſolliciting the Towns of Carcaſſone and Alby to Revolt, for encouraging the People of the latter of theſe Cities againſt the Inquiſitors, and for forcing open the Priſons of the Inquiſition. The King's Guards demanded him of the Pope, and prayed him to appoint him Judges in partibus. His Holineſs committed him to the Archbiſhop of Narbonne, and the Biſhops of Pamiez, and S. Papoul, the laſt of whom, having been informed againſt the accuſed Perſon, and finding him Guilty of the Crimes laid to his Charge, except the firſt, they degraded him and condemned him to end his Days in Priſon loaded with Irons, and to eat nothing but Bread and Water. This Sentence was paſſed on him by theſe two Biſhops, and three others, which they had called to their Aſſiſtance, Dec. 8. 1319. It was Executed, and the Pope allowed the Commiſſioners to mitigate the Puniſhment, as to the Eating, and Chains, if they ſaw convenient, and that Friar Bernard were not able to bear them: But the King's Proctor appealed, à minimâ, from the Judgment of the Commiſſioners, and the Pope by a Brief dated at Avignon, Febr. 1320. ordered that it ſhould be executed in its full Rigour, and condemned him to die in Priſon, loaden with Chains. We are indebted to Mr. Baluzius for theſe Monuments of Antiquity, of which we have ſpoken, and which he hath publiſhed in the Firſt Tome of his Miſcellanies.

The Diſpute of the Grey Friars about the Property of the things they ſpent.

In 1322. there roſe another Diſpute among the Grey-Friars, in which almoſt all the Order engaged themſelves againſt the deciſion of John XXII. The Grey-Friars affirm, That according to their Rule, they make a Vow, not to have any thing either in Property or in Common, and conſequently, that they have no Dominion or Property in any thing, but only a right to uſe thoſe things that are Neceſſary, by a ſimple Uſage de facto, and that the Property and Dominion of all they have belongs to the Church of Rome; That it was in this abſolute Abjuration of all Property, that the Perfection of the Evangelical Life conſiſted, which JESUS CHRIST and his Apoſtles lived, who had nothing either in Property, or in Common; and that they ought to practiſe this depth of Poverty, to follow the Counſel of the Goſpel, and obſerve the Rule of St. Francis. Gregory IX. had declared in the Year 1230. that according to the Rule of St. Francis, the Grey-Friars ought not to have any Property, either in Common, or by themſelves; but only the Uſe of their Goods, Books, and other Moveables. That they could not ſell them or alienate them any manner of way, unleſs the Cardinal-Protector of the Order gave a Power to the General or Provincials. Innocent IV. declared in 1245. That the Propriety of thoſe things, of which the Grey-Friars had the uſe allowed them, belonged to the Holy See. Nicholas III. in his Decretal, Exiit, qui ſeminat, determines, That to renounce a Property in all things, as well in particular as in common, is Meritorious and Holy; and that JESUS CHRIST, who hath ſhewed us the Way of Perfection, hath taught it by his Words, and confirmed it by his Example, That the firſt Founders of the Church Militant practiſed it, and declared thoſe Excommunicated, who were of a contrary Opinion. Martin IV. who Succeeded him, declared alſo, That the Grey-Friars had no right of Property, nor Dominion over the things, as well moveable as immoveable, which they uſed. This Judgment was confirmed by Nicholas IV. in the Year 1298. and by the Decretal of Clement V. which begins with Exivi, in which having compared the Order of Grey-Friars to a Paradiſe upon Earth, and recommended the Life, which their Rule preſcribes them, as conformable to that of JESUS CHRIST, He explains ſeveral Articles of their Rule, which were ſomething ambiguous; and among other things he declares concerning their Poverty, That the Vow which they take to renounce all Property, ought to be underſtood as well in particular, as in common. That the Property of all things given to them belongs to the Holy See, and that they have nothing, but a mere uſe de facto, which extends alſo to every thing, that is neceſſary for Life.

In this State and Condition were things, when John XXII. was raiſed to the Papacy, and the Grey-Friars were perſwaded, that they had no Property, or Dominion in the things they had the uſe of; no, not in thoſe things, which periſh in the uſe, as Meat and Drink; They alſo proteſted in a General Chapter held at Peruſia; That they would practice this Poverty in the literal ſenſe, and conform to the Determination of Nicholas IV. upon that Subject. John XXII. who was a ſubtil Pope, could not endure that that Order, which he did not love, ſhould have the Honour of renouncing all Propriety; which neither rendred them poorer, nor gave the Holy See any Property, which could be of Profit to it. He conſidered, that the Property of things which periſhed in the uſe, was not diſtinguiſhed from the uſe it ſelf. As for Example: It is undeniable, that he that Eats and Drinks, muſt have a Property in thoſe things he Eats and Drinks actually, and in that caſe the Property can't be ſeparated from the uſe; and conſequently, that if the Vow of the Rule of St. Francis were to have no Dominion, the Grey-Friars are obliged not to Eat, but to die with Hunger, to uphold their practice, or break it, that they might Live; That the Poverty, of which the Grey-Friars bragged, was a mere Cheat, ſince that their Renunciation of Property, was ſuch a Chimæra as made them no whit the poorer, that their Intention was no other, than theirs, who have the Advantage of thoſe things they uſe; That the Property and Dominion which they attributed to the Church of Rome, was more Charge than Profit, ſince nothing was got by it; That JESUS CHRIST, and his Apoſtles, never dreamed of this Poverty; and that it was an Errour and Hereſie to maintain, that JESUS CHRIST had no right nor property in the things which he uſed. On theſe Grounds he publiſhed two Decrees: In the Firſt, which is the Extravagant, Ad Conditorem, dated at Avignon, Dec. 7. having obſerved that it belongs to thoſe who have a right to make Canons, to Revoke, or Change them, which they have made, either themſelves, or their Predeceſſors, when it happens that they do more hurt than good; and that the abſolute Renunciation of Property in common, or particular by the Grey-Friars, built upon the Conſtitutions of his Predeceſſors, who grant them only the mere uſe de facto of the things, which they uſe, reſerving the Property to the Church of Rome, is neither profitable to themſelves, nor the Church; and beſides, in things which periſh in the uſe, the Property or Dominion can't be ſeparated from the uſe, ſince they are deſtroy'd by the very uſe. He declaees, That the Church of Rome hath no property by virtue of the Conſtitutions of his Predeceſſors in any thing given the Grey-Friars for their uſe, and conſumed by them, but yet retains a Spiritual Dominion of Direction over their Order, beſides the Common Dominion which it hath over all the Goods of the Church, and over the Houſes, Churches, Chapels, Books, Ornaments, and other Goods, which belong to the Grey-Friars, which do not periſh in the uſe. In his Second Decretal, Cum inter nonnullos, which is dated the 12th. of the ſame Month, he declares, 1. That it is an Erroneous and Heretical Propoſition, to aſſert, That it is Hereſie to deny that JESUS CHRIST and his Apoſtles, had nothing in Common, or in Proper. 2. That for the future it ſhall be an Error and an Hereſie to maintain poſitively, that JESUS CHRIST and his Apoſtles had no right to enjoy the things they uſed, to ſell, or give them, or to make uſe of them to obtain another thing. The Pope did well to publiſh theſe Conſtitutions, but yet they did not convince the Grey-Friars of their Error; yea, ſeveral of them obſtinately maintained, that they had no Property in thoſe things, which they conſumed, and accuſed the Pope of Error and Hereſie. Lewis of Bavaria was not backward to take upon him their Defence, and to make uſe of this Pretence to accuſe the Pope of Hereſie in his Act of Appeal, which he publiſhed in 1324. wherein he confuted the Decretals, Ad Conditorem, and cum inter nonnullos, accuſing them of Blaſphemy, Error, and Hereſie, and proves the contrary Doctrine by the Rule of St. Francis, the Authority of the Popes; John's Predeceſſors holding, That that Practice is conformable to the Life that JESUS CHRIST and his Apostles lived; and that the Wound, and Scars of St. Francis were as a Seal, which no Leaden Bull of a Mortal Man can deface. The Pope for the defence of this Article publish'd, Nov. 10. of the same Year the Decretal, Quia quorundam mentes, against those, who had opposed his two former; in which, after he has explained the Constitutions of his Predecessors, and stated the Question clearly, he declares them Hereticks and Rebels to the Church, who shall maintain Positions contrary to those, which he hath laid down in his two former Constitutions.

The Condemnation of the Errors of Petrus Olivi.

In the Year 1325. he condemned the Postills of Petrus John Oliva, a Grey-Friar of great repute, of Serignan in the Diocess of Beziers, upon the Revelations; from whence the Grey-Friars took the Principles of their Doctrine, and the things, which they asserted against the Pope and the Church of Rome; for this Monk to magnify his own Order, contrived to distinguish the Sixth Estate of the Church, beginning with the time of St. Francis, who was the Head of it, and the Angel foretold in the Revelation, the Estate, which should continue, till the time of Antichrist. That as heretofore the Synagogue was rejected to settle another Church, in like manner a corrupted Church, which was the Whore of Babylon, shall be rejected to give place to a Church more perfect, animated by the Holy Spirit, and illuminated by a new Light; That this last should be opposed by a Carnal Church; but yet it should flourish in spite of all Opposition and Persecutions. These are the principal Heads of the Notions which Petrus John Oliva propounds in his Comment upon the Revelation, which were Condemned by Twelve Doctors of Divinity, appointed thereto by Nicholas Cardinal Bishop of Ostium, to whom the Pope had given a Commission for the proceeding in this Affair; whose Doctrinal Advice is related by Mr. Baluzius in the First Tome of his Miscellanies. This Author composed divers other Treatises, and among others, a Treatise of Poverty, in which he maintains, that an absolute Renunciation of all property, both in particular and common, is the chief perfection of the Gospel: He was also accused to have broached some Errors condemned in the Council of Vienna, viz. That Infants do not receive any Grace or Virtue by Baptism; That the Soul is not the form of the Body; That the Divine Essence begets, and is begotten; That the Side of JESUS CHRIST was open before his Death. Pope John XXII. having examined his Postill, and having taken the Judgment of the Doctors, contained in several Propositions picked out of that Work, and with the Mitigations which they Judged, that they deserved, condemned the Work and the Author in the Month of Feb. 1325. and likewise defaced his Memory, by causing his Bones to be taken out of the Ground and Burnt, for he was Dead before his Papacy, and as some say, before the Pontificate of Clement V. The Grey-Friars made several Apologies for him, and asserted, that he was wrongfully accused, and that the Propositions taken out of his Work and condemned, had a clear different sense, if considered, with what goes before and follows. Some of them also gave it out, that he had done several Miracles after his Death. Lastly, The concern which the Grey-Friars have for this Friar Oliva, is so Great even to our Time, that Sixtus IV. was Zealous to justifie his Memory, and having Examined his Works, declared, That they contained nothing expresly contrary to the Catholick Faith, and which could not be taken in a good sense.

The Dispute between the Emperor and Pope concerning the Property of the things spent by the Grey-Friars.

The Sentence of Deposition, which Lewis of Bavaria published in 1328. against John XXII. is principally grounded upon the Errors and Heresies, which he pretends, that Pope had delivered in his three Decretals against the Grey-Friars. He summs them up under Eight Heads: 1. That in things which perish in the usage, the Property is not distinguished from the Use. 2. That there is not a mere simple use of those things that perish in the usage, but instead of using them, they abuse them. 3. That a Renunciation of Property is no perfection, and does not make him awhit the poorer, who makes profession of it. 4. That it is an Heresie to deny that JESUS CHRIST and his Apostles had nothing in proper, and had no right to sell, or give those things they had. 5. That an Use de facto, is not just, if there be not a right of usage. 6. That to call in doubt, whether JESUS CHRIST commanded his Apostles, when he sent them out to Preach, to carry no Money with them. 7. To doubt, whether the Key of Knowledge be in the Catholick Church. 8. To teach, that One Pope can revoke those Decisions, and Constitutions of his Predecessors, which relate to Faith and Manners. These Propositions are confuted at large, and treated on as Heresies in that Sentence of Deposition. The Pope, that he might defend himself, and put an end to this Question, sent for Friar Michael de Cesena, General of the Order of Grey-Friars to Avignon, and commanded him upon penalty of Disobedience, to write an Explication of their Rule as touching the Vow of Poverty, agreeable to his Decretals, being perswaded that the Grey-Friars would rather submit to the Judgment of their General than his; but the General would not obey him, but answered the Pope proudly. Nevertheless, he desired Eight days Consideration, and in the mean time fled with two other Grey-Friars to Marseille. The Pope sent after him to seize him, but he was Embarked to Sail into Italy, whither he was going to Lewis of Bavaria, and the Antipope John de Corbario. John XXII. proceeded against Michael de Cesena, deposed him, and order'd the Grey-Friars to choose another General.

The Question of the Happiness of the Saints after death, debated by Joh. XXII.

This Pope had another Contest of greater Consequence, concerning the time when the Beatifick Vision of God is granted to those who die in a State of Religion? In a Sermon which he preached the Third Sunday in Advent 1329. he maintained, That the Blessed should not see the Trinity before the Day of Judgment. He taught the same Doctrine in another Sermon which he preach'd on on the Feaſt of All-Saints 1331. which he cauſed to be tranſcribed, and he gave out ſeveral Copies of it. Laſtly, In a Third Sermon, which he preach'd on the Eve of Epiphany in 1332. he aſſerted, That till the Day of Judgment the Souls of the Saints were under the Altar, and did not ſee the Holy Trinity; but only the Humanity of Jeſus Chriſt. This Opinion offended ſeveral perſons, and moved the Divines of the Contrary Judgment. A White-Friar named Thomas de Wallis, had the Boldneſs to preach the Contrary Doctrine at Avignon, by which he incenſed the Pope ſo much, that he put him in Priſon, and cauſed him to be fed with Bread and Water only. Durandus à S. Portiano, of the Order of Friars Preachers, and Biſhop of Meaux, made a Treatiſe againſt that Opinion, which much diſturbed the Pope's Mind, whereupon he Summoned him before him, and Examined his Work. The Cardinals, and other Divines of his Court, who were before offended at his Opinion, remained ſilent for Fear, or out of reſpect to the Pope, and ſome alſo embraced and maintained that Opinion; but the Doctors of Paris openly diſapproved it, and made a great Noiſe about it. The Pope after this ſent two Legates to Paris, viz. Gerhard, Miniſter-General of the Grey-Friars, and another Monk of the Order of Preaching-Friars, to Treat of a Peace between the Kings of England and Scotland, and charged them to inſinuate their Opinion to the Doctors of Paris. The firſt of them attempting to teach it publickly at Paris in a Meeting of the Students, cauſed a great Diſturbance; ſo that his Companion had much a-do to appeaſe them. King Philip of Valois was much troubled at the Offence, and falſe Doctrine which that Monk had taught; and the latter went to his Majeſty to pacifie him. The King fearing leſt he ſhould perplex himſelf with the Theological Queſtion, anſwer'd him, That he would not diſcourſe him, but in the preſence of ſome Divines; and having Summoned Ten of the moſt Able Doctors of Paris, of whom Four were Grey-Friars, he asked them in the preſence of this Miniſter, What was their Judgment concerning the Doctrine which he had taught? They all Condemned it, as Falſe and Heretical; but they could not agree about it. A few days after, the King cauſed all the Doctors of Divinity, Biſhops, and Abbots about Paris to meet in the Caſtle of St. Vincent, and invited this Miniſter thither, and propounded two Queſtions in French to them. I. Whether the Souls of the Saints ſee the Face of God as ſoon as they are Dead? II. Whether the Viſion, which they have preſently after their Death, ſhall ceaſe at the Day of Judgment, and another come in ſtead of it? They all anſwer'd Affirmatively to the Firſt Queſtion. And to the Second, they ſaid, That the Viſion that the Saints have preſently after Death ſhall not ceaſe at the Day of Judgment, but remains for ever; but ſome of them ſaid, that it ſhall be more perfect after the Day of Judgment: The Miniſter conſented to the Opinion of theſe laſt, at leaſt in appearance. The King deſired a Certificate of what was thus concluded by this Aſſembly, which they compoſed, and was ſealed with the Seals of 29 Divines then preſent. They wrote about it to the Pope, and the King wrote to him alſo himſelf, that he thought it ſafeſt to follow the Judgment of the Doctors of Divinity of Paris, who knew better, what ought to be held and believed in Matters of Faith, than Civilians, or other Divines, who knew little of Divinity; That he would Puniſh thoſe that taught the Contrary, threatning him (if we may believe Cardinal Peter d' Ailly) to Burn him, if he did not retract. The King alſo publiſhed by Miſtake the Judgment of the Faculty. The Pope in his Anſwers to the King, complains, That his Majeſty fixed on the Affirmative ſo poſitively, and prays him not to ruſh upon things with ſo much Paſſion, aſſuring him, that he had no Deſign fully to determine that Queſtion, but to debate it, and ſearch out the Truth. He wrote to the Univerſity to allow the Batchelors of Divinity to defend either of the Opinions, and cauſed his Divines to collect ſuch Paſſages, as might be alledged Pro & Con, to put things in a way to the Deciſion of it. The Faculty of Divinity would not endure that delay, but ſtuck cloſe to their Doctrine. Laſtly, When John XXII. had reſolved to determine this Queſtion in a Conſiſtory, which he appointed to meet, Dec. 2. 1334. he fell Sick and retracted, as ſome ſay, juſt at the point of Death, his Opinion by an Authentick Declaration, in which he owns, That Souls ſeparated from the Body, which are purged from their Sins, are in the Kingdom of Heaven, and in Paradiſe with JESUS CHRIST, in the Company of Angels. That they ſee God Face to Face, and the Divine Eſſence, as clearly as the ſtate and condition of a Soul ſeparated from the Body will permit; That he recanted all that he had ſaid, preach'd or written againſt this Doctrine. This Declaration is dated Dec. 3. 1334. a few moments before his Death, and related by Peter Harantals, a Canon Regular of the Order of Præmonſtratenſes in the Life of this Pope.

The Letters of John XXII.

John XXII. in the Second Year of his Pontificate, Octob. 21. publiſhed the Decretals of his Predeceſſor Clement V. made in the Council of Vienna, or a little before, and after that Council, which Clement V. had already digeſted in his Life-time, which make up the Five Books of Clementines, which are in the Body of Civil Law, and joyned 20 others of his Conſtitutions to it, which he calls Extravagants; to which Five other Books of Common Extravagants have been added, among which are ſeveral Decretals of Boniface VIII. Benedict XI. and John XXII. In one of his Conſtitutions, He Abrogates the Society of the Fratricolli, Beghardi, or Beghina, which had ſpread themſelves in all places. They were a kind of Monks, or Nuns, who made a Vow of Poverty and Beggery, and aſſumed a particular Habit and Way of Living, but entred into no Order, lived a free kind of life, and taught many dangerous Maxims contrary to the Doctrine of the Church, concerning the Sacraments and Obedience due to Superiors. Nevertheleſs, he declares in a private Letter written to the Biſhop of Strasburg, that he did not intend intend to include in that Conſtitution thoſe Pious Women, who had made a Vow of Chaſtity, and remained with their Parents, or in Societies, practiſing the Humility and Obedience that is due to their Paſtors, and giving Examples of Virtue and Piety. This Letter is publiſhed in the Second Tome of the Works of the Popes of Avignon, put out by Mr. Baluzius, with the Sentence by which that Pope declared the Marriage between Charles the Fair, King of France, and Queen Blanch, to be Void, and ſeveral other Letters of his, and Pope Clement V's. his Predeceſſor. There are alſo ſeveral of them in the Annaliſts, and divers Bulls in the Bullary. John XXII. was Ingenious, Active, Crafty, of a good Life, Studious, and vers'd in the Sciences, but chiefly in the Canon Law.

The Election of Benedict XII.

The Holy See after his Death was not long Vacant, for Benedict the XIIth. was choſen, Dec. 16. and Crown'd the 20th. of the ſame Month, in the Church of the Friars-Preachers at Avignon. He was called before James Fourniter, a Native of Savardun, in the County of Foix, which was a Caſtle of the Dioceſs of Pamiez, and ſince of that of Rieux. He had in his Youth been a Monk in the Abby of Balbone, of the Order of Ciſtertians in the Dioceſs of Mirepoix, from whence he came to Paris to follow his Studies, where he commenced Doctor of Divinity. Then he was made Abbot of the Monaſtery of Fontfroidus, afterward Biſhop of Pamiez, then of Mirepoix, and laſtly, nominated a Cardinal-Prieſt of the Title of St. Priſcus, by John XXII. in December 1327. He had a Deſign to ſettle his Reſidence in Italy, and choſe Bononia for his Seat, but having cauſed the Inhabitants to be tryed, whether he ſhould be welcom there, found, that that People, which had expelled the Legate of his Predeceſſor, would not entertain him; which made him take up the reſolution of abiding at Avignon, and Build himſelf a Palace there; although the People of Rome ſent Ambaſſadors to him, to beg of him to come and reſide in their City.

The Determination of the Queſtion of the Happineſs of Souls, by Benedict XII.

At his Entrance upon the Papacy he found two Affairs in the Church that wanted Regulation, viz. 1. The Queſtion concerning the Happineſs of the Souls of the Righteous, after their Separation from the Body; which had been much debated a little before the Death of his Predeceſſor. 2. The Second was the Difference of the Church of Rome with Lewis of Bavaria. To prepare Mens Minds for the Deciſion of the Firſt, he Preached a Sermon on that Subject upon the Purification, in the Year 1335. in which he maintained, that the Souls of the Juſt, which were abſolutely pure, did enjoy the Beatifick Viſion of God before the Day of Judgment. Two days after he held a Conſiſtory, to which he Summoned ſuch as had maintained the contrary Opinion in his Predeceſſors time; and that he might proceed circumſpectly in the Determination of that Point of Doctrine, he Aſſembled many Able Doctors of Divinity, and with them examined that Queſtion, as oft as he had leiſure, in the Year 1335. which he paſſed at Pont de Sorgue: And at length the Matter being fully ordered, he made his Conſtitution, Feb. 22. of the following Year, in which he determines, That the Souls of the Saints that died before our Lord's Paſſion, as alſo of the Apoſtles, Confeſſors, Martyrs, Virgins, and other baptized Chriſtians which are pure, when they are ſeparated from their Bodies, or are united with it, as alſo the Souls of Infants, which die after Baptiſm, before they have the uſe of Reaſon, are in Heaven and Paradiſe with JESUS CHRIST, and the Angels, immediately after the Separation from the Body, or after their Purification, and enjoy the intuitive and immediate Viſion of the Divine Eſſence, without the Mediation of any Object; becauſe he diſcovers himſelf nakedly, clearly, and openly to them; and conſequently, they are happy, and enjoy eternal Reſt; but on the contrary, the Souls of thoſe that die in Mortal Sin, deſcend actually right down into Hell, where they ſuffer the Pains of the Damned; That nevertheleſs all Men ſhall riſe, and appear before the Tribunal of JESUS CHRIST, to receive every one in their Body Reward, or Puniſhment for what they have done; and declares all thoſe Hereticks, that obſtinately maintain any one of the contrary Articles.

Benedict XII. Confirms the Judgment of his Predeceſſors, againſt Lewis of Bavaria and the Grey-Friars.

As to the Conteſt of the Pope with Lewis of Bavaria, Benedict XII. before he would engage in the Conteſt with that Prince, which his Predeceſſor had begun, Exhorted him to return to his Duty and Obedience to the Church. Lewis of Bavaria ſent two Ambaſſadors to him in 1335. to deſire Abſolution; which Benedict ſeemed ready to grant him, if the Ambaſſadors of the King of France, and Apulia, and the Cardinals had not deterred him from it; inſomuch, that the Ambaſſadors of Lewis returned without doing any thing. In the next Year he ſent other Ambaſſadors in the Name of the Princes of the Empire, to deſire it again. The Pope received them kindly, and told them, that he wiſhed he could do it; but he feared the King of France. Upon this Anſwer Lewis of Bavaria addreſs'd himſelf to that King, and ſent his Ambaſſadors in 1337. to pray him to joyn with him, that he might obtain Reconciliation. The King of France ſent his Ambaſſadors to the Pope, with thoſe of Lewis of Bavaria, to demand Abſolution. The Pope hearing that, anſwered, That it being a Matter of Conſequence, he would conſider of it; and that he was not obliged to treat Lewis of Bavaria, as an Heretick, or Catholick at the King of France's Pleaſure, and when he had delayed them a long time, he would give Lewis's Ambaſſadors no other Anſwer, than this, That their Maſter did not truely repent. Thus this Buſineſs hung, and Benedict would not recede any thing from what his Predeceſſors had done againſt that Prince. When theſe Ambaſſadors were returned into Germany, Lewis of Bavaria held a Synod at Francfort, in Auguſt 1338. in which he made a Solemn Proteſtation againſt the Proceedings of John XXII. which he proved before them to be null and void.

Benedict

Benedict alſo maintained what John XXII. had decided againſt the Grey-Friars concerning Poverty, and we know, that in his Papacy, a Grey-Friar named Francis de Peſtorio, was Condemned to be Burnt at Venice, for maintaining, contrary to the Deciſion of John XXII. That JESUS CHRIST and his Apoſtles had nothing their own.

Orders made by Benedict XII. and his Death.

He made, during his Papacy, ſeveral excellent Rules for the Reformation of the Church. He revoked all the Commendams of Cathedral Churches and Abbies, granted by his Predeceſſors to all Perſons whatſoever, except Cardinals and Patriarchs. He compelled all Biſhops to reſide in their Churches, forbad plurality of Benefices, made void all Favours Expectant which were not agreeable to the Rules of the Civil Law, he deprived all Perſons unworthy of their Benefices, and carefully put in fit Perſons, where he had Power; he aboliſhed the uſe of ſeveral Diſpenſations, remedied many Abuſes and Clancular Dealings, made uſe of in gaining Bulls, employ'd rightly the Revenues of the Church of Rome, by giving Alms, and beſtowing Charity on the Poor during the Famine. He took great pains to unite the Chriſtian Princes, and did all he could to procure Peace with all Kings. He revoked the Tax of Tenths, which his Predeceſſor had granted to Philip King of France, for his Voyage into the Holy Land; becauſe that Prince could not go through with his Deſign. He ſhewed his Zeal to Juſtice by cauſing thoſe Officers to be puniſhed ſeverely, who had deliver'd the Ambaſſadors of Edward King of England, which were come to Avignon to the King of France: He made a Reformation among the Black-Monks, as well as Ciſtertians, who lived looſely; he appointed perſons of Merit and Learning to viſit their Monaſteries, that they might inform him of ſuch Abuſes as ought to be amended, and made Conſtitutions for the Reformation of them. He had alſo made ſeveral Rules for the Friars Mendicants, if he had not been prevented by Death. He only ordered, that ſuch Monks, as were in his Court without any permiſſion obtain'd, ſhould return to the Monaſteries, and forbad them leaving their Order to go over to the Ciſtertians, or Cluniacks, without the expreſs permiſſion of the Pope. Laſtly, That Pope lived in a way ſuitable to ſo great a Biſhop, keeping cloſe to his Duty, being Zealous for Religion, and for the Diſcipline and Reformation of the Church, Virtuous, Charitable, free from Ambition, and worldly Intereſts. He did not (as ſeveral other Popes have done) raiſe his Nephews and Relations to the great Offices and Dignities of the Church, nor enrich them with the Goods of the Church; or by impoveriſhing private Men. He preferred but One of his Relations, whom he made Archbiſhop of Arles for his Merit, which he did not do without ſome difficulty, at the earneſt Requeſt of the Cardinals. He married but one of his Neices, whom he beſtowed upon a Merchant, refuſing ſeveral great Lords, who offered themſelves, as being above her Quality. This is the Relation which all the Hiſtorians of his Time give of his Piety and Virtue, who are more to be relyed on than ſome Modern Authors; who will have him to have been a Man of a diſorderly Converſation. He died at Avignon, April 25. 1342. which was the Eighth Year of his Papacy.

The Works of Benedict XII.

This Pope Compoſed ſeveral Works. Rainaldus has publiſhed his Opuſcula, or ſmall Tracts concerning the Poverty of JESUS CHRIST, and his Apoſtles, and about the Viſion of God. There is a more conſiderable Treatiſe of this Pope's in the Vatican Library, upon the laſt of theſe Subjects. He alſo made a large Commentary upon the Goſpel of St. Matthew, which is yet in MS. in Mr. Colbert's Library, with Three other Treatiſes againſt Ockham. Moſt of his Letters and Bulls are extant in the Annaliſts, and Regiſter of Bulls.

The Election of Clement VI.

Clement VI. was choſen Pope, May 7. 1342. and Crowned the 9th. of the ſame Month. He was called before Petrus Rogerius, Born in the Caſtle of Maumont, in the Dioceſs of Limoges. He was a Monk of the Abby of Caſa-Dei in Auvergne; and having taken his Degrees in Divinity, he went to the Court of John XXII. at Avignon. This Pope gave him the Abby of Feſcamp, and made him afterward Biſhop of Arras. He received as much Favour at the Court of France, as Avignon; for there he was admitted into the Council of that King, who had a particular reſpect for him, inſomuch, that he was tranſlated from the Biſhoprick of Arras, to the Archbiſhoprick of Sens, and in the next Year to that of Rouen; and laſtly, was raiſed to the Dignity of a Cardinal, of the Title of S. Nereus, and Achilleus by Benedict XII.

Rules made by Clement, about the Affairs of Italy.

The Firſt thing that he did after his riſe to the Papal Dignity, was to ſend his Legatees to make way for a Peace between the Kings of France and England. He ſent alſo a Cardinal-Legate into Italy, to appeaſe the Troubles and Wars which were in that Country. Robert King of Apulia died about that time, and his Kingdom fell to Jane his Daughter, then an Infant, who was married to Andrew King of Hungary. The Pope took upon him the Government of that Realm, till that Prince came to take Poſſeſſion of it, which he was ſcarce come to do, but he was Slain by Treachery. The Romans ſent to the Pope 18 of their principal Citizens, to deſire Three Things of him. I. To make the Senators, Governor, and other Magiſtrates of their City Friends, who preſented themſelves to him as Petrus Rogerius, and not as Clement VI. who was Pope for his Life only. II. To come, and make his Reſidence at Rome. III. That ſince the Life of Man is ſo ſhort, that few lived to an Hundred Years, to which Age Boniface VIII. had annexed a Plenary Indulgence for thoſe who viſited the Church of S S. Peter and Paul at Rome, he would pleaſe to reduce that time to the Fiftieth Year. The Pope granted the Firſt and Laſt of their Demands, for he reconciled the Magiſtrates preſented to him, upon Condition, that it ſhould be no Prejudice to his Rights, and brought the Jubilee to the 50th. Year, appointing, That every 50th. Year there ſhould be a Jubilee; but for the Second he put it off, by declaring, That the deſign, which which he had of coming to Rome, he could not put in Execution for the preſent, and he could not tell them when he ſhould be able to do it.

Lewis of Bavaria Excommunicated anew by Clement.

Lewis of Bavaria uſed all his Endeavours in this Papacy to be reconciled to the Church, and prayed the King of France to intercede for him. This Prince told him, That he muſt ſubmit himſelf, and humbly beg Abſolution. The Ambaſſadors of Lewis deſired ſuch a Form, as the Pope would accept; but they gave him ſuch an intolerably ſevere one, that he would not ſubſcribe it, when he was in Priſon; for it ſignified, that he gave Power to Humbertus the Dauphin's Uncle, to the Provoſts of Augsburg and Bemberg, and to Henry his Arch-Chancellor, to confeſs all the Errors and Hereſies that he was accuſed of, to make a Renunciation of the Empire with a Promiſe never to reſume it, but by the Pope's conſent, and to put his Children and Goods into the hands of his Holineſs. They annexed alſo other Clauſes, which concerned the Empire. Theſe Ambaſſadors approved of this Propoſal; but when it was preſented to Lewis, and ſeen in the Aſſembly held at Francfort in September 1344. it was declared contrary to the Intereſts of the Empire, and the Aſſembly refuſed to permit that Lewis of Bavaria ſhould Sign it; and ſent their Ambaſſadors to the Pope and Cardinals, to perſwade them not to require it. The Pope ſeeing himſelf deceived, renewed his Proceſs againſt Lewis of Bavaria, Condemns him in his Excommunication, and Depoſes him entirely; and orders the Electors of the Empire to proceed to the Election of another King of the Romans, to whom he might give the Title of Emperor, unleſs the Holy See ſhould provide one. At the ſame time he depoſed Henry Archbiſhop of Mayence, and nominated in his Place Gerlacke, the Count of Naſſau's Brother; who going into Germany, joyned himſelf to the Electors of Cologne, Treves, Dukes of Saxony, King of Bohemia, and ſome other Princes of the Empire, who being Aſſembled at the end of Auguſt at Rens, choſe Charles of Moravia, the Son of the King of Bohemia, Emperor; his Election was ſolemnly Confirmed by the Pope, and the War began between the two Competitors in Germany, but it ſoon ended by the Death of Lewis of Bavaria, which happened October 11. 1347. After his Death, Charles got Poſſeſſion of the greateſt part of the Cities of the Empire; But Henry the old Archbiſhop of Mentz, the Marqueſs of Brandenburg, the Count Palatin of the Rhine, and the Duke of Saxony, reſolved to chooſe another Emperor, and offered the Empire firſt to Edward the Third King of England, and after to Frederick Marqueſs of Miſnia, but both of them having refuſed it, they choſe Gontherius Count of Thuringia, who died the ſame Year, and left Charles the Peaceable Poſſeſſion of the Empire.

The Attempt of Nicholas Laurentius in Rome.

While the Princes of Germany were contending for the Empire, a Roman named Nicholas Laurentius, took upon him the Title of Tribune Auguſtus, the Deliverer of the City of Rome, and Defender of Italy. He made himſelf Maſter of Rome, ſeized upon the Capitol, and made a League with the greateſt part of the People of Italy. He wrote to the Pope, That if he did not come to Rome within a Year, he would have another Pope choſen, and ſtirred up Lewis and Charles the Competitors for the Empire, and the Electors to appear before the Magiſtrates of the People of Rome, declaring, that the City of Rome was the Seat of the Empire; That it belonged to him, and that the Empire ought to be in Italy, and not in Germany. This Enterprize fell almoſt immediately; for this pretended Deliverer being conſtrained by the Contrary Faction to fly from Rome, and having the Boldneſs to go in Diſguiſe to Charles's Court, he was known, Arreſted there, and carried from thence to Avignon, where he was put into the Pope's hands, who caſt him into Priſon; but he eſcaped out of it, as ſome ſay, and returned to Rome, where he was Killed.

The Death of Clement VI.

Clement VI. died Decemb. 6. 1352. in the 11th. Year of his Papacy. This Pope had a great deal of Learning, and a fine Wit, to which he had joyned a bountiful Diſpoſition, much Meekneſs, Affability and Liberality. He loved Peace, and took a great deal of Pains to unite the Chriſtian Princes, without ſiding with any Party. In the Year 1344. he put forward an Expedition againſt the Turks, of which the Dauphin was Captain; but it had no good Effect. He laboured to unite the Greek Church, and accompliſhed it among the Armenians. He made the Church of Prague in Bohemia into an Archbiſhoprick in the Year 1344. and made a Conſtitution in 1350. concerning the Conclave, by which he allows all the Cardinals to have in the Conclave, every one two Clergymen to wait on them, their ſeveral Lodgings, and a Deſſert. A little before his Death he made a Declaration, by which he revoked all that he had delivered, either in Diſputation, Teaching, or Preaching, or otherwiſe againſt the Catholick Truths, and againſt Faith and good Manners. A Proteſtation, which his Succeſſors Innocent VI. Urban V. and Gregory XI. alſo made at the Point of Death. Several Letters of Clement V. are found among the Annaliſts [Bzovius ad an. 1342. and Waddingus Tom. 3. ad an. 1342.] There is an Epiſtle of his againſt the Whipping-Monks in the 11th. Tome of the Councils, and Mr. Baluzius hath publiſh'd ſeveral, ſent to the Kings of France and Arragon in the Ancient Acts, which he hath joyned to the Lives of the Popes of Avignon.

The Election and Actions of Innocent VI.

Innocent VI. was Choſen in the Room of Clement V. Decemb. 18. and Crowned the 23d. or 30th. of the ſame Month. He was called before Stephanus Albertus, and was a Native of Mont near Pampadour, in the Dioceſs of Limoges. He had been before Grand Seneſchal of Tholouſe, and after was made Biſhop of Noyon in 1338. and tranſlated to the Biſhoprick of Clermont in 1340. Clement VI. raiſed him to the Dignity of a Cardinal of the Title of St. John and St. Paul, and made him Biſhop of Oſtia and Grand Penitentiary. He began as ſoon as he was made Pope to revoke the Reſervations, and Commendams of Benefices, which his Predeceſſor had two eaſily granted; granted, and took all the Care he could to fill the Dignities of the Church with Perſons eminent for Virtue and Knowledge. He ſent into Italy, Giles Alvarez, a Spaniſh Cardinal of the Title of St. Clement, to reſume the Caſtles and Cities that belonged to the Church of Rome, of which ſeveral ſmall Lords had made themſelves Maſters. This Legate found in all Italy, only the Caſtles of Monteſiaſcone and Montiſalco willing to receive him; but a little after, he put the Pope in Poſſeſſion of a part of his Dominion. The City of Rome was troubled with ſome ſtirs by Francis Baroncellus, who took upon him the Title of Tribune, but the Pope ſet up Nicholas Laurentius, whom he delivered out of Priſon on purpoſe. He deſtroyed Baroncellus, and was himſelf Slain a little time after. Under the Papacy of this Pope, Charles King of the Romans went to Rome by the conſent of his Holineſs, and was Crowned Emperor in 1355. by the Cardinals Petrus Bertrandus and Giles Alvarez, after he had taken an Oath, that he would not ſtay in Rome, nor Italy; Lewis Marqueſs of Brandenburg, Son of Lewis of Bavaria, was abſolved of the Cenſures, which he had incurred by maintaining his Father's Party. Innocent VI. maintained the Decrees of his Predeceſſors againſt the Grey-Friars, which rebelled againſt the Holy See, and Burnt two of them at Avignon in 1353. becauſe they obſtinately maintained their Opinion concerning the Poverty of JESUS CHRIST; and Impriſoned one named John Roquetaillade of S. Flour, becauſe he took upon him to Propheſie, and foretold, that Wars ſhould increaſe; That the Earth ſhould be deſolate; That the Clergy ſhould be Abuſed and deſpoiled of their Goods, and after this time of Affliction is paſſed, there ſhall come an Angel, the Deputy of JESUS CHRIST, who ſhall bring the Clergy to live after the Ancient Way of the Apoſtles, ſhall Convert the Jews and Turks, and purifie the whole Earth. Innocent VI. ordered alſo his Inquiſitor in Germany to baniſh all the Begards, and Beguines, and condemned an Hereſie riſen in England, concerning Original Sin, and the Merit of good Works. This Pope died Sept. 12. 1362.

The Election of Urban, and his Actions. Octob. 28. following, the Cardinals being Aſſembled in the Conclave, choſe William Grimoardus, a Native of Griſac in the Dioceſs of Menda, Doctor of Law, and Abbot of S. Victor at Marſeilles, who aſſumed the Name of Urban V. and was Conſecrated and Crowned Pope at Avignon, Nov. 6. After he had had a Conference at Avignon in the Year 1365. with the Emperor Charles, he took up a Reſolution to go to Rome, to ſet in Order the Affairs of Italy; and accordingly departed from Avignon the laſt day of April 1367. and taking Ship at Marſeilles May 20. he Arrived four days after in Italy. Having ſtayed ſome time at Viterbo, He made his Entry into Rome Octob. 6. and was there received with great Joy by the Romans. He had the honour to receive two Emperors there, viz. Charles the Emperor of Germany, who came in 1368. with an Army to bring the People, and Cities of Italy into Obedience to the Pope, and Joannes Palæologus Emperor of the Greeks, who came to Rome the next Year; and united himſelf to the Roman Church. Urban having put the Affairs of Italy in order, reſolved to return to Avignon, under a Pretence of endeavouring to make a Peace between the Kings of France and England. He left Italy Sept. 5. 1370. came the 16th. of the ſame Month to Marſeilles, and the 24th. to Avignon; where he died, Decemb. 19. of the ſame Year.

His Character and Works. This Pope had ſeveral great Accompliſhments, and was very Noble, very Zealous to do his Duty, and a lover of Juſtice. He erected divers ſtately Buildings, Reformed many Abuſes in the Court of Rome, puniſhed Irregular Clergy-men very ſeverely, proſecuted Uſurers, and Perſons guilty of Simony, and ſuch as uſed Unlawful Trades, forbad Plurality of Benefices, favoured Learning, eſtabliſhed ſeveral Publick Univerſities, and entertained 1000 Students at his own Charge: He was Liberal and Charitable to the Poor; made a good Uſe of the Revenues of the Church; forbad Eccleſiaſtical Immunities, and Privileges; and preferred only two of his Relations to Eccleſiaſtical Dignities, becauſe they were worthy of them. His Conſtitution againſt Plurality of Benefices is in the 11th. Tome of the Councils. The Annaliſts [Bzovius ad an. 1365. and Waddingus ad an. 1363.] have publiſhed ſeveral of his Letters, [and there is a Volume of them in the Vatican Library.]

The Election of Gregory XI. After the Death of Urban, the Cardinals choſe Petrus Rogerius, Nephew to Clement VI. being about Forty Years old. He was a Native of Maumont, in the Dioceſs of Limoges. He took the Name of Gregory XI. and was Conſecrated and Crowned at Avignon, Jan. 4. 1371. Italy was afflicted with Wars under the Pontificate of this Pope, and the Florentines revolted, and drew away Bononia, and ſeveral other Cities. After the Pope had thundred out his Excommunications, he publiſhed a Croiſado, and Levyed an Army againſt them; which he ſent into Italy under the Command of the Cardinal of Geneva; And laſtly, reſolved to go and make his Reſidence in Italy, and fix his See at Rome. Some affirm, That he did this by the Perſwaſion of Baldus the Lawyer, who had been his Maſter. Others ſay, That it was done upon the Reflection of a Biſhop, who was reproved by him, for Non-reſidence; Others ſay, That he did it by the Advice of St. Catharine of Sienna. However that be, he left Avignon without the Knowledge of the French, Sept. 13. 1376. being accompanied with all the Cardinals, except five, who would ſtay there, and made his Entrance into Rome, Jan. 7. in the next Year. His Arrival did not at all alter the ſtate of Affairs, the Revolt continued, the Romans themſelves would not ſubmit to him, and kept up their Magiſtrates. Their Governor invaded Viterbo, and ſome other Cities belonging to the Patrimony of St. Peter, which obliged Gregory to retire to Anagnia, under a Pretence

Pretence of avoiding the heat of the Weather. He returned to Rome in November, and having accommodated things with the Governor of Rome, he treated with the Florentines, and the other Revolters about a Peace. During the time of this Negotiation, Gregory died March 27. 1378. Gerſon ſays, That this Pope made a Declaration when he died, in which he exhorted all preſent not to believe the Viſions of Private Perſons; becauſe he had himſelf been deceived by the advice of one of theſe Enthuſiaſts, and upon that Account had like to have created a dangerous Schiſm in the Church, but that he foreſaw the ill Conſequence of it. This he ſaid with a reſpect to the Advice, which Catharine of Sienna had given him to go to Rome. However that be, the Death of Gregory made a Way to a Schiſm; of which we ſhall ſpeak in the following Chapter. The greateſt part of the Letters of this Pope are publiſhed by Waddingus [in his Annal. Minor. ad an. 1371.] and by Bzovius [in his Annales ad an. 1372.]

CHAP. IV.

The Hiſtory of the Schiſm of the Popes of Rome and Avignon, and of what paſſed in Chriſtendom on that Account, till the Council held at Piſa.

Gregory the XIth. being Dead at Rome, the Romans were deſirous to take this Opportunity of reſettling the Pope's Court in their City, by promoting the Choice of a Roman, or at leaſt of an Italian. There were at that time Sixteen Cardinals at Rome, Four Italians; which were Peter of Corſinis a Florentine, Biſhop of Porto, ſtyled Cardinal of Florence, Simon of Broſſana, a Milaneſe Cardinal-Prieſt of the title of St. John and St. Paul, Francis of Thebaldeſchis, Cardinal-Prieſt of the title of St. Sabina, commonly called the Cardinal of St. Peter, James Des Urſini, a Roman, Cardinal-Deacon of the title of St. George, and Twelve Ultramontanes, i. e. of the Nations beyond the Alps; to wit, the Cardinals John of Groſſo, a Limoſin Biſhop of Præneſte, called Cardinal of Limoges, Robert of Geneva Cardinal-Prieſt of the title of the Twelve Apoſtles, Gerard du Puy Abbot of Marmoutier, Cardinal-Prieſt of the title of St. Clement, Peter Flandrini, Cardinal-Prieſt of the title of St. Euſtace, Willam of Aigrefeüille, Cardinal-Prieſt of St. Stephen in Monte Cœlio, Bertrand Larger of Glandeva, Cardinal-Prieſt of the title of St. Cecily, Hugo of Montelais of Nants, of the title of the four Crowns, Guy of Maleſicco, Cardinal-Prieſt of the title of the Holy-Croſs in Jeruſalem, ſtyled Cardinal of Poictiers, Peter of Sortenac, Cardinal-Prieſt of the title of St. Laurence, nam'd of Viviers, William Noellet, Cardinal-Deacon of the title of the St. Angelo, Peter of Vergne, Cardinal-Deacon of the title of St. Maria in viâ latâ, and Peter de la Lune, Cardinal-Deacon under the title of St. Mary in Coſmedin. Theſe latter being much more in number, than the Italians, there was ſmall likelihood they would chooſe an Italian; wherefore the Romans were reſolved to obtain by force, what they could not bring about, if they left things to go on in their ordinary Channel. They began with demanding it of the Cardinals, even before they entred the Conclave; giving them to underſtand, that unleſs they yielded to them, it ſhould be the worſe for them. The Cardinals being urged to ſpeak Poſitively, made anſwer, That they could not Diſcourſe of the Election of a Pope out of the Conclave, and when they were met there, they would do, what they judged moſt conducible to the good of the Church; moreover, they deſired them to make no ſuch Demands as were joyn'd with Threatnings, and which occaſion'd them to fear ſome Violence; declaring that if they offer'd any, to compel them in their Choice; he that ſhould be choſen, would not be Legitimate Pope, but an Intruder. The Romans, whoſe intereſt it was, not to let ſlip this Opportunity, perſiſted in their firſt Demands; and for fear the Cardinals ſhould quit Rome, they ſet a Guard at the Gates and Avenues of the City, expelled thence the Nobility and the Principal Citizens, and admitted a great number of People out of the Country, whom they ordered to Arm, that they might controul the Election. The Obſequies of the deceaſed Pope being ended, on the 5th. of April, the Cardinals prepared to go into the Conclave, though with regret, and diſcontented, under the Apprehenſion of what might happen; Proteſting, That in caſe they were obliged to chooſe an Italian, they ſhould not Acknowledge him for Pope. They entred on the 7th. into the Conclave, the Guard whereof was committed to the Biſhop of Marſeilles; but the Officers of the Romans alſo went in, and departed not thence, till they had made diligent Search in all the Lodgings, and poſſeſs'd themſelves of the Gate, while the Conclave was Surrounded with an innumerable Company of People, which cried, We will have a Roman Pope; Romano lo volemo lo Papa, Romano lo volemo. When it was repreſented to them, that theſe tumultuary Cries were Unbecoming; they made two Officers enter the Conclave, and declared to the Cardinals, That if they choſe not a Roman Pope, they were in danger of their Lives. The Cardinals having given them the ſame Anſwer as they gave before, that the Election of a Pope ought to be made with Freedom; they continued the ſame Threats, and withdrew in the Evening, after the Cardinals had told them, that on the Morrow, when they had ſaid one Maſs of the Holy Ghoſt, they would act according as he ſhould inſpire them. The People, who were not contented with this Anſwer, continued to cry all Night long, Romano lo volemo lo Papa, O almanco almanco Italiano, liano è ſe non lo fanno tutti quanti queſti Cardinali è Franceſi ſaranno tagliatia pezze. One of the Cardinals to appeaſe them, told them out at the Window of the Conclave, That to Morrow they ſhould be ſatisfied. On the next day, the 8th. of April, the People being again gathered together in greater Numbers at the Sound of the Alarm-Bell of St. Peter's Clock, came with greater Fury to the Conclave, threatning to break down the Gate. The Cardinals having notice of it from the Biſhop of Marſeilles, ſent the Cardinal d' Aigrefeüille to ſpeak to the People, whom he could bring to no other terms, but that they ſhould make Choice of a Roman, or an Italian, if they deſired to ſave their Lives. The Cardinal d'Aigrefeüille having Reported this to the Conclave, they deputed Cardinal Florentin, Dean of the Sacred College, to go and Promiſe the People, they ſhould have Satisfaction. The Cardinal would not accept this Commiſſion, firſt, becauſe he judged it contrary to the freedom they ought to have, and for fear of being killed by the Romans, if they fail'd in the Performance of this Promiſe. The Cardinal d' Aigrefeüille, Dean of the Cardinals-Prieſts, having taken him by the hand, together with James Des Urſini, Dean of the Cardinals-Deacons, led him to the Gate of the Conclave; where they promiſed the People, that they were upon chooſing an Italian Cardinal. Being returned, they choſe in a hurry Bartholomew Pregnano, Archbiſhop of Bari, not deſigning this Election ſhould ſtand: for the Ultramontanes had a Mind to a Pope which was no Italian, and the Italians were deſirous, that one of their Number ſhould be advanced to this Dignity; and not a Man who was not of the Sacred College. There were likewiſe ſome, who declared, That they made this Election againſt their Judgment, to avoid the Danger they were in, and with an Intention, that he whom they choſe, ſhould not be Pope. The Cardinal Florentin gave his Vote for the Cardinal of St. Peter, and James Des Urſini refuſed to give his Voice. The report being afterwards ſpread Abroad, that the Archbiſhop of Bari was choſen Pope; the People miſtaking him for John of Bar a Frenchman, Chamberlain to the deceaſed Pope, began again their Tumults. The Cardinal of St. Peter having appear'd at the Window, ſome ſaid, It is the Cardinal of St. Peter, the common People ſuppoſing he had been choſen Pope, began to cry, Viva, viva Santo Pietro, and went away of that Opinion. But ſome time after, perceiving they did not open the Conclave, they returned with greater Violence, broke open the Gates of the Conclave, ſeized the Cardinals, Plunder'd their Goods, demanding without intermiſſion a Roman Pope, and ſome of the Domeſticks of the Cardinals having ſaid to them, Have you not the Cardinal of St. Peter, they took him, and arrayed him in Pontifical Robes, placed him on the Altar, and worſhipped him, though he cried out, that he was not Pope, neither would he be. The Cardinals eſcaped with great difficulty. Some were ſtopt, and rudely handled; others were forc'd to diſguiſe themſelves: Some retreated to their Houſes, and others left the City, or betook themſelves to the Caſtle of St. Angelo. On the Morrow, the Archbiſhop of Bari choſen in the forementioned manner, deſigned to be Proclaimed; but ſeeing himſelf deſerted by the Cardinals, who would not own him, he told the Magiſtrates of Rome, They had done nothing, unleſs they re-aſſembled the Cardinals, to the intent they might Proclaim his Election, and put him in Poſſeſſion of the Holy See. The Magiſtrates having put this Order in Execution, they cauſed Twelve or Thirteen to meet, who Proclaimed the Archbiſhop of Bari Pope, under the Name of Urban VI. cloathed him in the Pontifical Habit, and gave him Poſſeſſion of the Holy See. On the 17th. of the ſame Month, which was Eaſter-Day, he was crowned in preſence of the Cardinal Des Urſini.

The beginning of the Papacy of Urban VI.

Urban the VIth. was a Neapolitan: he had formerly been Archbiſhop of Otranto, from whence he was newly tranſlated to that of Bari, by Gregory XI. who alſo gave him charge of the Apoſtolick Court of Chancery, in the abſence of Cardinal de Pampelune, who remain'd at Avignon: He paſſed for an able Doctor of the Canon Law, and had the repute of an Humble, Devout, Honeſt Man, an Enemy to Simony, Regular in his Morals, Studious, a Lover of Juſtice. The Cardinals caſt an eye upon him, fancying, that he would not make an Advantage of this Election, thus carried on by force; nevertheleſs it is apparent, that he had labour'd underhand for this Dignity, and the News of his Election was no ſooner brought him, but he looked on himſelf as Pope, and gave Order to the Magiſtrates of Rome to oblige the Cardinals to come together, to the end he might be Acknowledged, and placed on the Throne. The next day after his Coronation, the Cardinals who were at Rome wrote to thoſe of Avignon, that they had choſen for Pope the Archbiſhop of Bari. We have their Letter in the Tenth Tome of the Spicilegium; but at the ſame time the Cardinal d' Aigrefeüille, and ſome others, ſent private notice to the King of France, and other Chriſtian Princes, that this Election was not valid, and they deſign'd not, that Urban ſhould be owned as Pope. Nevertheleſs, whether out of Fear, or Diſſimulation, they owned him at Rome, and obeyed him in appearance: Perhaps likewiſe they would have practiſed nothing againſt him, and had left him in quiet Poſſeſſion of the Holy See, if he had treated them with Mildneſs; but Urban, who was naturally ſevere, would oblige the Prelates to reſide at their Benefices, reproved ſharply the Behaviour of the Cardinals, in a Speech he made in the Conſiſtory a Fortnight after Eaſter, upbraided ſome in particular with their carriage, which diſobliged them, and put them upon a Reſolution of chooſing a new Pope. Urban further drew upon himſelf the Anger of Otho Duke of Brumſwick, who had Married Jane Queen of Sicily, after the Death of the Prince of Tarentum. This Queen at the firſt rejoiced very much at the Election of Urban, Born her Subject; but Urban treated the Duke of Brumſwick with Diſdain, and refuſing to accept the Conditions of the Peace, which

that

that Prince had negotiated by order of Gregory XI. with the People of Tuscany and Liguria, he lost a Defender, which he had need of, considering the Posture of his Affairs. He committed also another Fault, in taking from the Rostaings the Government of the Castle of St. Angelo, of which they were in Possession, and which they refused to Surrender to him; but on the contrary declared against him. The Thirteen Ultramontane Cardinals being dissatisfied, withdrew from Rome one after another, in the Month of May, under pretence of avoiding the excessive heat of the Summer, and resorted to Anagni. Urban then seeing himself deserted, and plainly foreseeing their Design, did all he could to oblige them to return; and that he might deal more kindly with them, he went as far as Tivoli, where the Italian, and Ultramontane Cardinals held divers Conferences, and proposed the calling of a Council to prevent the Schism which was then hatching; but not being able to agree on the Place, nor the Conditions, things remained in the same posture. The Duke of Brunswick was willing to interest himself in bringing Matters to an Agreement, and had effected it, if Urban would have consented to the Marriage of Mary, the Heiress of the Kingdom of Sicily beyond the Pharos, to the Marquess of Monferrat, his Kinsman; but this Pope, who had a Design this Kingdom should fall to his Nephew Francis Pregnano, would not hearken to that Proposition; and this made a perfect Quarrel between him and Otho, who no longer would interest himself in his Affairs, but forsook him, though without withdrawing from his Obedience. The Cardinals at Anagni, before the doing any thing to provide for their Safety, caused the Lord Bernard de la Salle, with his Troops, to approach unto Viterbo for to Guard the Sacred College; The Romans attempting to Way-lay them, as they marched by near Rome, were defeated, and the Troops arrived at Anagni. When the Cardinals saw they were secure, they began to intimate unto Urban, that he had not been lawfully chosen, but by force, as he himself very well knew; and by consequence he was an Intruder, and obliged to resign the Popedom. Urban made Protestations to the contrary, and wrote a Letter to the Cardinals in the Name of all Christians, wherein he asserts his Election to be Canonical, and exhorts the Earl of Fondi not to afford his Protection to those revolted Cardinals. Wherefore the Cardinals seeing no likelihood of his voluntary relinquishing the Papacy, on the Second day of August, made a Declaration, in which they recite after what manner the Archbishop of Bari was chosen, set forth, That he ought not to be acknowledged, as lawful Pope; and Protest against whatever they have done, and written about this Election. On the 9th. of the same Month, after having celebrated One Mass of the Holy Ghost, they made an Award, wherein they declare, That the Archbishop of Bari ought to be looked on as Excommunicate, an Usurper, and a Tyrant. They made known this Sentence to the Kings, to the University of Paris, and to all Christians. Urban perceiving there was no hopes of an Accommodation, return'd to Rome, where he made Nine and twenty Cardinals. The old French Cardinals withdrew to Fondi, to proceed to the Choice of a new Pope. But that it might be less liable to Dispute, they believed they ought to call thither the three Italian Cardinals, which remain'd (for the Cardinal of St. Peter was dead some days before). These three Cardinals, who had stood as Neuters, were retired to a Castle belonging to Cardinal Ursini. The Ultramontanes assured each of them in particular, That if he would come to them at Fondi, they would order it so, that he should be chosen Pope: With these hopes, they all departed and came to Fondi. Upon their Arrival, the Cardinals entred the Conclave on the 20th. of September, and proceeded to the Election of a Pope. The Cardinal of Limoges gave his Voice first, because the Cardinal of Florence, who was Dean of the Sacred College, had excused himself from giving the first Vote; he said, "That "since the French were for a French Pope, and the Italians for an Italian, he judged it convenient "to nominate one, which was neither French nor Italian; and thereupon he gave his Vote for "Robert Cardinal of Geneva, by Nation a German, and would choose him for Supreme Bishop: All the Cardinals, except the three Italians, gave him their Votes: He took the Name of Clement VII. and was Crown'd on the 21st. of the same Month. He was Brother to Amidéus Earl of Geneva, had been Bishop of Teroüane, and afterwards of Cambray, and made Cardinal by Gregory the XIth. though not above Thirty six Years of Age: He was Quick, Eloquent, Active, fit for Business and Labour: These Qualifications contributed to the Choice they made of his Person, but more, the Nobility of his Birth, whereby he was of Kin and Allied to the most Potent Princes of Christendom; which gave the Cardinals who chose him, ground to hope he would be owned without Difficulty, and that his Competitor Urban, would be forsaken by all the World; but God permitted not Matters to go thus; for Christendom was divided, divers Kingdoms continued under the Obedience of Urban, and others acknowledged Clement; this caused a bloody Schism in the Church. Urban was in Possession of Rome, but the Castle of St. Angelo was firm to Clement, and very much gall'd the Romans, who besieged it, took it in conclusion, and in part demolish'd it. Almost all the Cities of Tuscany and Lombardy also owned Urban: Germany and Bohemia stuck to his Party; for that being at Tivoli, he had confirmed the Election Wenceslaus King of Bohemia, Son to the Emperor Charles, chosen King of the Romans in the Year 1376. Though his Predecessor Gregory XI. made a Scruple to approve it. Lewis King of Hungary likewise own'd him; and these two Princes sent Ambassadors to Clement, and to the Cardinals, to represent that they ought to Acknowledge Urban as Legitimate Pope, and desist from their Pretensions: Clement having ill received them, provoked these two Princes, and confirm'd them in the resolution to take Urban's part: Poland, Prussia, Denmark, Swedeland, and Norway, followed the Example of Germany. In England the Envoys of the two Competitors petitors having been Heard in a Parliament held at Glouceſter, in the beginning of the Reign of Richard the Second; the Election of Urban was approved, and that of Clement rejected. The Earl of Flanders, though a near Kinſman to Clement, yet ſo far declared againſt him, that he would not ſee the Cardinal, who was ſent to him on his behalf. Clement was Acknowledged by France and Scotland, by the Dukes of Lorrain and Bar, by the Earls of Savoy and Geneva, and by Jane Queen of Naples; which yet hinder'd not many of her Subjects from adhering to the Party of Urban. He ſent Legates into all Parts to ſhew his Right. Cardinal de Groſſo was diſpatcht to France, Cardinal Aigrefeüille to Germany and Bohemia, Cardinal de Maleficco into England and Flanders, and Cardinal Peter de la Lune to Spain, Portugal, and Navarre. He, finding that Spain had declared for Urban, left not the place, but tarrying there, gained ſo much Ground by his Cunning, and Intrigues, that at length Clement was there Acknowledged. This Pope to re-inſtate the Cardinals, whom he had ſent as his Legates, nominated Six of them in the Month of December, in the Year 1678. whereof two had been already named by Urban, and had refuſed to accept that Dignity. The Cardinal d' Aigrefeüille, Legate in Germany, found Wenceſlaus, who Succeeded his Father who died that Year, altogether in the Intereſts of Urban, and could do nothing in favour of Clement. In France, King Charles V. who was a very Wiſe and Prudent Prince, that he might do nothing haſtily in a Buſineſs of this Conſequence, ſent ſome Perſons of his Privy-Council unto the Cardinals, to know how Matters went, and to take an Oath of them, what they thought in their Conſcience of theſe two Elections. The Cardinals after having Sworn by the Body of JESUS CHRIST, proteſted, That they had been conſtrain'd by Violence to pretend the Election of the Archbiſhop of Bari, and that he, whom they had ſince choſen, was the true Pope. The King not as yet ſatisfied with this Declaration, was deſirous to Diſcourſe ſome of the Cardinals, and having obliged them to come to the Caſtle of Vincent, together with the Prelates, and the Doctors of Divinity; the Matter being put in Debate, and maturely Examined, it was at laſt concluded, that only the Election of Clement was valid, and that the King ought to Acknowledge him; the which he did, and gave intimation of it to all Chriſtian Princes his Allies.

Clement VII. retires to Avignon.

Nevertheleſs Clement left Fondi, and withdrew to the Caſtle of Spelongue near to Cajeta, from whence he went to Naples with the Cardinals; but the Neapolitans not being able to endure him, he bethought himſelf of going to Avignon, where he Arriv'd in the Month of June in the Year 1379. His Departure wholly ruin'd his Affairs in Italy. The Caſtle of St. Angelo Surrender'd, and what Succours he was able to afford to thoſe of his Party, were overborn by the Urbaniſts, who were the Stronger. Urban joined the Spiritual Arms to the Temporal, to ſubdue them, and order'd Proceſs to be made againſt Queen Jane, the Earl of Fondi, the Urſini, and the other Favourers of Clement; and declared them to have forfeited their Eſtates, their Lands, their Goods, and their Dignities and to be uncapable to enjoy them. He declared likewiſe Clement the Anti-Pope, and his Cardinals Schiſmaticks, and deprived them of all kinds of Dignities and Benefices. Clement on his part made uſe of the ſame Weapons againſt Urban, his Cardinals and Adherents. Theſe reciprocal Condemnations cauſed great Diſorders through all Chriſtendom, each of the two having their Partiſans, who made War one upon another, and endeavoured to deprive each other of the Benefices and Dignities obtain'd from the Pope, whom they Acknowledged; inſomuch, that the Benefices were for a Booty, and ſeized by ſuch as found themſelves the Strongeſt: The Popes beſtowed them on thoſe that ſued for them, though undeſerving, and being not yet of Age, only to enlarge the Number of their Creatures, or elſe they Sold them to ſupply their Wants. Impunity reigned every where; there was no ſuch thing as Order or Obedience, and the Church was in a dreadful confuſion.

Wars in Italy, between Lewis Duke of Anjou, & Charles de Duras.

Italy was the Part of the World which ſuffered the moſt; becauſe this was the Place where the Partiſans of the two Popes had moſt Liberty. Urban, to make himſelf ſole Maſter, and to put in Execution the Judgment he had given againſt Queen Jane, gave away her Kingdom to Charles Duke of Duras, a Kinſman of the Queen's, and call'd him out of Hungary, where he then was, to come and take the Poſſeſſion: When he had arrived at Rome, he crowned him King of Sicily, after he had obliged him to give the Dutchies of Capua and Melphi to him, and divers other Earldoms to his Nephew Francis Pregnano, Surnamed Butillo. But becauſe this Prince wanted Money to undertake an Enterprize ſo conſiderable, as was the Conqueſt of the Kingdom of Sicily; the Pope Pawn'd the Goods of the Churches in the City of Rome, and Sold the Chalices, Croſſes, and the other Ornaments, to make up a round Summ, which he gave him. Queen Jane to ſet up a Power capable to Support her againſt the Attempts of Urban, made a Gift of her Eſtates to Lewis Duke of Anjou, and exhorted him to come ſpeedily to her Relief. Nevertheleſs, Charles of Duras, with ſome Troops, entred the Kingdom of Naples, made himſelf Maſter of that City, ſurprized Otho the Husband of Jane by Treachery, and took him Priſoner; and at laſt having Storm'd Chaſteau neuf, whither the Queen was retired, with her Siſter Mary, he made her Priſoner of War, and ſome time after order'd her to be Strangled. Clement on his part importun'd the Duke of Anjou to paſs into Italy; the which at length he reſolved, and parted from France with a conſiderable Army, in the Year 1382. to Conquer the Kingdom of Sicily; he marched croſs Lombardy, and inſtead of going directly to Rome, to ſeize the Perſon of Urban, he paſſed into the Kingdom of Naples; and with the aſſiſtance of two German Commanders, whom he found in this Country, he made himſelf Maſter of ſeveral Towns in Apulia; whilſt that Charles, who tarried at Naples, fortified the Places that were left him, and lengthned out the War, that he might waſte the Duke of Anjou's Army. He ſucceeded in that Deſign. This Prince's Troops were ſo weaken'd by Scarcity and Sickneſs, that they could Undertake Nothing: His Money fell ſhort, and at laſt he died, either by a Diſeaſe, or by Poiſon, on the 20th. of September, in the Year 1384. at Bari.

Urban ſome time before had paſſed into the Kingdom of Naples, either to prevent an Agreement between Charles, and the Duke of Anjou, or to put his Nephew in Poſſeſſion of the Dutchies of Capua, and Melphi. Charles went to receive him near Averſa, and a while after cauſed him to be Arreſted, and brought to Naples into the New Caſtle, where he permitted him to give Audiences, and kept him under Confinement: But the Cardinals being imployed to make up this Breach, Charles asked the Pope's Pardon, and allowed him Liberty to go forth of the Caſtle, and to abide near the Cathedral Church. Sometime after the wantonneſs of Urban's Nephew, who deflower'd a Nun, led him to renew the Quarrel Charles had with the Pope; becauſe Charles was obliged to bring him to Puniſhment for this Crime. But the Pope upheld his Nephew, ſtopt the Execution of the Sentence, and obliged Charles to give his Nephew Seventy Thouſand Florins, for the Revenue of his Dutchies, together with the Caſtle of Luceria, whither he retired with part of his Court, reſolving there to paſs the Winter, in hopes that he ſhould ſoon make himſelf Maſter of Naples; for he deſigned to revenge himſelf for the Injury Charles had done him, and to deprive him of his Kingdom, truſting to the Correſpondence he had with ſome Neapolitans. On the other ſide Cardinal Reatino, and ſome others in Naples combined againſt him, and put out a Manifeſto, importing, That if the Pope neglected the Government, or were not fit for it, or adhered too much to his own ſenſe, and would rule Abſolutely, without adviſing with the Cardinals, they had right to nominate Overſeers, by whoſe Counſel all things ſhould be managed. Urban having had notice of this Project, order'd Six of theſe Cardinals to be arreſted, and created hereupon divers others, either Germans, or Neapolitans. Theſe Six Cardinals were put into Dungeons, loaded with Chains, and often examined by the Rack. Charles incenſed with theſe Attempts of Urban, who had begun to proceed againſt him, beſieged the Caſtle of Luceria; but Urban eſcaped with his Followers, carrying along with him the Cardinals Priſoners, and having reached to a Sea-Port, Embarked in the Gallies of Genoa; he ſailed to Palermo, and from thence to Genoa, where he put to Death Five of the arreſted Cardinals, having granted the Cardinal of St. Cecily his Life, at the Requeſt of Richard, King of England, after degrading him, and depriving him of all his Benefices and Dignities. Theſe Cruelties alienated the Minds of many from the Affection they had to Urban; two of his Cardinals, the one named Pileus de Prato Archbiſhop of Ravenna, and the other Galeo de Petra-mala withdrew to Clement, who received them, and confirmed them in their Dignities.

Urban Arreſted by Charles de Duras; and forced to retire to Genoa.

While theſe things paſſed in Italy, Clement made himſelf to be owned by the Kings of Caſtile and Arragon, who having, at the inſtance of the King of France, made inquiry at Avignon, concerning the Elections of the two Competitors, underſtood that of Urban to be void, becauſe made by force, and on the contrary, that of Clement to be Legitimate and Canonical; but becauſe he wanted Money to ſupport his Dignity, and could raiſe it no where but in France, he ſent the Abbot of St. Nicaſius of Rheims, to Levy half the Revenues of the Benefices. The Clergy could not bear this Exaction, the Univerſity of Paris complained thereof to the King, who ſent for the Abbot of St. Nicaſius, order'd him to depart the Kingdom, ſtopped all the Revenues of the Benefices, to be employed one Third upon Reparations, another Third to defray incident Charges, and the Remainder for the Subſiſtence of the Clergy: He likewiſe deputed Arnold of Corbie, firſt Preſident of Paris, to go to Avignon; there to lay open the Injuſtice of this Demand; ſo that Clement and his Cardinals were forced to be content without this Supply.

Clement owned by the Kings of Caſtile and Arragon, attempts to raiſe money in France.

In the Year 1385. Charles of Duras being gone into Hungary, to be Proclaimed King, as next Heir to the Crown; he was there Murther'd in the Month of January, in the Year following. At the ſame time Otho eſcaped out of Priſon, and came to Sicily; from whence he paſſed into Apulia, and made himſelf Maſter of Naples; having driven out Margaret, the Relict of Charles Duras, who made her eſcape with her two Children to Cajeta. Urban went from Genoa to Perugia, where he tarried a full Year. The Germans propoſed to him an Agreement with Clement, but he would not hearken thereto; ſome time after he took up a Reſolution to return into Sicily, and being on the Way thither, his Mule fell down and wounded him deſperately. He cauſed himſelf to be carried to Tivoli, with a Deſign to proceed on his Journey; but being in no condition to do it, he was conveyed to Rome, where he died, in the Month of October, in the Year 1389.

The Death of Charles Duras and Urban VI.

The Death of this Pope rendred the Peace of the Church more eaſie to be brought about, if the Cardinals in Italy, would have forborn to make another Election; but on the contrary, being met in the Conclave preſently after the Death of Urban, they choſe on the Second of November, Cardinal Peter de Thomacellis, a Neapolitan, who called himſelf Boniface IX. and was acknowledged by thoſe, who had obeyed Urban. Boniface augmented the Revenues conſiderably, and the Temporal Authority of Popes, and heaped together great Riches in the time of his Papacy. If we may credit Thierri of Niem, a contemporary Authour, one of his Domeſticks, he made a publick Merchandize of Benefices at the beginning of his Popedom, and afterwards willing to palliate it, he, the firſt, ſettled the Annates, that is to ſay, the Right of receiving ceiving the firſt Year's Revenues of Biſhopricks and Abbies which became Vacant, and the Dates for all ſorts of Benefices void by Death, which he granted to different Perſons at the ſame time for Money; he revoked all Grants of Reverſions, to make new ones, invented particular Clauſes of Proviſions, which annull'd all the former; he granted all ſorts of Diſpenſations and Pardons for Money: His Court was full of Apoſtate Monks, whom he made his Officers, or provided of Imployments and Benefices. For Money he gave licence to the Friars-Mendicants, to quit their Order and Convent, and to enjoy Benefices. He fully ſettled the Soveraign and Immediate Dominion of the Popes over the City of Rome: He reduced Perugia, Viterbo, Montefiaſco, and ſeveral other Towns, and Caſtles, under the Power of the Popes; Rebuilt the Caſtle of St. Angelo, and reſtored the Capitol. He impoſed many Tributes and Taxes, and had a Troop of Regular Guards. He re-inſtated ſome Cardinals, whom his Predeceſſor had degraded, and among others the Cardinal of St. Cecily. The Cardinal Pileus de Prato, who had deſerted his Predeceſſor, and went to Clement, came to wait on him, and was Nick-named, The Cardinal with Three Caps. He crowned the King of Sicily, Ladiſlaus Son of Charles Duras, after he had given Abſolution both to him, and his Mother and Siſter, from the Cenſures thundred out againſt him by Urban.

Lewis Duke of Anjou, Crowned King of Sicily, by Clement.

Clement on the other ſide, crown'd King of Sicily, Lewis the Duke of Anjou, in the preſence of Charles VI. who was come to Avignon, to give his Holineſs a Viſit, and proceeded againſt Boniface, as an Uſurper of the Holy See. Lewis Duke of Anjou newly crowned marched with a good Number of Troops into the Kingdom of Naples, was received into that City; and after having ſecur'd the principal Places of the Country, he return'd to Provence. Upon his departure, Ladiſlaus entring the Kingdom with a Powerful Army, led by Alberic Barbiane, expelled thence all ſuch as took part with the Duke of Anjou.

The Advice of the Univerſity, for taking away the Schiſm.

The Univerſity of Paris highly concern'd at theſe Diſorders, occaſioned by the Schiſm, and the Attempts which Pope Clement made upon the Liberties of the Gallican Church; Petitioned the King, that he would apply ſome Remedy to theſe Evils. A while after, two Monks of the Order of Carthuſians going to Rome to wait on Boniface, exhorted him ſo vehemently to Peace, that they drew from him a Letter directed to the King, wherein he encourages his Majeſty to ſet about the Work, offering on his part to contribute thereto. Clement having notice of this Negotiation, was forthwith for the Arreſting of theſe two Carthuſians; but the King having taken them into his Protection, he pretended likewiſe he was for Peace, and order'd Publick Prayers to be made upon this Occaſion. He ſent at the ſame time into France, Cardinal Peter de la Lune. He was no ſooner arrived there, but the Univerſity began afreſh their earneſt Suit to the King for the Peace of the Church; to which his Majeſty declared the means ought to be ſought out. For this purpoſe, a Meeting of the Univerſity was Appointed, wherein they gave their Opinions by way of Scrutiny, and the greater part was of this Judgment, That the Methods of yielding, and Arbitration, would be the ſureſt to put an end to the Differences between the two Popes. The Univerſity having made known his Reſolution to the Cardinal-Legate, he anſwered them roughly; and forbid them for the time to come to uſe any the like Diſcourſes. The Pope to appeaſe them, deſired the King to ſend to him Peter d' Ailly, and Giles des Champs, Doctors of Divinity, of great Repute; but they refuſed to go to him. The Legate engaged the Duke of Berry in the Intereſts of Clement; he declared againſt the Univerſity, and put a ſtop to their Proſecutions: They had recourſe to the Duke of Burgundy, who procured them Audience from the King, to whom they preſented a Letter; wherein they moſt humbly beſought him to conſider ſeriouſly of the Peace of the Church; repreſenting to him, that the Univerſity had thought of Three principal Means of compaſſing it; Firſt, the way of Ceſſion, that each of the Competitors ſhould recede from all Right. A Second, the way of Arbitration, whereby they ſhould referr their Right to Perſons nominated by themſelves, or others, who might abſolutely decide their Differences. The Third is, the calling of a General Council; declaring, That if either of the Competitors accepted not of one of theſe three Expedients, he ſhould be looked on as a Promoter of Schiſm. And as to what might be demanded touching the laſt Article, which gives Authority to a General Council; the Univerſity anſwers, that it is the conſent of all the Faithful, and the words of JESUS CHRIST in the Goſpel, whereby he Promiſes to them, who ſhall meet together in his Name, the Aſſiſtance of his Holy Spirit. The King attended by ſeveral Princes, the Patriarch of Alexandria, and a great number of other Prelates, received this Letter, heard it Read, commanded it ſhould be Tranſlated into French, and told the Univerſity he would anſwer them in a little time; but Peter de la Lune prevailed ſo much, by his Credit, that the King alter'd his Reſolution; inſomuch, that when they return'd, the Chancellor was order'd to tell them from the King, That his Majeſty had no further Intention to purſue this Affair; and gave them a Prohibition to make any mention of it, upon pain of Diſobedience. The Univerſity diſſatisfied, gave the Chancellor to underſtand in preſence of the Legate, who went back again ſoon after, That they would leave off their Exerciſes, and Preaching: They wrote at the ſame time to Clement, what they had reſolved in their Convocation, touching the Union of the Church. The Pope having received this Letter, was therewith very much offended, and would ſend no Anſwer by the Meſſenger of the Univerſity. The Cardinals met together without the Pope's Leave, who ſent to them, and upbraided them therewith. They anſwer'd him, That they had ſeen, and examin'd the Letter of the Univerſity, and that one of the Three Ways, which they propoſed, ought of Neceſſity to be choſen, if he aim'd at the Union of the Church. Clement conceived ſo great a Grief at theſe Propoſals, that he fell Sick, and died of an Apoplexy on the 16th. of September, in the Year 1394. By his Death ended the Male Line of the Earls of Geneva; which had never before happen'd in that Family. Imbert de Villars, Son of Clement's Siſter, ſucceeded in the Earldom of Geneva. The Death of Clement VII.

As ſoon as the King of France was informed of the Death of Clement, he called his Council together, who gave it as their Opinion, That it was fit for the good of the Church, the King ſhould write to the College of Cardinals, to Superſede the Election, till they underſtood his Mind by a ſpecial Ambaſſador. The King of Arragon wrote to the ſame Effect. The Univerſity of Paris took this Opportunity to beſeech the King to interpoſe for putting off the Election, till it were Agreed on, what Method might be taken to ſettle Union; to call an Aſſembly of the moſt famous Univerſities in his Kingdom, and the Magiſtrates of Cities, to provide for it; to write to Boniface then at Rome, and to the Chief of his Party, to oblige them to accept theſe Methods of Union, and to give Leave to the Univerſity to write to other Univerſities. The King yielded to their Requeſts, and ſignified to them that he was diſpleaſed with the intermiſſion of their Publick Lectures and Sermons, and order'd them to begin them again; which was done accordingly. The ſame day the King called his Council together, in which it was reſolved, that two Ambaſſadors ſhould be ſent to Avignon. Nevertheleſs, the Cardinals met to proceed to the Choice of a Pope, and entred into the Conclave to the Number of One and Twenty, on the 26th. of September: They received the King's firſt Letter before the Election; but ſuſpecting what were the Contents, they reſolved not to open it till the Choice were over. Nevertheleſs, before they entred upon it, they drew up an Inſtrument, which they all Subſcribed; whereby they Promiſed and Swore, that they would all uſe their Endeavours for Union; and that whoever of them were choſen Pope, ſhould procure it, by all kinds of Ways, even by that of Ceſſion, or Reſignation; if it were judged moſt convenient by the major part of the Cardinals. After this Proteſtation, they choſe on the 28th. of the ſame Month, Peter de la Lune, Native of Arragon, Cardinal-Deacon of the title of St. Mary in Coſmedin, Pope, who was named Benedict XII. or XIII. ordain'd Prieſt by the Cardinal of Præneſte on the 3d. of October, and crown'd by the Biſhop of Oſtia, on the 11th. of the ſame Month. He was no ſooner advanced to this Dignity, but he took a reſolution to keep it, and acted as one that would continue always Pope. Nevertheleſs to ſhew, that he deſired Peace, he ſent to the King of France the Biſhop of Avignon, and Peter Plan, to acquaint him with his Election, and to add, that he accepted the Papacy very unwillingly, and that he was ready to procure the Peace of the Church, by all Methods which ſhould be judged reaſonable. The Univerſity ſent Deputies to him to exhort him to Union; to whom he made anſwer, That he was as ready to reſign, as he was to put off his Cope; which he immediately pull'd off. He made the ſame anſwer to Peter d'Ailly, Envoy from the King; ſo that in all likelihood, it would not be his Fault if the Schiſm were not ſoon ended. The Election of Benedict XII. at Avignon, in ſpite of the King of France.

Charles the VIth. appointed a Meeting of the Prelates of his Kingdom. It was there concluded unanimouſly, that the Reſignation of the two Antagoniſts was the beſt Expedient, utterly to aboliſh the Schiſm; and to effect this, the King ſent to Benedict an Honourable Embaſſy, conſiſting of his Uncles, John Duke of Berry, and Philip Duke of Burgundy, and his Brother Lewis Duke of Orleans, accompanied with the Biſhops of Senlis, Poictiers, and Arras, and ſeveral Lords, to whom it was given in Charge to demand this Reſignation, as the moſt proper way to ſettle the Peace of the Church. Benedict received them with due reſpect; but anſwer'd not their Propoſal, but in general terms, and offer'd himſelf another Expedient, which was, that the two Competitors ſhould come to a ſafe place, near the Kingdom of France, under Protection of the King; and there the two Colleges of Cardinals being Aſſembled ſhould ſearch into ways of Accommodation. The Ambaſſadors rejected this Offer, and inſiſted upon yielding up their Right. All the Cardinals, except Cardinal de Pampelune, were for the Ceſſion. The Pope ſtood firm, and after ſeveral Conferences, ſet out a Bull, by which he declared his Reſolution to meet his Adverſary, and his College in an unintereſted place, to find out a way of Accommodation; and in caſe this could not be done, he was ready to embrace all reputable and juſt ways to terminate this Difference, provided God and the Church be not therewith offended. The Ambaſſadors not ſatisfied with this Anſwer, had a meeting in the Convent of the Cordeliers, or Grey-Friars at Avignon, where Eighteen Cardinals met the Delegates of the Univerſity of Paris, who all declared for the Ceſſion. The Cardinals exhorted Benedict thereto; but he perſiſted in his Reſolution, and forbad them to Sign the Inſtrument, which the French Ambaſſadors had preſented, or to hearken to any other Propoſal, than what he had made. The Ambaſſadors and Cardinals made him yet freſh Petitions, to bring him over to this way of yielding; but 'twas all to no purpoſe, and the Ambaſſadors went away without obtaining it. The King zealouſly deſiring to procure the Union of the Church, was not diſcouraged by this Refuſal, and reſolved according to the Advice of the Univerſity, to ſend Ambaſſadors to other Chriſtian Kings and Princes, that they would joyn with him to procure a Union. The Univerſity very hot in this Quarrel, publiſh'd an Act of Appeal concerning all, which might be tranſacted by Benedict and his Adherents, to the next only, true and univerſal Pope, or to the Apoſtolick Holy See. Benedict ſet forth a Bull againſt this Act; notwithſtanding which, the Univerſity renewed their Appeal, and anſwer'd to Benedict's Bull, that many Popes had been rejected, or depoſed; that Popes The Aſſembly of the Prelates of France, which were for the way of Ceſſion. Benedict rejects the way of Ceſſion. An Act of Appeal by the Univerſity.

Popes have corrected one the other, and revoked the Decrees of their Predeceſſors, as Clement V. had revoked the Decretal of Boniface VIII. againſt which the King, the Lords and Prelates of the Kingdom had likewiſe brought an Appeal. This ſecond Act of Appeal being come to the Cogniſance of Benedict, he publiſhed a new Bull; wherein he Excommunicated all ſuch as ſhould appeal from him or his Succeſſors. The Univerſity continuing their Proſecution, met at Mathurins, and declared afreſh, the way by Ceſſion to be the beſt. Seventeen Cardinals wrote likewiſe to the King, that they approved of this Expedient. While theſe things paſſed in France, the Ambaſſadors, whom the King had diſpatched to all the Courts of Chriſtendom, perſwaded the greater part of the Princes, that the way taken in France, to put an end to the Schiſm, was the beſt and the ſureſt; ſo that they joined their earneſt Deſires to thoſe of the King of France, to oblige the two Competitors to conſent to it.

A Subſtraction from the Obedience of both the Contenders declared and publiſh'd in France.

The Univerſity finding Benedict to remain obſtinate in his Opinion, propoſed to the King, the withdrawing of Obedience. The King after he had waited a while, Aſſembled the Prelates and Univerſities of his Kingdom to conſult upon this Matter. The Meeting was held the 22. of May, in the Year 1398. The King falling Sick, could not be preſent; but the Dukes, of Berri, Burgundy, Orleans, and Bourbon; in whoſe preſence the Patriarch of Alexandria recounted the Story of the Schiſm from its beginning, ſhewed, that Benedict had Sworn before his Election, that he would do his utmoſt for Peace, coming even up to the way of Ceſſion: He ſet forth all the King had done to procure the Peace of the Church, and the Oppoſition made by Benedict. He declared, That the way of Ceſſion had been approved, not only by the King of France; but moreover, by the Kings of Hungary, Bohemia, England, Arragon, Caſtile, Navarre, and Sicily; and concluded, That it was the Intention of the King to purſue this way, and to procure Union by this means. The Biſhop of Maſcon, ſeconded by Six Doctors, ſpake there for Benedict. The Queſtion was debated for Eight Hours, and the Aſſembly adjourn'd to the Month of July. The Opinions were divided; Some gave it for a general Subſtraction, others for a particular, in what concern'd the Donation of Benefices. Some maintain'd, That ſuch as obeyed Boniface, ought to do the ſame on his account. The Princes propounded yet once more to give Benedict notice, before they came to this Extremity. The Archbiſhop of Tours, the Biſhop of Puy, and the Univerſity of Tholouſe were againſt the Subſtraction; which nevertheleſs was followed by the greater Number. The King being recovered, made the Opinions to be counted up to him, and judged they ought to comply with the Major part, and gave order to the Chancellor, to publiſh the Subſtraction. The Chancellor made Report of the King's Reſolution to the Aſſembly, and declared, That they ſhould wholly withdraw themſelves from the Obedience of Benedict, till he accepted the way of Ceſſion; nevertheleſs that it was not the King's intent, the Gallican Church ſhould be deprived of her ancient Liberties. The Sunday following, there was a Solemn Proceſſion to St. Genivieve, where the Subſtraction was publiſhed by Giles de Champs, who then Preach'd; after that, the Chancellor order'd Letters of Subſtraction, Dated the 27th. of July, wherein the King, after having laid open his earneſt Endeavours to purchaſe the Peace of the Church, and the refuſal of Benedict to perform his Oath, he declares, That he ordered not the Subſtraction, till he had Communicated it to the Chriſtian Princes, who had Agreed to the way of Ceſſion; That the King of Caſtile, likewiſe had already put it in Execution; That this Proceeding was neither extraordinary, nor without Precedent; That many Clergymen for leſs Cauſe, had renounced Communion with Anaſtaſius; That Guy Archbiſhop of Vienna, who was after Calixtus II. with his Prelates of the Council of Vienna, had reſolved to withdraw their Obedience from Pope Paſchal II. That for greater Reaſon under the preſent Circumſtances, where there was a notorious Scandal, a Schiſm formed and fomented by the Ambition of two Competitors, it was ſeaſonable to apply this Remedy. Upon this Ground he declares, That himſelf, the Church, the Clergy, and the People of his Kingdom, do wholly withdraw from the Obedience of Benedict, and his Adverſary, of whom he ſaid nothing, becauſe he never had obeyed him; and enjoins his Subjects not to obey him, nor pay any thing to him, Orders, that henceforward Benefices, which are Elective, ſhall be ſupplied by way of Election, and others by the gift of the Ordinaries, to whom the filling of them up does of right belong. And as to the Benefices held by the Adherents, or Partiſans of the Competitors, the Ordinaries ſhould hold them in Commendam, till they can be Canonically provided for.

i. e. Withdrawing Obedience to the Pope.

The ſame day the King wrote to the Cardinals, to inform them what he had done, and to exhort them to join with him in the execution of this good Work. He likewiſe publiſhed other Letters, wherein he declared, That he intended not during this Subſtraction to enrich himſelf with the Advantages, Profits, and other Dues, which the Popes, or their Officers, are accuſtomed to take; he Diſcharged the Collectors of them, and order'd, That the Elections, Demands, and Grants of Benefices, ſhould be gratuitous, and without Charge. He injoined the Apoſtolick Notaries to ſet down the Dates of Acts, which ſhould paſs for the future, in theſe words, Ab electione Domini Benedicti ultimo in Papam electi anno, &c. and not, Anno Pontificatus Domini noſtri Papæ, &c. The Abby of St. Denys becoming Vacant at this time, the Monks Aſſembled by the King's Leave, choſe Philip de Villette, whoſe Election was confirmed by the Biſhop of Paris, and the ſame thing was practiſed in other Elective Benefices. The Kings of Caſtile and Navarre, the Queen of Sicily, and many other Princes, and free Towns followed the Example of France, and decreed likewiſe the Subſtraction, and Eighteen Cardinals alſo made an Act of the like Subſtraction. Benedict not being able to make them alter their Reſolution lution by his Censures, design'd to order them to be Arrested; they withdrew to Villa-nova in the King's Dominions, and called Mareschal Baucicaut to their Assistance, who Besieged Benedict in his Castle of Avignon. The Brother of Benedict defended himself Valiantly, and at length the Siege was raised by a Treaty, and the Prisoners on both Sides released. The Cardinals of Poictiers, Tury, and Saluces came to wait on the King, to desire him in the Name of the Sacred College, to seize into his hands the Person of Benedict, to cause that the Princes under the Obedience of Boniface might likewise make a Substraction, and a General Council be held: They besought him also to advise the King of Arragon, not to afford any Succour nor retreat to Benedict, to maintain them in their Rights, to order their Pensions to be paid them, to secure to their Followers the Benefices promised them before the Substraction, not to dispose of the Dignities, which should become Vacant till one only Pope were chosen, and to reserve the Revenues of them for defraying the Charges, which must arise in the Prosecution of the Union. The Chancellor gave Answer to the Cardinals, That the King had resolved to hold an Assembly, on the 20th. of February, wherein he would take advice about their Demands: But there was no further mention made of them; and the King very backward in Arresting Benedict, order'd Mareschal Baucicaut, not to prosecute the War against him; and only to take care, that he went not out of Avignon, with the Treasure of the Church. Nevertheless, Cardinal Pampelune, and another named Boniface, who remained faithful to Benedict, designing to make their Escape in Disguise were Arrested by Baucicaut, who put them into such a harsh Prison, that one of them died there, and the other after having Suffered very much, was forced to pay a great Ransom.

Though the King had ordered his Troops to withdraw, Benedict was under a continual distrust of the Cardinals, and the Inhabitants of Avignon; which made him resolve to Promise the King's Ambassadors, that in case the Usurper (Boniface) should resign, die, or be expell'd, he would resign; that they might proceed to the Choice of a Third Person, on condition the King would put a stop to the Actions of those of Avignon, and the Cardinals, promising he would disarm his Party: He further engaged to be present at the Assembly to be held for the Union of the Church, in case the King would grant him his Protection for an Hundred Persons of his Retinue, and furnish them with Necessaries, not hereby at all to prejudice the Substraction, which he had Published. When Benedict had Sworn to observe these Articles, the Ambassadors of the King delivered to him the Patent, by which he took him under his Protection, and put him into the Custody of the Archbishop of Narbonne, the Presidents of Beauvais and Provence, and two other Lords, and obliged the Cardinals, and People of Avignon, to Promise, that they would make no manner of Attempt upon either the Person, or Goods of Benedict. upon condition he would Disarm, and order the Garison that was in the City to march out. Benedict not thinking those named for his Guard strong enough to defend him; demanded, That the King would consent to give him the Duke of Orleans: But his Majesty judged it not fit to send his Brother so far off, and permitted him only to Name the Guards under his Authority, to defend the Person of Benedict. The King foreseeing that, the Year following, which was the Year 1400. the Jubilee might draw many of his Subjects to Rome, who would carry Money thither, forbad them to go, and confirmed the Decree of Substraction, and the voiding all Grants of Benefices in Reversion.

The Substraction taken off on certain Conditions.

The Princes of Germany, and the King of Arragon, Agreed not to the Substraction, nor to the way of Cession; and in France it self the Duke of Orleans disapproved it; and maintain'd strongly against the Dukes of Berry and Burgundy, that the Schism was more tolerable, than to have no Pope at all; and that it was great Injustice to keep Benedict in Confinement. The University of Paris preached up the contrary; but that of Tholouse was of the same Opinion with the Duke of Orleans, and declared themselves to the King against the Substraction. The Ambassadors of Castile complain'd of the Restraint of Benedict, and the Substraction; and the Bishop of S. Pons spake of it to the King with freedom. The Cardinals alter'd their Judgment about the Substraction, and bethought themselves of being reconciled to Benedict. Lewis of Anjou King of Sicily, declared likewise for him, Swore Obedience to him, and promised him his Assistance. In fine, Benedict found means to escape from the Castle of Avignon, and set himself at Liberty; after which he reconciled himself to the Cardinals, reduced the People of Avignon to Obedience, and at last sent to the King of France, the Cardinals of Poictiers and Saluces, to put him upon revoking the Substraction. They had Audience of the King on the 15th. of May 1403. in which the Cardinal of Poictiers being Spokesman, represented to the King, That the Substraction had brought no good to the Church; That the Cardinals had closed with it, only for Peace sake, and having found it of no use, they were re-united to their Head; That his Majesty ought to do the same upon the assurance, that Benedict gives way for all things to be done, which the King and his Council should judge fit. The King made Answer, That he was about calling the Bishops of his Kingdom, to conclude, what is to be done. The Agents of the Universities of Orleans, Angers, Montpellier and Tholouse, were of the Cardinals Mind; and said, That they never had approved of the Substraction. That of Paris was divided by the Contentions of the great Lords who were of different Parties. Cardinal Turi, Cramault Patriarch of Alexandria, and some Bishops, who took part with the Dukes of Berry and Burgundy, opposed the disannulling of the Substraction. The others siding with the Duke of Orleans, pursued with heat the restitution of Obedience. This Prince to effect it, assembled on the 28th. of May, the Prelates and the University in in the Hoſpital of St. Paul, where the King reſided, and having collected their Votes in the abſence of the Dukes of Berry and Burgundy; he found, that thoſe, who were for the reſtitution of Obedience, were the major part: went forthwith together with ſome Prelates to inform the King thereof, and engaged him to declare himſelf of this Opinion, and to Swear an intire reſtitution of Obedience to Benedict. The Dukes of Berry and Burgundy, were at firſt diſſatisfied with what had paſſed; but the former of the two next day came over, having ſeen the Articles, which the Duke of Orleans promiſed the Pope ſhould perform: To effect this reſtitution of Obedience, with ſome kind of order, on the 30th. of the ſame Month, he contrived an Aſſembly of the Prelates, and other Clergymen in the Manſion-Houſe of the Duke of Berry, where the Chancellor, in preſence of the Dukes of Berry and Burgundy, lay'd open what had paſſed, the Reſolution which the King had taken, and the Articles, which Monſieur the Duke of Orleans had undertaken to oblige Benedict to comply with; which were, 1. To conſent to a Ceſſion, in caſe his Adverſary did the ſame, happen'd to Die, or were Expelled. 2. To revoke all he had done againſt the way of Ceſſion, and the Proceſſes made upon occaſion of the Subſtraction. 3. To confirm all the Grants, and Promotions made during the Subſtraction. 4. To call a General Council for the Peace of the Church, and the moderating the Impoſitions, which the Court of Rome Levies upon the Gallican Church, according to the Judgment of Perſons, whom the King ſhall ſend thither for that purpoſe. The Chancellor demanded of the Aſſembly, if there were any thing elſe to be added? The greater part declared, they were ready to obey what the King had determined: Some few ſaid, They would firſt conſult with the Biſhops of their Provinces. Thereupon the King ſent to the Princes to come to him, and enjoined them to follow him to the Church of Our Lady; whither he went accompanied with the Princes, and a great Number of Prelates and Deputies. He there heard Maſs ſaid by the Biſhop of Preneſte, and a Sermon preached by Peter d'Ailly, Biſhop of Cambray, who publiſhed by his Order, the reſtitution of Obedience to Benedict; and the Articles which the Duke of Orleans promiſed he ſhould perform. The King the ſame day Sign'd certain Letters Patents, by which he enjoined all his Subjects to obey Benedict the XIIth. as they were wont to do preceding Popes; but theſe Letters were not Regiſtred in Parliament, till the Month of June, in the Year following. The Univerſity being met, after ſome Debates, reſolved at laſt to do, as the King deſired, on condition Benedict ſhould perform what he promiſed; but there lay the difficulty to make Benedict agree to it. Ambaſſadors were diſpatched to him for that purpoſe, to whom he gave no Poſitive Anſwer; and the Duke of Orleans himſelf going to him, was a long time without being able to obtain any thing of him. Inſomuch, that the King was forced on the 19th. of December, to ſet forth a Declaration, wherein he ordered all ſuch as had been provided of Benefices in his Kingdom during the Subſtraction, ſhould be maintain'd in Poſſeſſion without paying any Impoſition.

Propoſals of Union made to Boniface.

Nevertheleſs, Benedict, willing to make it appear that he was well inclined to the Peace of the Church, ſent to Rome in the Year 1404. the Biſhop of St. Pons, and other Ambaſſadors unto Boniface, to propoſe an interview, together with their Cardinals in a place to be agreed on; to the intent they might conſult of means of Union, and procuring the Peace of the Church. The Cardinals of Boniface were very much inclined to hearken to this Propoſal; but Boniface received it with diſdain, and anſwer'd theſe Ambaſſadors, That their Maſter was an Anti-Pope, with whom he would not treat. The Ambaſſadors, offended with this foul Language, which he gave them, told him, That their Maſter was no Simoniſt; thereby inſinuating the ſhameful Traffick Boniface made of Benefices. This reply incenſed him, and he commanded them to depart from Rome; and theſe Ambaſſadors having made anſwer, That they had a Paſsport, whoſe Date was not as yet expired, Boniface was enraged to that degree, that he fell Sick, and died in three days after, on the Firſt of October. The Captain of the Caſtle of St. Angelo, a Kinſman to Boniface, Arreſted the Ambaſſadors of Benedict, and ſuffered them not to depart, but at the entreaty of the Cardinals, and upon the Payment of a great Ranſom. Theſe Ambaſſadors before they departed, conjured the Cardinals to forbear an Election, aſſuring them, that if they did it, they ſhould quickly hear good News from their Maſter, and that the Peace of the Church might eaſily be re-eſtabliſhed; But theſe Cardinals, without regarding their Demand, entred into the Conclave to chooſe a Succeſſor to Boniface, and on the 12th. of October in the Year 1404. choſe Coſmatus Melioratus of Sulmo, Cardinal-Prieſt of the title of the Holy Croſs of Jeruſalem, having taken an Oath, That whoever of them were elected Pope, he ſhould yield up the Papacy, to attain to a Union, in caſe that Peter de la Lune likewiſe renounced his right. The new Pope took the Name of Innocent VII. He was very much croſſed in the beginning of his Papacy, by the Faction of the Gibelines, which were at Rome, who were deſirous to re-eſtabliſh the freedom of their City, and reſtore the Government of it to Magiſtrates nominated by the People, as it had been practiſed, before they yielded it up to Boniface. The Guelphs on the contrary maintained, That it was more Advantageous for the People to be governed by the Church, than by the Citizens. This Quarrel occaſioned a Civil War in Rome. The Gibelines drew to their Aid Ladiſlaus King of Apulia; who willing to make Advantage of this Opportunity, called upon the Pope to Surrender the Temporal Dominion of the City of Rome, together with the Caſtles and Fortifications, to the Roman People. Innocent to bring him over to his Side, gave him the Government of Campania, and made him Umpire of his Quarrel with the Gibelines; who ordered it ſo, that the Gibelines were put in Poſſeſſion of the Capitol, and and the Government of the City yielded to the Magiſtrates, who were to be nominated by the Pope, to whom he reſerved the Bridges and the Gates, whereof he was in Poſſeſſion. After this Agreement Innocent was Crowned. The Peace laſted not long, for the Magiſtrates, who governed the City of Rome, ſecretly encouraged by Ladiſlaus, who had a Mind to make himſelf Maſter of this City, made divers Attempts againſt the Pope contrary to the Treaty. The Nephew of Innocent, named Lewis Melioratus, to revenge himſelf, ſurrounded them one day as they went out of Rome; and having Taken them, put them to Death. This barbarous Action cauſed a general Revolt of the People, which obliged the Pope, the Cardinals and the whole Court forthwith to leave Rome, and eſcape to Viterbo. Ladiſlaus on his part, preſently ſent an Earl to ſeize the Supream Power of Rome; but the Romans would not ſuffer it, took up Arms to defend their Liberty, beſieged the Capitol, and in a ſhort time drove out the Partiſans of this King, recalled Innocent, and received him gladly.

Projects of Union between the two Adverſaries.

While theſe things were acted in Italy, Benedict pretended continually to deſire Union; and offered, in order to obtain it, to go into Italy. He granted in ſhew to the King the Propoſitions which the Duke of Orleans had made for him, who brought back Bulls in manner and form, which implied the Confirmation of them, in conſequence of which the King in the Month of June 1405. publiſhed a Declaration, whereby he confirmed afreſh the reſtitution of the Obedience, and revoked his Patents of the 19th. December, of the preceding Year: He alſo ſent to Benedict the Archbiſhop of Auſch, and the Archdeacon of Paris to aſſure him, in his Name, and the Name of the Queen, and the Dauphin his Son, of his Friendſhip. Some time after, Benedict took up a reſolution to go to Genoa; but to enable him for this Journey, he levied the tenth Penny on the Revenues of the Gallican Church, and on the other Churches under his Obedience. The Univerſity of Paris zealouſly oppoſed him in it, and it alone was exempted. The King nevertheleſs by his Letters Patents, of 28th. of February, in the Year 1405. forbid the Payment of Firſt Fruits and other Impoſitions, which the Officers of Benedict levied in the Kingdom. Innocent on his part wrote into France, that it was not his Fault, that the Peace of the Church is not ſettled; that his Predeceſſor, and he had never rejected the way of Ceſſion; but that the Ambaſſadors of Benedict had never offer'd it. Ambaſſadors were ſent to him, who found him well enough inclined to Peace; nevertheleſs Benedict paſſed into Italy, and came to Genoa, from whence he ſent Cardinal Challant Legate into France, to contradict the Deſign of the Princes, who had reſolved upon the way of Ceſſion.

The Univerſity procures the Subſtraction to be renewed.

The Univerſity perceiving that Benedict acted not ſincerely for the Union, demanded the Subſtraction afreſh; that the Letter of thoſe of Tholouſe ſhould be Condemned, as Injurious, and that the Gallican Church be deliver'd from the Exactions introduced by the Court of Rome. This Affair was referred to the Parliament of Paris, which by an Ordinance of 17. July 1406. condemned the Letter of the Univerſity of Tholouſe; and by a Second of the 11th. of September, the ſame Year, ordained, That for the time to come, the Gallican Church ſhould be exempted from all Aids, Tenths, Procuration-Fees and other Inventions brought in by the Court of Rome. As to what concern'd the Subſtraction, the Affair was put off to the Aſſembly of the Prelates of the Realm, which was called about Martlemas. Twelve Divines, and Canoniſts were named to defend the Right of the Pope, and as many on the ſide of the Univerſity, to ſhew the Neceſſity of the Subſtraction: They diſputed a long time Pro and Con before the Dauphin, the Princes, and the Lords of the Council. Several Queſtions were diſcuſſed there with heat, touching the Power, and Attempts of Popes; and in fine, after many Debates, it was reſolved in the Council, That it was Neceſſary to call a General Council, to reform the Church, as well in her Head, as her Members; and yet in the mean time they would order a Subſtraction from the Obedience of Peter de la Lune, called Benedict; That the Church of France ſhould be reſtored to her ancient Liberties; and that for ſupplying of Benefices, it ſhould be done in the ſame Method, as during the Subſtraction. This was Decreed on the 21ſt. of December, in the Year 1406.

The Death of Innocent VII. and Election of Gregory XII.

At the ſame time came the News of the Death of Innocent VII. who departed at Rome, the 6th. of November. The Cardinals under his Obedience, who were then preſent at Rome to the Number of Fourteen, debated, whether they ſhould proceed to, or put off the Election of a new Pope; but at laſt they concluded to chooſe one, upon condition, that he ſhould renounce the Papacy, as ſoon as his Adverſary ſhould do the like. The Ambaſſador of the Republick of Florence exhorted them to delay it: But they made Anſwer, That they could not do it, but that they would make him ſenſible who ſhould be choſen, that he had rather the quality of a Proctor, to lay down the Papacy, than that of Supream Biſhop. And, indeed, they all Signed an Inſtrument by which they obliged themſelves, that whoſoever of them ſhould be choſen, ſhould reſign the Papacy, abſolutely and ſincerely, provided the Anti-Pope did the ſame thing on his part, and that the Anti-Cardinals would proceed in Conjunction with them, to the Choice of a new Lawful Pope, and that ſoon after the Election, he ſhould write to the King of the Romans, to the Anti-Pope, and his College, to the King of France, and to other Princes, and People of Chriſtendom, that he was ready to recede for Peace ſake; and in the mean time, while Endeavours were uſing to promote this Union, he would create no Cardinals. After they had Signed this Writing, they choſe a Venetian called Angelus de Corario; who took the Name of Gregory XII. He wrote a civil Letter to Benedict, to exhort him to put an end to the Schiſm, by renouncing the Papacy, as he was ready to do on his part, to the intent the Cardinals of the two Colleges, might with common Consent choose a Lawful Pope, signifying to him at the same time, that he should make no Cardinals, unless it were to equal the Number of those of his College, on condition he would not make any on his part. He wrote likewise to the same Effect unto all Christian Princes. Benedict about the end of January, in the Year 1407. writ a very civil Answer to Gregory's Letter, wherein he signified to him his no less desire to procure Union and Peace; but before the making of a Cession, he wished, that the two Colleges might meet in one place, to the end they might put in their hands the Instrument of Renunciation. He promised him in conclusion to observe the Condition he had prescribed him, to make no Cardinals. Gregory solemnly renewed his Promise on the day of his Coronation, and sent three Ambassadors to Benedict, namely, Anthony his Nephew, whom he made Bishop of Bononia; Guillin Bishop of Todi his Treasurer, who was a Norman; and Anthony de Butrio, a Bononian Doctor of Law, to treat of the Method to put in Execution the proposed Union: They agreed, That the two Antagonists should meet in the Month of September, at Savona, with the Cardinals of both Colleges, to end this Business about Michaelmas; and they drew up a Form of a Treaty consisting of sundry Articles.

While these things were Transacting between the two contending Popes, the King of France having confirmed the Resolution of the Assembly, settled the Elections, voided the Grants of Reversions, the reserved Rents, the Fees of Procuration, First Fruits, and other Impositions of the Court of Rome, published on the 12th. of January, in the Year 1407. Letters Patents of Obedience to neither of the Competitors, if they yielded not up before Ascension-Day; which were confirmed by a Declaration of the 18th. of February in the same Year. He nominated at the same time several Persons of Note, as well Laymen, as Churchmen, to attend Gregory and Benedict, and oblige them to make Peace. They conferred with the Ambassadors of Gregory at Aix, and having found them inclined to the Cession; they went after that to Benedict, who made them an Harangue in Publick, wherein he promised to give up; but being pressed to engage for the doing of it by a Bull, he refused it; so that the Ambassadors went away dissatisfied, without making nevertheless any mention of the Substraction; some of them tarried at Marseilles, others went unto Gregory to Rome, and some return'd to the King, to make Report to him of what had passed. Nevertheless, the Ambassadors of Gregory being come to Paris, imparted to the King the good Intentions of their Master; and declared it should not be his Fault, if the Union were not suddenly concluded. The King defray'd their Charges, during their stay at Paris, received them kindly, and dismissed them with Letters to Gregory, and to the Cardinals at Rome, to exhort them to continue firm in their good Resolution. The Genoeses and those of Savona, sent Deputies to Gregory, to give him all manner of assurance, and to Congratulate him upon the future Union. The Ambassadors of France arrived at Rome on the 5th. of July; but they found Gregory had altered his Mind by the Counsels of Ladislaus, and his Nephew, who diverted him from the Cession for their private Interests: and so seeking to evade it, he answer'd the Ambassadors of France, That whatever desire he had to finish the Union, he could not possibly repair to Savona; because he thought it not a safe place, and he had no Gallies to convey him thither, the Venetians having denied to lend him any; and that he was not able to travel thither by Land. The Ambassadors offer'd to furnish him with Gallies from Genoa, and all manner of assurance of Safety; and declared, That it was not the King's Design to transferr the See to Avignon, but only to procure the Peace of the Church. They had many Conferences with Gregory upon this Subject, but they could not bring him to a Resolution of going to Savona; and all that he promised them was, that he would go to Petra-Santa, where he would confer face to face with Benedict. The Ambassadors not able to draw any other Answer from Gregory, came to Genoa; from whence on the 21d. of August, they wrote a Letter full of Reflections, and went next to Marseilles, where they related to Benedict, what they had done. He would not consent to change the place of interview, and to make it appear, it was not his Fault, that the Treaty went not on, he repaired to Savona.

Gregory and Benedict shift off the Cession.

Sometime after the departure of the Ambassadors of France, the City of Rome feared to be surprized by the Colonni, and the Followers of Ladislaus, who held Correspondence with Gregory: But Paul Ursini having defeated them, and taken the Heads of the Conspiracy Prisoners, Gregory who was retired to the Castle of St. Angelo, testified his Joy for it, and rewarded Paul Ursini, by enlarging the term of time in his Possession of the Earldom of Narni, which was given him for a certain space by Innocent VII. After this Gregory left Rome to go to Viterbo, giving it out, that he took this Journey to conclude the Union. When he was arrived at Viterbo, the Cardinals pressed him to repair to Savona, to procure the Union; and because he seemed to be detained only upon the score of his three Nephews, whom he had a Mind to preferr, they consented he should give them the Lands of the Church, and reserve for himself the Patriarchship of Constantinople, the Archbishoprick of York in England, and two other Bishopricks in the State of Venice. Notwithstanding they had granted him these Advantages, he still was very backward to go to Savona, whither Benedict and his Cardinals were already come, and tarried some time at Sienna, to which place he went, upon his leaving Viterbo; from thence he went next to Lucca. The Ambassadors of the Christian Princes, and the Deputies of the People of Italy importuned Gregory and Benedict to agree at length upon a place of Interview. They wrote likewise to and fro to one another, and propounded divers Places, and divers Expedients; but agreed upon nothing, having in truth no Design either of them to quit the Papacy, whatever ever Testimony they gave, that they would do it; but that which utterly dashed all hopes of a Union was the Entrance of Ladislaus into the City of Rome, of which he made himself Master on the 25th. of April 1408. This News very much rejoiced Gregory and his Nephews; and Ladislaus sent word to his Ambassadors, who were with the Pope, to let his Holiness know, that he was unwilling the Union should go forward, unless he were there in Person for the maintaining of his Rights. Gregory finding himself backt by Ladislaus, no longer observed any means, and nominated four new Cardinals, whereof two were his Nephews. The Cardinals incensed at the Actions of Gregory, deserted him: John Cardinal of Liege, a Norman, was the first that left him: His Goods were soon Plunder'd by the Pope's Nephews: The other Cardinals followed his Example, and by degrees the Pope was left alone with his four Cardinals, in spite of the Prohibitions which he made the Cardinals not to leave him, and the Censures, he pronounced against them, to which they opposed Writings, whereby they render'd his Conduct odious.

The Cardinals withdrawing from Gregory.

The First Act which they made, being come to Pisa, was an Act of Appeal the 15th. of May, from the Three Orders which Gregory had made at Lucca. 1. Not to depart that City without his Leave. 2. Not to meet together. 3. Not to have any Communication with the Ambassadors of Peter de la Lune, or the French. They make appear the Injustice of these Decrees, and Appeal from them to a Pope better informed, to JESUS CHRIST, to a General Council, and to the next Pope. On the day after, they directed a Circular Letter, to the Princes and Prelates of Christendom; wherein they set forth, That having observed Gregory to evade the Union, that he would have made an Attempt upon their Persons, that he had forbid them to have any Communication with the Ambassadors of Peter de la Lune, and the King of France, and in fine, that he had created Cardinals; they withdrew on the 11th. of the Month from the City of Lucca, and were come to Pisa, with Design to promote the Union of the Church, and exhort them to agree to their Design.

The Cardinals Act of Appeal.

Gregory on his part, order'd Proceedings by Cardinal Anthony his Nephew, and his Chamberlain, whom he made a Commissioner on that behalf, against the Cardinals, the other Prelates and Officers of the Court of Rome, who were at Pisa, who published two Mandates, the one on the 17th. of May, the other the 16th. of June, by which he order'd, That all such, as return'd not to Lucca by a time prefix'd, should be deprived of all their Dignities, and Benefices: Which Punishment he declared, they had incurred, by his Sentence pronounced on the Third of July, and Posted up the Day following. The Cardinals and Officers of the Court of Rome appealed from these Proceedings, and declared by an Act made at Leghorn, the First of July, That it was Necessary to withdraw from the Obedience of Gregory; That all his Adherents and Favourers, carried on the Schism; That all the Warrants and Grants, and in general whatever he had done as Pope, is of no Validity; That they would cause it so to be declared by the future Pope; That they Prayed and Exhorted all the Prelates, and other Clergymen, or Tenants of the Church of Rome, to Pay in no Money to him, or into the Apostolick Chamber, promising Recompence to such as shall, or have been deprived of their Benefices or Offices, for withdrawing from the Obedience of Gregory.

The Proceedings of Gregory against the Cardinals that withdrew.

While all these Matters passed in Italy, the King of France, to reduce Benedict, sent to him in the beginning of the Year two Ambassadors, John de Chateaumorant, and John de Toursay, to declare to him, That if on Ascension-Day next, the Union were not re-established in the Church, that neither he, nor his Clergy, nor any of his Subjects should obey either him, or his Adversary; but would stand Neuters. Benedict was extreamly troubled at this Message, and gave in Answer to the Ambassadors, That he should let the King know his Mind by the Persons, which he would send to him: And indeed, in a little time after, he sent two Couriers to the King, who arrived at Paris on the 14th. of May, and presented to his Majesty a Bull written at Porto-Venere the 18th. of April; by which he declared to him, That if he put in Execution the Neutrality he had projected, he would not only incurr the Penalties of the Law; but also those mentioned in the Bull, which he sent to him, to acquit himself of his Duty towards God. This latter Bull was dated the 19th. of May, in the preceding Year, and it Prohibited all Christian People to Authorize or Approve the Substraction, or to Appeal in any manner from the Decrees of the Pope, under Pain of Excommunication, of Interdiction, of Deprivation of Dignities and Benefices, and likewise, as to the Laity, of their Goods and Estates. The Couriers, who brought these Bulls deliver'd them to the King fast sealed, and withdrew before they were opened. The King having called to him the Princes, made them be broke open in their Presence; and after they had been read, it was deliberated by the space of three Days, what was hereupon to be done. On Monday 21st. of the same Month, the King sent for the Princes, the Lords, the Parliament, the Prelates and the University, heard the Harangue, which was made in the presence of the People by John Courtecuisse Doctor of Divinity, who having taken for his Text these words, Convertetur dolor ejus in caput ejus, &c. declaimed against the Conduct of Benedict, and shewed, that his Bulls were Unjust, and that they deserved to be condemned and torn to pieces, seeing they tended to perpetuate the Schism, to vilify the Authority of the King, and to divest him of his Power. He accused Peter de la Lune to have said, That though all Christendom should be of Opinion for the Cession, he would not change his Resolution, and to have threatned France with great Misery, in case of the Substraction. He maintained next, That Peter de la Lune was a Schismatick and a Heretick; that he deserved, not only to be deprived of the Papacy, but likewise to be dispossessed of all Ecclesiastical Dignities; That he ought not to be called

The Proceedings against Benedict and his Bulls.

Pope

Pope any more, nor be obeyed; That all the Gifts and Grants, which he had paſſed ſince the Third of May, of the preceding Year, were actually Void, and that they ought to be proceeded againſt, who upheld, or aſſiſted him in France, as againſt Perſons guilty of Treaſon. When John de Courtecuiſſe had ended his Diſcourſe, another Perſon of the Univerſity made five Demands of the King, and his Council for the Good of the Church, the Preſervation of the Peace of the Kingdom, and the Honour of the Crown. The Firſt, That there be Examination had touching theſe Bulls, and that all thoſe be Arreſted, who ſhall be found to have ſupported, or entertained the Followers of Peter de la Lune, or taken his part, as there are many in the Kingdom, whom the Univerſity would Name to the King in time and place. The Second, That the King would receive no Letter from Peter de la Lune. The Third, That it would pleaſe the King to injoin the Univerſity to Preach the Truth of this Doctrine through his whole Kingdom. The Fourth, That the Biſhop of St. Flour be recalled from his Embaſſy, and that the Dean of St. German of Auxerre and of St. Lupus, be Puniſhed. The Fifth, That the Letter in form of a Bull be torn, as giving a Wound to the Faith, and being injurious, ſeditious, and offenſive to his Royal Majeſty. The King approved of the Demands of the Univerſity, order'd the Dean of St. German of Auxerre to be Arreſted immediately, took the Bull, and ſent it to his Chancellor. The Chancellor cauſed it to be torn into Three Pieces; whereof one was given to the King, the other to the Princes and the Council, and the third to the Clergymen, who pulled it to pieces. The next day the King ſent Order to Mareſchal Baucicaut, who was at Genoa, to ſeize, by any means, the Perſon of Peter de la Lune; recalled the Biſhop of St. Flour, whom he had ſent to the King of Spain to perſwade him to the Neutrality; becauſe ſome had written to him, that in ſtead of following his Inſtructions, he had acted contrary: He ſent for the Archbiſhop of Rheims, the Biſhop of Cambray (Peter d'Ailly) and ſeveral others, who were taxed with adhering to Peter de la Lune; but they obeyed not, fearing to be put in Priſon: Some were Arreſted, viz. the Biſhop of Gap, the Abbot of St. Denys, ſome Canons of Paris, and other Perſons, who were kept Priſoners in the Louvre, as guilty of High Treaſon, for having had Cogniſance of theſe Bulls, and not diſcovering it to the King. They made ſearch for the two Couriers, that brought them; one of them a Caſtilian, was taken about Lyons; and the other named Sancius Lupus, an Arragonian, was Arreſted in the Church of St. Clairvaux; and both of them being brought back to Paris, they acquitted ſome that were accuſed, affirming poſitively, that they knew nothing of the Contents of thoſe Bulls; nevertheleſs the Commiſſioners, who were Members of the Univerſity, left not off the purſuit of the Proceſs, and kept them long in Priſon.

The Publication of the Neutrality in France.

After this, the King cauſed the Neutrality to be Publiſhed; that is to ſay, the Subſtraction of Obedience to the two Adverſe Popes, wrote to the Chriſtian Princes, and ſent them Ambaſſadors to exhort them to take this Method, which was accepted by the Germans, Hungarians, and Bohemians. The King wrote likewiſe on the 22. of May, to the Cardinals on Gregory's ſide, to meet together with thoſe of Benedict's, in order to cure the Schiſm, and the Univerſity of Paris wrote a very Eloquent Letter to one and t'other, wherein they are exhorted to procure Peace to the Church; by chooſing one abſolute Pope by common Conſent. This Letter bears Date the 29th. of May. The two Colleges anſwer'd the King, and the Univerſity, that they had taken up this Reſolution before the receipt of their Letters; and that they were aſſembled to put it in Execution. Their Letter is dated from Leghorn on the laſt of June. Nevertheleſs, the King on the 18th. of the ſame Month, by his Letters Patents publiſhed to all his Subjects his Commands, that they ſhould not regard any Bulls, or Letters ſent by Benedict, ſince the Date of the injurious Bulls, to preſent, receive or perform them.

Gregory and Benedict appoint Councils, and the Cardinals likewiſe do it at Piſa.

The two Contending Popes, then found themſelves very much intangled: Gregory deſirous to lay the Fault on Benedict, wrote a Circular Letter to all the Faithful on the 20th. of June, to inſinuate, that it was not his Fault, but Benedict's, that the Union was not ſettled. Alſo to elude the Deſign of the Cardinals, he call'd a Council at Aquileia, by his Letters of the 2d. of July; and having paſſed the Winter at Sienna, and Ariminum, where he created ſome Cardinals, he came to this City about Eaſter in the following Year, and there held a kind of a Council, made up of a very ſmall number of Prelates. Benedict ſeeing himſelf deſerted by the French, took a Reſolution to retreat to the Kingdom of Arragon, and left Porto-Venere in the beginning of June, having written a Letter to Gregory, wherein he proteſted it was not his Fault that the Union was concluded; from whence he proceeded to Perpignan, and Aſſembled a Council of the Prelates of Spain and Catalonia, who owned him, and declared him the true Catholick Vicar of JESUS CHRIST, who had never been a Schiſmatick or Heretick; commended the Deſign he had to procure an Union, even by the way of Ceſſion, yet not excluding other Methods; beſought him to extend the Promiſe of Ceſſion to the Caſe, that his Adverſary ſhould be depoſed, and to ſend Ambaſſadors to the Cardinals, who were at Piſa, to find out means of procuring the Union. Benedict was accompanied only by Four Cardinals, Eight or Nine others deſerted him, and went to Leghorn or Piſa, to find the Cardinals of Gregory, and conſulted with them to Aſſemble a Council of ſuch as were Subject to both Popes in a free place, to procure Peace to the Church. At laſt they pitched on Piſa, which was granted them by the Florentines; where they declared a Council to be held at the Feaſt of the Annunciation, the Year following. The Cardinals of the two Colleges aſſembled the Prelates of their reſpective Parties thither, and cited to the Council the two Competitors.

Nevertheleſs

Nevertheleſs, the King of France call'd together the Prelates of his Kingdom, in the Chapel of his Palace at Paris, to order the manner in which the Church of France ſhould be Governed during the Neutrality. The Archbiſhop of Sens preſided in this Aſſembly, which continued from the 11th. of the Month of Auguſt, until the 5th. of November, and therein they made the following Rules; 1. That the Abſolution from Excommunications, reſerved of right to the Pope, ſhall be given by the Penitentiary of the Holy Apoſtolick See; and in caſe there be any difficulty, whereby they cannot have recourſe to him, then by the Ordinary. 2. That as to Diſpenſations for Diſorders, which the Penitentiary has Power to grant, Application ſhall be made to him; or, if that cannot be done, to the Biſhop. 3. That for Diſpenſations with Impediments of Marriage, an Addreſs ſhall be made to the Penitentiary, or to a Provincial Council. 4. That the Elections of Biſhops ſhall be confirmed by the Metropolitans; or in caſe the Holy See of the Metropolis be Vacant, by the Chapter of the Metropolitan-Church, and the Election of Archbiſhops, by the Primates, or by a Council of the Biſhops of the Province, to whom it belongs to conſecrate the Archbiſhops, on condition nevertheleſs that he ſhall not take the Pall, if there be found no Perſon, who hath a right to give it him: And that the Elections of Abbots of Monaſteries, even the Exempt, ſhall be confirmed by the Ordinaries, who ſhall likewiſe give the Benediction to them that are Elected. 5. That the Diſpenſations hitherto granted by Peter de la Lune ſhall be available, and may be put in Execution. 6. That the Metropolitans ſhall every Year aſſemble a Council of the Biſhops of their Province, wherein they ſhall all be obliged to aſſiſt, and tarry there for a Month; that the Monks of the Order of St. Benedict, and Canons Regulars ſhall likewiſe hold Provincial Chapters, every Year. 7. That in all Appeals, there ſhall be obſerved the Degrees of Juriſdiction; and if the Suit be Commenced before the Archbiſhop, Appeal ſhall be made to the Provincial Council, which ſhall nominate Commiſſioners, from whoſe Judgment Appeal may again be made to the Council, which may again appoint other Commiſſioners, to give a Definitive Sentence; ſo that nevertheleſs the three Sentences may agree: That in caſe of Appeal, in expectance, till the Provincial Council meets, the Dean of the Biſhops ſhall have Power to give the Excommunicate Abſolution ad Cautelam; that all Appeals and Cauſes, which were brought to the Apoſtolick Holy See, may be referr'd to a Provincial Council, and determined by Commiſſioners of their Appointment, and the Affairs of the Order of Cluniacks by their General Chapter; and that no notice be taken of any Appeals made to the Court of Rome, during the Neutrality: That nevertheleſs, the Sentences given at the Court of Rome before the Publiſhing of the Neutrality, may be executed within a Month. 8. That all Proceedings in the Judgment of Matters ſhall be according to the Direction of the Common-Law, and not according to the Rules of Chancery; nevertheleſs, the Judgment of Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes may not be referred to a Secular Court. 9. That Elections, Gifts, Preſentations, Nominations to Benefices, ſhall be made by ſuch as of right they belong to; That the Univerſity ſhall keep a Record of all ſuch as are preſented to Benefices, wherein ſhall not be compriſed thoſe worth Four Hundred Livres a Year; unleſs they have annexed ſome Title, or Dignity. 10. That all the Revenues of Benefices in France, poſſeſſed by thoſe, who are in the Service of Peter de la Lune, ſhall be ſeized and put into the King's Hands, to be employed in the Proſecution of the Union. This Aſſembly confirmed the Election of Lewis d' Harcourt, to the Archbiſhoprick of Roan, made by the Chapter of that Church, and the Change made by the Biſhops of Tharbes, and Treguier; and declared the Grant, which Benedict had made of the Archbiſhoprick of Auſch, to one of his Creatures, void. It was ſaid in Concluſion of theſe Rules, which they made, Saving the Rights of the Crown, and the Liberties of the Gallican Church; Saving likewiſe the reſpect due to the Apoſtolick Holy See, and to the next Lawful Pope, Clave non errante. There were nevertheleſs ſome Prelates, who diſapproved them, and Guy de Roye, Archbiſhop of Rheims had the Confidence to write to the Biſhops of the Aſſembly, that the Neutrality they had publiſhed, was Nonſence; Proteſted, that he would not admit it, that he believed what the Council had done without the Authority of the Holy See, could be of no force; and he adviſed them to meet at the Council, which Peter de la Lune was to hold at Perpignan. The Prelates of the Aſſembly were highly incenſed with this Writing, and the Univerſity obtained an Order of the King to fetch this Prelate; but he would not obey it, alledging, That as Firſt Peer of France, he owned no Judge above him but the King. The Univerſity likewiſe obtain'd of the King, that Peter d' Ailly Biſhop of Cambray, who had ſided with Benedict, ſhould be Arreſted and brought to Paris, by the Earl of St. Pol: But this Prelate prevented that Compulſion, by getting a Protection of the King, and referring his Cauſe to the Court.

An Aſſembly of the Prelates of France, which made Rules for the time of the Neutrality.

While the Aſſembly was Sitting, Sancus Lupus and the Courier of Benedict, who had been Arreſted, having been convicted of bringing the Abuſive Bulls to the King and State, were Condemned, on the 20th. of Auguſt, by the Commiſſioners, and in Execution of the Sentence, being attired with Paper-Mitres, and Coats of black Cloth, on which were Painted the Arms of Benedict, reverſed; together with Libels, implying, that they were Counterfeits ſent from a Traitor, were Conducted in this Equipage on a Dung-Cart from the Louvre to the Palace, accompanied with ſuch, as had been accuſed of favouring them; and there they were mounted on a Scaffold, where they ſerved for a Shew to the People. On the next day, they were brought again in the ſame Poſture, to the Church-Porch of our Lady, where one of the Commiſſioners of the Order of the Mathurins, Doctor in Divinity, made an Harangue full of Affronts

The Puniſhment of Benedict's Couriers.

Affronts and Reproaches againſt Peter de la Lune, and theſe Wretches; Declared, That Sancius Lupus was Condemned to Perpetual Impriſonment; and the Courier to remain in Priſon Three Years. He added, That ſome others Accus'd, were alſo Condemned. But that was not ſo, and the ſame Day, the Queen and Duke of Guyenne cauſed them to be yielded up to the Biſhop of Paris, to whom they referred the Cogniſance of what concerned the Schiſm, and to the Court of Parliament the Crime of High Treaſon. The Biſhop of Paris kept them in Cuſtody for a Month, after which he Diſcharged the Canons; and in a little time, the Queen and Princes made Demand of the others, and ſet them at Liberty. Thus you ſee, what paſſed in France concerning the Schiſm, to the time of holding a Council at Piſa; whereof we ſhall treat in the following Century.

CHAP. V.

The Lives, and Writings of the Authors which flouriſhed in the Fourteenth Age.

THE Authors which Flouriſhed in the Weſt in the 14th. Age, having compoſed Works of the ſame Nature, and written in the ſame manner, that the Authors of the foregoing Age did, I will not repeat the Cenſures here, which I have already paſſed upon them; but will only ſet down ſome particular Remarks, which concern the Authors of this Age.

Three Ages of Schoolmen. The Learning of the Schools is commonly divided into Three Ages. The Firſt, is from Abilardus to Albertus Magnus, the Maſter of Thomas Aquinas. The Second, from Albertus to Durandus à Sancto Porciano, who died in the Year 1333. The Third and Laſt, from Durandus to Gabriel Biel, who died A. D. 1495. The Famous Divines of the Firſt Age were, Peter Lombard, Robert Pullein, or Pullus, Petrus Pictavienſis, Hugo de Sancto Victore, Raymundus de Pennaforti, Wilhelmus Pariſienſis. In the Second Age the School-Learning was not yet reduced to an Act, but they followed the Ariſtotelian Philoſophy, according to the Method of the Followers of Averrhoes. In this Age Albertus Magnus, a Monk of the Order of the Friars-Preachers, and Alexander Hales, of the Order of the Grey-Friars; and after them Thomas Aquinas and Scotus, were the Heads of the two Sects of Schoolmen; who divided all the Schools among them. For after the Monks of theſe two Orders became the moſt Eminent in the Univerſities, and Taught Divinity with greater Diligence and Applauſe than the Secular Prieſts, who applied themſelves cloſer to the Civil and Canon-Law, than School-Divinity; their manner of Teaching, and their Opinions were eſtabliſh'd and ſettled there in a little time. This gave riſe to two Parties or Sects in the Schools; the one followed S. Thomas, and the other Scotus. But ſome few there were, who endeavoured to make a Third Party, and reviving the Method of the Nominals oppoſed thoſe Divines, who were the Followers of Averrhoes, or the Realiſts. Ockam was one of the Heads of this Party. Raymundus Lullius invented a new way of Arguing, but it was ſo obſcure, ſo extraordinary, and full of Difficulties, that he had but few Followers. Durandus à Sancto Porciano, Biſhop of Meaux, was the firſt that would not tye himſelf to follow the Principles of any other, but took from both, what he thought beſt, and ſo broached many new Opinions. Since his time, the Divines have taken a greater Liberty, and made ſeveral Syſtems for themſelves.

The Study of the Law. The Study of the Law became more exact in this, than in the former Age. Many excellent Wits applied themſelves to it, and made great progreſs in it; and although they accepted the Decretals of the Popes for Law, yet they began to examine them more nearly, and to bring them to Common Right. The Debates about the Civil and Eccleſiaſtical Power which were much agitated in this Age, gave occaſion to ſearch into theſe Matters, and we muſt own, that there were many excellent and very learned Treatiſes written upon that Subject; which are a clear Proof, that the Knowledge and Value of Antiquity was not quite loſt in this Age.

As to the Sermons, Commentaries upon Holy Scripture and Hiſtory, there was no Alteration in this Age from the former; but the Study of Human Learning, Tongues, and Poetry began to be revived, and came to a great Perfection in the next Age; and at length induced the Divines to apply themſelves to the Study of Antiquity. Theſe Reflections being premiſed, I ſhall give you a Liſt of the Divines, Canoniſts, Hiſtorians, Writers of Books of Devotion, and other Eccleſiaſtical Authors, who flouriſhed in the Fourteenth Age of the Church in a Chronological Order.

Dinus de Mugello. Dinus de Mugello, [or Mugellanus] ſo called from Mugellum, a Town in the Territories of Florence, Profeſſor of Law in the Univerſity of Bononia, was invited to Rome by Boniface VIII. to Compoſe the Sixth Book of the Decretals, with a Promiſe of making him a Cardinal; but being diſappointed of his Expectation he died of Melancholy, as is ſaid, in the Year 1303. He wrote ſeveral Books of Civil Law, and a Commentary upon the Rules of the Canon Law, which has been printed at Colen, An. 1569, 1594. and [with ſome Additions by Nicholas Boerius] 1617. [8]

Engelbertus,

Engelbertus, a German, Abbot of Admont in Styria, Flouriſhed at the End of the Thirteenth and in the Beginning of the Fourteenth Age. There is a Treatiſe of his printed at Baſil, Anno 1553. and put into the 25th. Tome of the laſt Part of the Bibliotheca Patrum, Concerning [the Riſe] Progreſs and End of the Roman Empire, and an Heroick Poem, containing an Encomium of Rodolph of Habſpurg [the German Emperor] made [at his Coronation] Anno 1273. which is alſo found in moſt of the Collections of the German Hiſtorians. Trithemius makes mention of ſome Sermons written by this Author, and a Treatiſe of Virtues and Vices. Poſſevine alſo attributes to him ſeveral Books of Divinity, viz. A Commentary upon the Pſalm, Beati Immaculati. Some Treatiſes upon the Articles of our Faith. Of the Body of JESUS CHRIST; Of the Paſſion of our Lord, and the Myſtery of the Croſs; Of Grace, Salvation, and Juſtice; Of Damnation; Of Free-will; Of the Chief Good; Of Providence; Of the Miracles of JESUS CHRIST; Of the State of the Dead. Upon the Goſpel, In Principio; and ſeveral other Philoſophical Tracts which were preſerved in MS. in the Monaſtery of Admont. He adds, That there is at Vienna, a Tract in MS. of the ſame Author, Of the Inſtruction of a Chriſtian Prince. Engelbert.

Jacobus Cajetanus, Nephew of Pope Boniface the VIIIth. who was made a Cardinal, An. 1295. wrote a Book concerning the Jubilee every 100th. Year. It was publiſhed by Roſeus with Notes, and printed in the 13th. Tome of the Bibliotheca Patrum, of the Colen Edition. Jacobus Cajetanus.

Stephanus de Salagnac, a Monk of the Order of the Preaching-Friars of the Convent of Limoges; wrote, as is credible, at the end of the former Age, or beginning of this, A Treatiſe in Honour of his own Order; alledging Four Things, wherein God had made them principally Eminent, viz. 1. For a Good and Learned Head. 2. For an Illuſtrious and Noble Family. 3. For an Honourable Name. And 4. For a particular Profeſſion. Stephanus de Salagnac.

Andreas Novo-Caſtrenſis, or Andrew of Newcaſtle, an Engliſhman, and Dominican-Friar, Doctor of Divinity, flouriſhed in the beginning of this Age. He hath compoſed a Comment upon the Firſt Book of the Sentences, printed at Paris 1514. Bale [Cent. 10. p. 44.] attributes to him a Commentary upon Boethius's Book, De Conſolatione Philoſophiæ, or, The Comfort of Philoſophy. Andreas Novo-caſtrenſis.

Rainerius Piſanus, or de Piſâ, a Divine, and Lawyer of the ſame Order, Compoſed a Book which is intituled Pantheologia, or a Theological Dictionary; in which all Heads of Divinity are diſpoſed and treated on in an Alphabetical Order. Jacobus Florentinus, a Minorite or Grey-Friar, hath added ſeveral things to this Work, and cauſed it to be printed at Noremburg in 1473. He alſo printed it in the ſame manner at Venice in 1486. at Lions in 1519. at Breſſe in 1580. and ſince it hath been printed at Paris, with the Additions of Father Nicholas, a White-Friar. Rainerius Piſanus.

William de Nangis, or de Nangiaco, a Monk of S. Denys [at Paris] hath Compoſed a Chronicle from the beginning of the World to the Year 1301. But becauſe the greateſt Part of that Work was Copied from other Authors; Father Luke Dacherius in the 11th. Tome of his Spicilegium hath printed it no further, than to the Year 1113. where he begins his Continuations, which he hath made out of Sigebert of Gemblours, as far as the Year 1301. adding ſomething more out of two other Authors; the one as far as 1340. and the other to 1348. This Author hath alſo written a Chronicle of the Kings of France, the Lives of S. Lewis, and Philip the Hardy; which are alſo found in the Collections of the French Hiſtorians put out by Pithæus and Du-Cheſne. William de Nangis.

Thomas Wicke, a Canon Regular of S. Auguſtine, of the Abby of Oſney in England; who flouriſhed in the Reign of Edward I. hath a Chronicle of the Hiſtory of England, from the coming of William the Conqueror in 1066. to the Death of Edward I. in 1304. This Work is found in the laſt Collection of the Engliſh Hiſtorians, printed at Oxford in 1687. He alſo wrote a Tract of the Abbots of Oſney from the Foundation of that Abby, which was in 1129. to the Year 1290. Thomas Wicke.

Henry Stero, a German, and a Benedictin Monk of the Abby of Altaich, Compoſed certain Annals from the firſt Year of the Emperor Frederick Barberoſſa, which was in the Year of Chriſt 1152. to the Election of the Emperor Rodolphus in the Year 1273. and the Hiſtory of the Emperors Rodolphus of Habſpurg, Adolphus of Naſſau, and Albert of Auſtria, from the Year 1273. to the Year 1305. which was carried on by two German Monks. Theſe Works are found among the German Writers put out by Friherus, and the more large Annals in the Firſt Tome of Caniſius's Antiquities. Henry Stero.

Eberardus, a Monk of the ſame Monaſtery, and Archdeacon of Ratisbone, hath continued theſe Annals of Stero as far as 1305. taking almoſt all he has writ out of the ſame Author. This Work is in the firſt Tome of Caniſius's Collection. Eberardus a Monk.

Joannes de Joinville Governor of Champaigne, is the Author of the Life of S. Lewis, whom he accompanied in his Expedition to the Holy Land. It hath been printed ſeveral times in French; but the beſt Edition is that put out by the Learned Mr. Du-Cange, printed by Cramoiſy, An. 1668. Joinville lived till about 1310. Joannes de Joinville.

Siffridus, a Prieſt of Miſnia in Saxony, is a different Perſon from him, though of the ſame Name, who was of the Order of the Friars-Preachers, and who flouriſhed at the end of the Fifteenth Age. This of whom we are now ſpeaking, lived in the beginning of the Fourteenth Age. He Compoſed a Chronicle from the beginning of the World to the Year 1307. But Georgius Fabricius who firſt publiſhed it at the end of his Hiſtory of Saxony, Printed at Leipſick Siffridus, a Prieſt of Miſnia.

ſick 1569. and at Jena 1598. hath pared off all the Years, which preceded 457. It is found in the ſame manner printed among the German Hiſtorians, put out by Piſtorius.

Haito, a Præmonſtratenſis.

Haito or Aito, a Prince of the Family of the Kings of Armenia, after he had made War with the Infidels, entred the Order of the Præmonſtratenſes about the Year 1290. and profeſſed in a Monaſtery of that Order in the Iſle of Cyprus, as he himſelf tells us in his Hiſtory of his Voyage into the Holy Land; which he wrote in French in the Year 1307. and was tranſlated into Latin by Nicholas Fulke, and printed at Haguenau 1529. at Baſil among the Hiſtorians of the New World in 1532. and 1555. and at Helmſtadt 1585. in the Second Part of the Authors of the Hiſtory of Jeruſalem, printed by Reineccius, [and in Italian at Venice 1553.]

John the Monk, a Cardinal.

John the Monk, Sirnamed Deſcranches, a Native of Creſſy near Abbeville, a Learned Canoniſt, was raiſed to the Dignity of a Cardinal-Prieſt of the Title of S. Marcellinus, and S. Peter, in the Year 1294. He Founded a College of his own Name at Paris in the Year 1302. He was appointed Legate by Pope Boniface, in the Conteſt he had with Philip the Fair. He died at Avignon the 22d. of Auguſt 1313. He is the Author of the Apparatus, or Commentary upon the 6th. Book of the Decretals printed at Paris 1535. and at Venice 1586. with the Additions of Probus.

William of Paris, a Dominican.

William Paris, of the Order of Friars-Preachers, who was conſtituted Inquiſitor in France by Clement V. and who drew up the Proceſs againſt the Templars, is the Author of the Dialogues upon the Seven Sacraments, printed at Lipſick in 1512. at Lions in 1567. under the Name of William Biſhop of Paris, and a Poſtill upon the Epiſtles and Goſpels of the Year, printed at Paris in 1509. and at Strasburg in 1513. and 1521.

John of Paris, a Dominican.

The two Dominicans called Joannes Pariſienſis, both Doctors and Profeſſors of Divinity of the Faculty in Paris muſt be diſtinguiſhed. The former lived in the Thirteenth Age, about the Year 1220. He was Sirnamed Pungens Aſinum, the Aſs-pricker, and is mentioned by Joannes de Salagnac, ſpeaking of the Authors of his Order, who lived before the time of S. Thomas. He Founded two Chapels to S. Euſtathius, and is meant in an Information made in 1221. as the Records of thoſe times make it evident. It is undoubtedly he that Compoſed the Commentary upon the Sentences, of which Trithemius ſpeaks. The other John of Paris was not a Licentiate in Divinity, till 1304. when he brought himſelf into a great deal of Trouble, by aſſerting, That Tranſubſtantiation was not a Point of Faith, and that the Real Preſence of the Body of Chriſt in the Sacrament might be explained after another manner, viz. By ſuppoſing, that the Bread being united with the Word, mediante corpore Chriſti, becomes the Body of Chriſt, or that the Change be made after ſome other manner. This new Doctrine, which had never been taught in the Schools of Paris before, made a great Noiſe, and was oppoſed by Three other Divines, who maintained, That Tranſubſtantiation was an Article of Faith, according to the Decretal in the Chapter, Firmiter. John of Paris nevertheleſs maintained his Opinion with great Reſolution; and not only wrote a Book to prove it, but defended it ſeveral times before many Doctors, and Batchelors of Divinity; and more particularly, before William D' Orillac Biſhop of Paris, who having examined that Doctrine, and taken advice with Giles of Rome, Archbiſhop of Bourges, Bertrandus Biſhop of Orleans, William Biſhop of Amiens, and ſeveral other Doctors, injoined Silence to Friar John of Paris, under the Penalty of Excommunication, and ſtrictly forbid him to Teach or Preach any more in Paris. John of Paris appealed from this Sentence to the Court of Rome, and went to Pope Clement V. then at Bourdeaux, who appointed him Judges; but he died before the Matter was decided upon S. Maurice's Day [Jan. 15.] 1306. The Book which John of Paris wrote about Tranſubſtantiation, was Intituled, The Determination of Friar John of Paris, Preacher of the Manner, how the Body of Jeſus Chriſt is in the Sacrament of the Altar [different, from that, which hath been commonly held in the Church.] 'Tis nothing elſe, but the very ſame Explication of his Opinion, which he delivers to the Aſſembly of the Doctors of Divinity abovementioned. It was found in MS. in the Library of S. Victor, and has been often quoted about that Point by the Authors of the Reformed Religion. It hath lately been publiſhed by Mr. D' Allix entire [with a large and learned Preface] and printed at London in 1686. There is a Treatiſe concerning the Regal, and Papal Power, printed at Paris in the Year 1506. and in the Collection of Goldaſtus's [Monarchia S. Rom. Imp. Tom. 2. p. 107.] which bears the Name of John of Paris. It was written upon the Account of the Difference between Pope Boniface VIII. and Philip the Fair. This Author obſerves in his Preface, that they, who ſeek to avoid one Errour often fall into another; and thereupon brings an Example from the Controverſie, which was between the Monks and Seculars concerning Confeſſion, and the Adminiſtration of the Sacraments; The one, ſaith he, aſſerted, That the Monks ought not to meddle with them at all, becauſe they renounced all Secular Affairs: The other ſaid, That they properly belonged to them by their Order. The Truth lies in the middle between theſe two Errors, which is, That it is not altogether unfit that they ſhould do it, although they have no right to it upon the account of their Order. And much the ſame thing happens in this Queſtion about the Spiritual and Temporal Power, concerning which there are contrary Errors. The firſt of them is the Error of the Waldenſes, who hold, that Clergymen ought not to have any Power or Temporal Eſtates; the other is ſomething like the Opinion of Herod, who thought that Jeſus Chriſt was Born to be an Earthly King; ſo theſe Men ſuppoſe, that the Pope as Pope, hath a Power in Temporal Things above Kings. The True Opinion lies between theſe two Errours, and is this; That the Succeſſors of the Apoſtles may exerciſe a Temporal Juriſdiction, and enjoy Temporal Eſtates by the

the Allowance and Grant of Princes; but it does not belong to them as the Vicars of Jesus Christ, and Successors of the Apostle. To prove this Proposition, he shews, 1. That the Regal Power is founded upon the Law of Nature, and Law of Nations. 2. That the Priesthood is a Spiritual Power given by Jesus Christ to his Church, to Administer Sacraments. 3. That 'tis not Necessary, that all the Kings upon Earth should depend upon one Person only, as all the Ministers of the Church upon one Head. 4. That the Regal Power was erected before the Priesthood in time; but the Priesthood is before the Regal Power in Dignity. 5. That the Pope has not the sole Jurisdiction over the Churches Revenues, but they belong to Bodies, and Societies, which possess them; and that the Pope can't dispose of them as he pleaseth, nor deprive the Owners of them without a just Cause; That he may much less dispose of the Goods of Laymen, but only in case of urgent Necessity to use censures to oblige them to assist and help the Poor, or the Church in their Needs. 6. That he hath no Jurisdiction over the Temporal Goods of Laymen, nor any Secular Power; because Jesus Christ as Head of the Church had none himself, nor did give any to his Apostles; but all the Power, that he has given to the Church, is purely Spiritual; yea, even that which belongs to the Exterior Ecclesiastical Court, which may concern it self only in Spiritual Causes; That the Pope may indeed Excommunicate an Heretick King, and inflict Ecclesiastical Censures on him, but cannot depose him. He Answers all the Objections that may be made to this Doctrine, and at last shews, that the Pope may be judged, and may either resign, or be deposed.

Besides these Treatises of John of Paris, Mr. Baluzius assures us, that there are in the Library of Mr. Colbert, Cod. 3725. three Sermons preached by this Monk at Paris; the one in Advent, the other on the Second Sunday in Lent, and the Third on the First Sunday after Easter. Some Englishmen also tell us, That there is in the Library at Oxford, a MSS. which contains a Treatise, which proves the Truth of the Christian Religion from the Testimony of the Heathens, and some other Treatises about the Confessions of Monks. Some also attribute to him a Book, Intituled, The Correction of the Doctrine of S. Thomas, against William de la Mare; printed under the Name of Ægidius Romanus, or de Columna. It is credible, that he did Compose a Book of that Title; but there is no reason to believe it that which is printed in the Name of Ægidius.

John of Paris, a Canon-Regular.

About the same time flourished John of Paris, an Englishman and Canon-Regular of S. Victor at Paris, who Composed an History, Intituled, Historical Memoirs, or the Flowers of History to the Year 1322. which is found in a MSS. in the Library of S. Victor, and in some Libraries in England, [particularly in Bennet-College Library.] Mr. Duchesne hath published some Fragments of it in the First Tome of the French Historians, [and Miræus has put several Parts of it into his Chronicon.]

Thomas Joisius, or Joyce, an Englishman, a Monk of the Order of Friars-Preachers, and a Scholar of Albertus Magnus, Confessor and Counsellor of State to King Edward, and at last promoted to be a Cardinal by the Title of S. Sabina, in the Year 1305. by Pope Clement V. died at Grenoble Decemb. 1310. as he was going in an Embassy to the Emperor Henry. We have observed in the last Age, that there are several Commentaries upon Holy Scripture, printed under the Name of S. Thomas, which belong to this Author: Besides these, there is a Work printed under his own Name, Intituled, Opus Aureum, a Golden Work upon Seven Psalms [C. 27.] at Venice in 1611. and a Commentary upon S. Augustine, De civitate Dei, or the City of God, printed at Tholose 1488. Some other Commentaries upon the Holy Scripture, and other Treatises, are found with his Name in the Libraries [of New-College, Cod. 90. Magdalen-College, Cod. 47. Merton, Cod. 200. and Exeter-College, Cod. 25. in Oxford; and Pembroke-Hall, Cod. 46. Peter-House, Cod. 87. & 99. and the Publick Library, Cod. 179. at Cambridge] in England.

Joannes de S. Geminiano, a Monk.

Joannes de S. Geminiano, a Monk of the Order of the Friars-Preachers, flourished in the beginning of this Age, and gave himself particularly to Morality and Preaching. His chief Work is, The Summ of Examples and Comparisons, printed at Venice in 1577, and 1582. at Antwerp in 1583, and 1599. at Lyons in 1585. and at Cologne 1670. He also Composed some Funeral Sermons, printed at Lyons in 1510. and at Paris in 1511. and some Sermons upon Lent, printed at Venice in 1584. and at Cologne in 1612. [Altamura in his Biblioth. Prædicat. reckons up other Writings of his.]

Jacobus de Benedictis, a Franciscan.

Jacobus de Benedictis, a Native of Todi [in Italy] of a good Family, being entred into the Order of S. Francis, propounded it as a Design to himself to pass for a Fool and Madman in the Eyes of Men, and make himself despised; which he brought to pass, by delivering several strange Revelations, and by publickly reproving the Life of Pope Boniface, who put him in Prison in the City of Præneste, where he died in the Year 1306. He cannot be accounted an Ecclesiastical Writer, but upon the account of some Hymns both in Verse and Prose, which he Composed in a very uncouth Stile, divided into Seven Books, which have been published by Francis Fresatus a Grey-Friar, who caused them to be printed at Rome in 1558. and since at Venice 1617. Some attribute to him a Piece of Prose beginning with these words, Stabat mater dolorosa, and another Hymn, De contemptu Mundi; which begins thus, Cur mundus militat sub vanâ gloriâ. Raderus hath inserted some Sentences, and wholsom Admonitions attributed to this Author in his Viridarium Sanctorum.

Justus, a Cistertian.

Justus, an Abbot of the Cistertian Order, who flourished in the beginning of this Age, is the Author of a Sermon pronounced in an Assembly of his own Order, printed by it self at Paris, and in the 14th. Tome of the Bibliotheca Patrum, put out at Cologne.

Joannes Duns Scotus, a Grey-Friar.

Joannes Duns, Surnamed Scotus, and called commonly Doctor Subtilis, or the Subtle Doctor, was the Author of a New Sect of Schoolmen, and taught Principles different from those of S. Thomas; which were followed by the Divines of the Order of Grey-Friars, of which he was himself. It is disputed, whether he was an Englishman, Scotchman, or Irishman. They, who hold him to have been an Englishman, say, he was of Dunston in Northumberland; but they, who make him an Irishman, lay the place of his Nativity at Down, a City in Ulster in Ireland; and they, who will have him a Scotchman, make him a Native of Duns, a Village Eight Miles distant from the Confines of England. He entred very young into the Convent of the Grey-Friars at Newcastle in England, and attended his Studies at Oxford, where he taught Divinity afterward. He went into France in the beginning of the Fourteenth Age, and read Lectures at Paris after he had taken his Degrees. Some have written, That he there maintained the Immaculate Conception of the Virgin Mary in a Publick Conference; and that he defended it so strongly, that the University of Paris being convinced of it, made an Order, that all her Members should maintain that Doctrine, and engaged them by Oath so to do. But this is a false Story; for it is evident that the Decree of the University, was not made till the Year 1496. after the Meeting of the Council of Basil; and besides, Scotus did not propound the Opinion of the Immaculate Conception, as the certain Doctrine of his time; but with some doubt about it. For after he hath put the Question in his Third Distinction upon the Thirteenth Book of the Sentences, viz. Qu. 1. Whether the Virgin was conceived without Original Sin? He answers in Three Propositions; 1. That God could have caused her to be Born without Original Sin. 2. That he could have caused, that she should not continue in Original Sin one moment. 3. That he could have caused, that she should have remained in it for some time; and then in the last instant of that time have purified her from it. After he has proved these three Propositions, he concludes, That none but God can know, which of these three Things are possible to be done; that it seems nevertheless most probable to him, that that which is most perfect be attributed to the Virgin; provided, that it be not contrary to the Authority of the Church, nor Holy Scripture. In this manner did Scotus propound his Sentiments of the Immaculate Conception: From Paris he went to Cologne, where he died a little after of the Falling Sickness, or rather of an Apoplexy, Nov. 8. 1308. in the 43d. Year of his Age, according to some, but 34 according to others. What some write concerning him, that he was Buried in a Fit of the Falling Sickness, and being recovered and come to himself, had turned himself in his Grave, is a Fable that hath no likelihood; as Waddingus hath proved, who hath published his Life and Works, and printed them in Twelve Volumes at Lyons, in 1639.

His Works in Twelve Volumes.

The First Tome contains the Life of Scotus, and the Testimonies of Eminent Men about his Works; his Speculative Grammar, which some have falsly attributed to Albert of Saxony; a Monk of the Order of S. Augustine; His large Questions upon all Logick, with the Commentaries of Maurice de Porta, Archbishop of Tuam, which were before printed at Venice, in 1512. and 1600.

The Second Tome contains his Commentaries upon the Eight Books of Aristotle's Physicks, with the Notes of Francis de Pitigianis of Aretium [in Italy] which had been printed before at Venice, in 1504. and 1597. and after at Lyons [1597.] Lucas Waddingus proves, that they are not Scotus's. There are in the same Tome some imperfect Questions upon Aristotle's Books de Anima. With the Notes of Hugh Cavell, Archbishop of Armagh.

The Third Tome contains divers Treatises of Philosophy.

The Fourth Tome has his Commentaries upon Aristotle's Physicks, with his Metaphysical Conclusions and Questions.

The Six following Tomes contain his Commentaries upon the Four Books of the Sentences, which he made at Oxford; with the Notes of Cavell, Licher, Poncius, and Hiquæus. These Books had been printed before at Venice in 1516. and 1597. at Antwerp in 1620. and elsewhere.

The Eleventh Tome contains Four Books called, Reportata Parisiensia; which are an Abridgement made at Paris of his Larger Comment, with the Notes of Cavell and Waddingus; who observes that this Work is much inferior to the former in Stile and Doctrine. It hath been printed by it self at Paris in 1519. and 1600, and at Venice in 1597.

The last Tome contains his Quodlibetical Questions, with the Notes of Cavell and Licher, which had been before printed at Paris in 1519.

Trithemius makes mention of some Sermons of Scotus's upon Time and upon the Saints, a Commentary upon the Gospels and Epistles of S. Paul, with some other Treatises. Bale also attributes to him a Commentary upon Genesis, a Treatise of the Perfection of the Monks, in which this Question is treated of, Whether the Condition of Prelates ought to be preferred before the State of Monks [but time must bring them forth to light, with many others Works, which lie yet undiscovered.]

Raimundus Lullus.

The Famous Raimundus Lullus, descended of a Noble Family in Catalonia, was Born in the Isle of Majorca, in the Year 1236. He spent the first part of his Life in the Court of [James] King of that Isle, and did not retire from the World, till he was Forty years old, to enter (which

(which is hardly credible) into the Order of Grey-Friars. From that time he began to Study with so great Diligence, that in a little time he made a great Progress in the Oriental Tongues, and Liberal Sciences. He found out afterward a New Method of Arguing, and did all he could to get a Permission to teach at Rome; but not obtaining it of Pope Honorius IV. he resolved to put in execution a Design, which he had of a long time conceived, to Convert the Mahometans. Being therefore arrived according to this Resolution at Tunis, he had a Conference there with the Saracens, in which he was in great danger of losing his Life, and had not been saved, but upon Condition that he should depart out of Africa; and if ever he returned should be put to Death. He then came to Naples, where he taught his Method till the Year 1290. when he went again to Rome, to get Leave to teach in that City; but Boniface VIII. who was then in the Holy See, denied him. From thence he went to Genoa, where he Composed several Works; and passing from thence through Majorca, he came to Paris, where he taught his Art: Then he returned to Majorca, where he had frequent Disputations against the Saracens, Jacobites and Nestorians. Then he returned to Genoa and Paris, to confirm his Disciples in his Doctrine, and again desired a Permission of Pope Clement V. to teach at Rome, and being again refused, he returned into Africk, where he was put in Prison; but being delivered from thence at the intreaty of the People of Genoa, he Landed at Pisa, having lost all his Books in his Voyage by a Shipwreck. He then set himself to Preach up the Holy War, and having gathered a good Summ of Money in Italy for that end, he came to Pope Clement V. at Avignon; but not meeting with a kind Reception from him, he returned to Paris, where he taught, till the Council of Vienna; to which he went, and was earnest with them to establish Colleges in all places, where he had taught the Oriental Tongues, to Unite all the Military Orders of Monks into One, to undertake the Holy War, and to Condemn the Writings of Averrhoes; but these Propositions were not regarded by the Council. The rest of his Life is very fabulous. Some say, that after he had travelled into France and Spain, and Sailed into England [to sollicit those Kings to undertake the Holy War] where he exercised Chymistry; he returned into Majorca, from whence he again passed into Africa, and was Imprisoned there by the Saracens; who treated him so ill, that he died of his Blows, as he returned in a Genoa Ship, June 29. 1315. in the 80th. Year of his Age.

The Knowledge and Learning of Raimundus Lullus was as extraordinary, as his Life. He found a Secret, by ranging certain general Terms under different Heads in a Method, which he had contrived, to make such an Hotch-potch Language fit to talk of all manner of Things, and yet the Hearers shall understand nothing particularly by it; So that after a Man has heard a Lullist talk a long time upon any Matter, he is no wiser, nor learned, than he was before. They, that will take the Pains to learn this Method, may read his Introduction, which is the First of his Works; and his Cabala, which is his Second; in which he explains himself in a brief manner. He has written also his Principles of Philosophy, which are nothing else but Logick, accommodated to his Method; his Rhetorick; his Great Art, which contains an Application of his Method to all sorts of Subjects; His Book of the Articles of Faith, in which he proves Religion by Reason: These Works are printed with some Commentaries of the Lullists at Strasburg in 1651. But there are a great Number of other Works written by this Author, printed severally in divers places; and among others, The Philosophy of Love; which is one of his principal Works, Composed in 1298. and printed at Paris in 1516. A Treatise of Substance and Accident, in which he undertakes to prove the Trinity by Reason; Composed in the Year 1313. and printed at Valentia in Spain in 1520. A Tract of the Nativity of Jesus Christ, Composed in 1310. and printed at Paris 1499. His Treatise [called Blanquerna, or] of the Five States of Men, viz. Married, Monks, Prelates, Cardinals, and Popes; printed at Valentia in Spanish, in 1521. A Treatise of Prayers, Meditations, and Contemplations; or, Of the Lover and Loved, printed at Paris in 1505. The Praise of the Virgin, or the Art of Inventions; printed at Paris in 1499. with his Book for the Clergy, and his Treatise Intituled, The Phantastick; in which he makes a Defence for himself, and confutes the title, which some had given him of a Phantastical Person, written in 1311. His Book of Proverbs, printed at Paris in 1516. A Commentary upon the First Chapter of the Gospel of S. John, printed at Amiens in 1511. A Disputation, which he had with [Homerius] a Saracen, in 1308. printed at Valentia in 1510. The Disputation of Five Learned Men, written in the Year 1294. printed at the same place in 1520. His Questions upon the Four Books of the Sentences Composed in 1298. printed at Lyons 1491. and at Palermo in 1507. with the Questions of Mr. Thomas d' Arras resolved according to Art. A Treatise of the Immaculate Conception, printed at Brussels. The Tree of Knowledge, printed at Lyons in 1514. and 1515. and several other Philosophical Works printed at other places. For as for those Treatises, Of the Invocation of Dæmons, Of the Secrets of Nature, and other Books of Chymistry, printed in several places, they are very Wicked Books, which are none of Raimundus Lullus's, but of Raimundus de Tarraga, a Converted Jew; which contain in them many Errors, and manifest Follies. Out of the Works of Raimundus Lullus, Nicholas Eymericus hath Extracted an Hundred Erroneous Propositions, which he Presented to Pope Gregory XI. that they might be Condemned, with all his Works: That Pope caused them to be Examined, and at last Condemned; but Peter King of Aragon wrote to his Holiness to revoke his Sentence; and desired him by a Letter dated Jan. 7. 1377. to send the Examination of the Books of Raimundus Lullus immediately; but it had no effect. As to the Errors which are imputed to him by Eymericus, we must own, that several of the Propositions poſitions which he hath recited, may be defended; but ſome of them are unſufferable, that the Method of Raimundus Lullus, and his way of reaſoning, is no way helpful to the Knowledge of things; and that by his Principles, an Error may be maintained as well as the Truth.

John of Friburg, Biſhop of Oſmo.

John of Friburg, Sirnamed Runſick, a Monk of the Order of the Friars-Preachers, and Biſhop of Oſmo in Hungary, the moſt able Preacher of his Time, and ſo Pathetick, that having preach'd at Bolen againſt Uſury, he made the People drive out all the Uſurers of the Town. He flouriſhed in the beginning of this Age, and died in the Year 1314. after he had left his Biſhoprick, and was retired into a Convent of his own Order. He made a Summ for Preachers, printed at Ruthingia in 1487. A grand Summ for Confeſſors, divided into Four Parts, printed at Lyons in 1518. A Gloſs upon the Summs of Raimundus de Pennaforti, which is joined with the Impreſſion of the former Summ [at Rome] in 1603. The Author of the Bibliotheca Praedicatorum [i. e. the Collection of the Authors of the Order of the Friars-Preachers] makes mention of a Commentary of this Author upon the Books of the Sentences, and Gloſſes upon the Decrees [and ſome other of his Writings, but they are none of them Publick.]

Ægidius Romanus, Archbiſhop of Bourges.

Ægidius Romanus, or Giles of Rome, of the Houſe of Columni, a Monk of the Order of the Hermites of S. Auguſtine, Studied at Paris under Thomas Aquinas; whoſe Doctrines he always held and defended. He was made the Maſter of Philip the Fair, and taught Philoſophy and Divinity in the Univerſity of Paris. In the Year 1292. he was conſtituted General of his Order, and promoted in the Year 1294. by Pope Boniface to the Archbiſhoprick of Bourges, by the conſent of Philip the Fair. Some ſay he was made a Cardinal in 1315. but it is a falſe Opinion. He died Decemb. 22. 1316. He had made ſeveral Books in Philoſophy and Divinity, which got him the Name of Doctor Fundatiſſimus, [the moſt Well-grounded Doctor.] The Books of his, which are in Print, are, A Queſtion about the Eccleſiaſtical and Temporal Powers, compoſed in 1304. upon the occaſion of the Difference between King Philip the Fair, and Pope Boniface, containing Six Articles; in which he ſhews, 1. That God hath eſtabliſhed both thoſe Powers. 2. That they are diſtinct and ſeveral. 3. That God, in re-eſtabliſhing the Spiritual Power, hath not given him any Temporal Dominion. 4. That the Temporal Power is not Subject to the Spiritual, but only in Spiritual Cauſes. 5. That the King of France holds his Kingdom of none but God, and has no other Superior. He next Anſwers the Objections brought againſt this Doctrine. This Treatiſe is in the Second Tome of Goldaſtus's Monarchia, p. 95. The Defence of S. Thomas's Books againſt the Correctory of William de la Maze, printed at Venice in 1601. and 1624. A Treatiſe upon the Four Books of the Sentences, printed at Baſil in 1513. A Commentary upon the Firſt Book of the Sentences, printed at Venice in 1571. Some Queſtions upon the Second Book of the Sentences, printed in the ſame City in 1581. Certain Queſtions upon the Third Book of the Sentences, printed at Rome in 1623. A Treatiſe of the Being, Eſſence, Knowledge and Motion of Angels, printed at Venice in 1598. A Tract of Original Sin, printed at Oxford in 1479. A Treatiſe of the Subject of Divinity, and ſome other ſmall Tracts, printed at Venice in 1501. A Comment upon the Six days Work of the Creation, printed at Venice in 1521. Three Books of the Government of Princes, made in favour of Philip the Fair, printed at Rome 1482. and at Venice 1598. Bellarmine makes alſo mention of theſe following Treatiſes, written by the ſame Author, as if they were printed. Nineteen Lectures upon the Song of Songs. A Commentary upon the Epiſtle to the Romans. An Expoſition upon the Chapters, Firmiter, & Marthe. A Treatiſe of the Body of Jeſus Chriſt, or certain Theorems upon the Sacrament of the Altar. A Treatiſe of the Diſtinction of the Articles of Faith. A Writing of the Renunciation of the Pope. Another Writing Compoſed upon the Occaſion of a Clerk not worthily promoted to the Office of a Subdeacon. A Queſtion, viz. Whether Kings can diſpoſe of the Goods of their Kingdoms; A Treatiſe againſt perſons Exempt; A Writing concerning the Influence of God upon the Bleſſed; Another of the Praiſes of the Divine Wiſdom. A Treatiſe of the Defect of the Evil of Fault. A Tract of Predeſtination, Of Preſcience, Paradiſe, and Hell. There is alſo mention made of all theſe Works by Trithemius; and beſides of a Commentary upon the Epiſtles of S. Paul, A Treatiſe of the Office of the Maſs, an Abridgment of Divinity, and divers Sermons [but we have not come to the ſight of any of them.] I paſs over his Philoſophical Tracts, both Printed and MSS. which are very numerous; for he Commented upon all the Books of Ariſtotle, and ſeveral other Books. The Works upon the Lord's Prayer, and the Angel's Salutation [of Mary] belong not to Giles of Rome, but ſome other Author.

Gulielmus Durantus, Biſhop of Menda.

Gulielmus Durantus, or William Durant, the Nephew of the famous Canoniſt Durantus, Biſhop of Menda, of whom we have ſpoken in the laſt Age, was Archdeacon to his Uncle, and Succeeded him in his Biſhoprick in 1296. and governed that Church, till 1328. Being Summoned to the Council of Vienna in 1310. by Pope Clement, he compoſed an Excellent Treatiſe of the Manner of Celebrating a General Council, divided into Three Parts, in which he hath collected and diſpoſed under ſeveral Titles, a great number of Rules out of Councils and Fathers, to reform the Abuſes and Diſorders of all ſorts of States and Conditions, and particularly the Popes and Court of Rome, Prelates, Clergy, and Monks. Philip Probus, a Lawyer of Bourges, cauſed this Work to be printed at Paris in 1545. and dedicated it to Pope Paul III. to the Cardinals, Biſhops, and Abbots, and other Chriſtians, who were to meet in the Council of Trent, as very uſeful to thoſe, that would endeavour a Reformation of Manners among Chriſtians. It hath been ſince printed at Paris in 1535. and laſtly, in a Collection of ſeveral Works of the ſame Nature; which heretofore Mr. Faure, a Doctor of the Faculty of Divinity in Paris, cauſed to be printed there by Clouſier, in 1671.

The time is not certainly known, when Victor Porchet de Salvaticis, a Carthuſian of Genoa flouriſhed; but 'tis probable, it was about 1315. He Compoſed a Treatiſe, Intituled, A Conqueſt queſt for the Defence of the Chriſtian Religion againſt the Jews, printed at Paris 1520. by the Care of Auguſtine Juſtinian Biſhop of Nebio in Corſica. He ſhews a great deal of Jewiſh Learning and reading of their Books in it. He has made uſe of a Book written by Raimundus Martin, called Pugio Fidei, i.e. the Sword of Faith, out of which he owns, that he hath tranſcribed much of what he has written in that Work. Victor Porchet.

Malachias, a Grey-Friar, a Divine of Oxford, and Preacher to Edward II. King of England; was in very great Reputation at the beginning of this Age. We have a Treatiſe of Piety written by him, and printed in 1518. by Henry Stevens, named, Of the Poiſon of Mortal Sins, and their Cure. Malachias.

William le Mair, or Gulielmus Major, a Penitentiary and afterwards Biſhop of Angers, governed the Church of that City from 1290. to 1314. in which Year he died. He wrote an Hiſtory of what paſſed in his Church, while he was Biſhop, publiſhed by Mr. Luke Dacherius in the Tenth Tome of his Spicilegium, p. 247. and has made a Collection of the Synodal Orders and Decrees of his Predeceſſor Nicholas Gelant and of his own, made in the Synods held twice a Year, viz. at the Feaſt of Pentecoſt, and on S. Luke's Day, from the Year 1271. to 1314. in which there are many remarkable things concerning Diſcipline; which are alſo publiſhed by F. Dacherius, in the 11th. Tome of his Spicilegium, p. 201. William Major.

William de Mandagot, or Gulielmus Mandagotus, Born of the Illuſtrious Family of Lodeve, Archdeacon of Niſmes, and Provoſt of Tholouſe; was made Archbiſhop of Ambrun by Boniface VIII. in 1295, from whence he was tranſlated to Aix, and at laſt made Cardinal-Biſhop of Præneſte by Clement V. in 1311. after whoſe Death the Italian Cardinals intended to make him Pope. He Compoſed the Sixth Book of the Decretals, and made a Treatiſe of the Election of Prelates, printed at Colen in 1573. and in other places. He died at Avignon in November 1321. William de Mandagot.

Berengarius de Fredol, Canon, and after Chanter of S. Nazarus, Abbot of S. Aphrodiſius of Beziers, and afterward made Biſhop of that City in 1298. a Famous Canoniſt, compoſed the Sixth Book of the Decretals with Richard Siennenſis, and Gulielmus de Mandagot. He hath dedicated an Explication in an Alphabetical Order, upon the Summ of Cardinal Oſtienſis, to which he gave the title of Oculus, which was printed with that Summ at Baſil. He wrote alſo a Treatiſe about Excommunication and Interdiction, which is found in MS. in the Library of Mr. Colbert, Cod. 249. and 3345. He was appointed Cardinal-Prieſt by the Title of the S. S. Nereus and Achilles by Clement the Vth. and in the Year 1309. he was made Cardinal-Biſhop of Freſcati, and died in 1323. June 10. He had a Nephew, who was made Biſhop of Beziers in 1309. and made Cardinal-Prieſt in the room of his Uncle, and afterward Cardinal-Biſhop of Porto, in the Year 1317. Berengarius de Fredol.

Jacobus de Termes, Abbot of Charleiu, an Abby of Ciſtertians in the Dioceſs of Senlis, Compoſed in the Year 1311. during the Sitting of the General Council of Vienna, a Work againſt thoſe, who oppoſed the Exemptions and Privileges of the Monks, and chiefly againſt Giles of Rome, Archbiſhop of Bourges. This Treatiſe is printed in the Fourth Tome of the Bibliotheca Ciſtertiorum [i.e. the Collection of Writers of the Ciſtertian Order] p. 261. Jacobus de Termes.

Antonius Andreas, a Grey-Friar of Arragon, and Scholar of Scotus, flouriſhed from the beginning of this Age to the Year 1320. He Compoſed a Commentary upon the Books of the Sentences, printed at Venice in 1578. and 1584. A Book about the Principles of Gilbert Porritanus, printed at the ſame place in 1512. and 1517. Divers Comments upon the Books of Ariſtotle and Boethius, printed at the ſame place in 1480. 1509. and 1517. Antonius Andreas.

Harvæus Natalis, a Britain in France, and a Friar-Preacher, of whom he was the Fourteenth General made in 1318. hath Compoſed a Comment upon the Four Books of the Sentences, printed at Venice in 1405. and at Paris in 1647. Four great quodlibetical Queſtions printed at the ſame place in 1513. A Treatiſe about the Pope's Authority printed at Paris, with his Commentary on the Sentences in 1647. and an Apology againſt thoſe who oppoſed the Orders of the Friars-Preachers, and reproached them that they did not lead an Apoſtolical Life, printed at Venice in 1516. He died at Narbonne [Aug. 10.] in the Year 1323. Harvæus Natalis.

Ptolemæus Lucenſis, a Monk of the Order of the Friars-Preachers, a Scholar of S. Thomas Aquinas, and Confeſſor to John XXII. was made Biſhop of Torcello in 1321. hath Compoſed Annals from the Year 1060. to 1303. and a Chronicon of the Popes and Emperors. Theſe two Works were printed at Lyons in 1619. There is found in ſeveral Libraries an Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory of this Author, divided into 24 Books to the Year 1303. which is ſometimes quoted by Rainaldus. Ptolemæus Lucenſis.

Philip, an Abbot of the Ciſtertian Monks, and afterward made Biſhop of Aichſtat in the Year 1305. died in the Year 1322. He wrote the Life of S. Walpurgis, Abbeſs of Hildeſheim, at the deſire of Ann Queen of Hungary, the Emperor Albert's Daughter. He took it out of the Collections of Wolfarus. It is in the Fourth Tome of the Collections of Caniſius. He hath alſo Compoſed an Hiſtory of the Patrons and Biſhops of Aichſtat, publiſhed by Gretſer, and printed at Ingolſtadt, in the Year 1617. Philip.

Hugo

Hugo Pratenſis. Hugo Pratenſis, ſive de Prato Florido, Born at Pratum, a Town near Florence, a Dominican Monk, died in the Year 1322. He was one of the moſt famous Preachers of his time. His Sunday-Sermons upon the Goſpels and Epiſtles for the whole Year, and upon the Feſtivals of the Saints, have been printed at Lyons in 1528. and thoſe of Lent, at Venice in 1578. and 1584. [8°]

John of Naples. Joannes de Neapoli, or John of Naples, a Friar-Preacher, flouriſhed in the beginning of this Age, and died about the Year 1323. He taught ſome time at Paris, and there are printed at Naples 42 Queſtions of Philoſophy and Divinity, which he explained at Paris. His other Works, which are a Commentary upon the Sentences, his quodlibetical Queſtions, and his Sermons [are mentioned by Altamura in Bibl. Predic. but] were never printed.

Petrus Aureolus. Petrus Aureolus, a Native of Verberie upon Oiſe, a Grey-Friar, after he had taught Divinity for a time at Paris, was made Archbiſhop of Aix in 1321. The Year of his Death is not known, but ſome believe, that Jacobus de Concos ſucceeded him the next Year; and if that be true, 'tis not like, that he lived long; or we have the Comment of this Author upon the Four Books of the Sentences, of which the Firſt Book was printed at Rome in 1596. and the Three other with his Quodlibetical Queſtions in 1605. He alſo made an Abridgment of all the Bible, according to the Literal Senſe, printed at Venice in 1507. and 1571. at Strasburg in 1514. at Paris in 1565. and 1585. This Author alſo hath ſome Sermons upon the Immaculate Conception, printed at Tholouſe in 1514. He Compoſed alſo ſeveral others upon the whole Year, which are not yet made Publick, no more than his Writings, Intituled, The Diſtinctions of the Roſe, and his Treatiſe of Poverty, and the poor uſe of things, which is ſaid to be in MS. in the Monaſtery of the Grey-Friars at Seez. He is commonly Sirnamed, Doctor facundus, The Eloquent Doctor, Nicholas Trivet. Nicholas Triveth, or Trivet, the Son of Sir Thomas Trivet of Norfolk, was brought up at London, among the Dominicans, and entred into their Order. He received the Drs. Cap at Oxford, and went to Paris, where he compleated his Studies. Being returned to London, he was made Prior of the Dominicans in that City, where he died in 1328. being 70 years of Age, in great Reputation for his Holineſs. F. Dacherius in the Eighth Tome of his Spicilegium, has publiſhed a Chronicle of this Author from 1136. to 1307. In every Year he obſerves the Years of the Popes, Emperors of the Weſt, Kings of France and England, and relates the Accidents at large, particularly thoſe that related to the Hiſtory of England, and his own Order. There is alſo another Work of this Author printed at Tholouſe in 1488. and at Venice in 1489. which is a Commentary upon the Books of S. Auſtin, De Civitate Dei. Divers MS. Treatiſes of this Author are found in the Libraries in England; and among others, an Hiſtory of the Acts of the Emperors, Apoſtles, and Kings [in Magdalen-College Library at Oxford, Cod. 138.] A Commentary upon the Book of Boethius de Conſolatione, [in the Publick Library at Cambridge, Cod. 236.] Flowers upon the Rule of S. Auguſtine [in the Lumleian Library, Cod. 291.] and a Treatiſe upon the Maſs [in Merton College Library in Oxford, Cod. 147. No. 1. and in the Archbiſhop of Canterbury's Library at Lambeth, and elſewhere.]

Auguſtinus Triumphus. Auguſtinus Triumphus, of Ancona, an Hermite of the Order of St. Auguſtine, flouriſhed from the Year 1274. when he was preſent at the Council of Lyons, to 1328. when he died at Naples, April 2. in the 85th. Year of his Age. He Compoſed a Summ concerning the Eccleſiaſtical Authority, dedicated to Pope John XXII. and printed at Augsburg in 1473. and at Rome 1479. and 1582. He firſt began a Book, called, Milleloquium, out of the Writings of S. Auguſtine, which was after finiſhed by Bartholomew Urbinas. Some attribute to him certain Commentaries upon the Lord's-Prayer, the Angelical Salutation, and the Magnificat, printed [at Rome] in 1590. and 1592. which ſome impute to Steuchus de Eugubio: But Trithemius makes mention of the laſt of theſe Commentaries in his Catalogue of the Works of Auguſtine of Ancona, and of certain Commentaries of the ſame Author, upon Ezekiel, upon the New Teſtament, upon the Four Books of the Sentences, a Book of Quodlibetical Queſtions, a Treatiſe of the Spirit againſt the Greeks, a Work upon the entrance into the Land of Promiſe, a Treatiſe of the X Strings, and a Book of the Powers of the Soul; Sermons upon all the Sundays in the Year, and the Saints Days. But we have none of theſe Works: They are kept cloſe in ſome Libraries [viz. at Ancona, and in the Vatican.]

Albert of Padua. Albert of Padua, an Auguſtine Hermite, the Scholar of Ægidius Romanus, and a Dr. of Paris, died in that City in the Year 1323. or 1328. He Compoſed a Commentary upon the Books of the Sentences; and others upon the Pentateuch, Goſpels, and St. Paul's Epiſtles, which are kept in MS. at Padua. His Sermons only are printed at Paris in 1544. and 1550. and at Venice in 1584. and his Explication of the Goſpels upon all the Sundays of the Year at Venice in 1476.

Joannes Baſſolis. Joannes Baſſolis, a Grey-Friar, a Scholar of Scotus's, commonly called Doctor Ordinatiſſimus, the moſt Orderly Doctor, flouriſhed about the Year 1420. and taught at Rheims and Mechlen. He has a Comment upon the Four Books of the Sentences printed at Paris in 1517. [where alſo ſome Miſcellanies of his in Philoſophy and Phyſick were alſo printed; when he died is not known.]

Jacobus de Lauſanna. Jacobus de Lauſanna, a Monk of the Order of the Friars-Preachers, a Dr. of Paris, and after the Provincial of his Order, is the Author of a great Work of Morality, divided into Twelve Books, and printed at Limoges in 1528. and of ſeveral Sermons, which are alſo printed. The time time and quality of this Author are not very certain. Some have written, that he was a Licentiate at Paris in the Year 1317. others make him Biſhop of Lauſanna about 1320. but there is no certainty of it; for it is more probable, that he took his Name from Lauſanna, becauſe he was Born in that City.

Henry de Carret.

Henry de Carret, a Grey-Friar, made in the Year 1300. Biſhop of Lucca, by Boniface VIII. and driven from his Biſhoprick in the Year 1326. by Lewis of Bavaria, hath Compoſed a Treatiſe upon the Prophet Ezekiel; which is in MS. in Mr. Colbert's Library.

Dominicus Grenerius.

Dominicus Grenerius, a Doctor of Paris, a Preaching-Friar, Apoſtolick-Penitentiary, was made Mr. of the Holy Palace by Pope John XXII. in the Year 1326. and promoted the ſame Year by the ſame Pope to the Biſhoprick of Pamiez, hath made Poſtills upon all the Hiſtorical Books of the Bible; which are found in the Library of Mr. Colbert, Cod. 114, 115, 116, 117, 118. He lived till after the Year 1342.

Per. de Auvergne.

Petrus Alvernienſis, or Peter of Auvergne, a Canon of the Church of Paris, Compoſed a Summ of Quodlibetical Queſtions about 1320. 'Tis in Mr. Colbert's Library, Cod. 963.

Vitalis è Furno.

Vitalis è Furno, a Native of Bazas [in Guienne] a Grey-Friar, was employed by Pope Clement V. to Examine the Errors of John Oliva, and made Cardinal of the Title of S. Martin in 1312. John XXII. gave him the Title of the Biſhoprick of Albania after the Death of the Cardinal of Aux, which happened in 1320. He maintained in the Conſiſtory in the Year 1321. againſt the Judgment of the Pope, That it was not Heretical to aſſert, That neither Jeſus Chriſt, nor his Apoſtles had nothing of their own, but lived in Common, and was ſo bold as to declare, that it was an Hereſie to hold the contrary; but the Pope being very much enraged againſt him, he begged Pardon and retracted his Aſſertion. He died 1327. He hath left us a Book, called, Speculum Morale, or a Moral Looking-glaſs upon the Scripture; which puts a Myſtical Sence upon almoſt all Paſſages both of the Old and New Teſtament. This Work was Compoſed by this Author in 1305. and printed at Lyons in 1513. and at Venice in 1514. and 1600. where alſo the Comments of this Author upon the Proverbs of Solomon, upon the Four Goſpels, and the Revelation are printed. The Treatiſe upon the Preſervation of Health, and the Cures of Diſeaſes, printed in his name at Mayence in 1531. belong to an Author of greater Antiquity, who lived in the time of Bela King of Hungary, of whom he ſpeaks; as Mr. Baluzius has already obſerved. They, who have written of the Authors of the Order of S. Francis, do make mention of ſome other Works of this Author in MS. and among others, his Commentaries upon the Sentences, which are ſaid to be in the Vatican Library.

Marinus Sanutus.

Marinus Sanutus, or Sanudo, Sirnamed Torſellus, from an Inſtrument ſo called, of which he was the Inventor, a Native of Rivoalti, a Town under the States of Venice, after he had ſpent his Youth in an Expedition to the Holy Land, Compoſed a Work to which he gave the Title, The Secrets of the Faithful of the Croſs, in which he undertakes to preſcribe a Way, how the Chriſtians may recover the Holy Land, divided into Three Books. In the Firſt Book he ſhews, That the way to weaken the Infidels, is to hold no Trade nor Commerce with them. In the Second he ſhews, How they muſt be Attacqued, in what Places, and with what Forces. In the Third he gives an Hiſtory of the Holy Land, and the Expedition of the Chriſtians thither; that he may inſtruct them in ſuch Methods, as may Succeed in the Conqueſt of it, by avoiding the Faults of the one, and imitating the Conduct of the other. Sanutus preſented this Work in the Year 1312. to Pope John XXII. with Geographical Tables, and dedicated it to the Kings of France, England and Sicily, Exhorting them to undertake the Conqueſt of the Holy Land. He hath alſo written ſeveral Letters upon the ſame Subject to the Princes, Cardinals and Prelates, which are printed at the End of his Work, publiſhed by Bogarſius in his Collection, Intituled, Geſta Dei per Francos, the Acts of God done by the French, printed at Hanover in 1611.

Alexander de S. Elpidio.

Alexander de S. Elpidio, a City of Italy near Rome, was choſen in 1312. General of the Order of Auguſtine-Hermites, and made in the Year 1325. Archbiſhop of Ravenna, Compoſed by the Order of Pope John XXII. a Treatiſe about the Juriſdiction of the Empire, and Authority of the Pope, divided into two Books, and printed at Lyons in 1498. and at Ariminum in 1624. It is ſaid, That there are ſome MS. Treatiſes of the ſame Author; and among others, a Treatiſe of Evangelical Poverty and the Unity of the Church [with ſome Commentaries upon Ariſtotle's Works, preſerved in the Library of the Auguſtine-Friars at Bononia, by Joſephus Pamphilus, in Chron. Erem. p. 46.]

Alvarus Pelagius.

Alvarus Pelagius, a Native of Galecia in Spain, Dr. of Law in the Univerſity of Bononia, entred into the Order of Grey-Friars in 1304. when he had ſtudied Divinity at Piſa, and afterward at Paris under Joannes Scotus. He was made by Pope John XXII. about the Year 1330. Apoſtolick Penitentiary, and afterwards honoured with the Dignity of Biſhop of Coronna in Achaia; and laſtly, made Biſhop of Silves in Portugal. He defended John XXII. againſt Michael de Caſenas. We have an excellent Treatiſe compoſed by him, called, Planctus Eccleſiæ [i. e. The Churches Complaints] dedicated to Petrus Gomeſius General of his own Order, which he finiſhed at Compoſtella in 1340. and has been printed at Ulm in 1474. at Lyons 1517. and at Venice in 1560. A Summ of Divinity printed at Ulm in 1474. A MS. Treatiſe, which is found in the Vatican Library, and in Mr. Colbert's Cod. 2071. Intituled, Collyrium Fidei contra Hæreſes, [i. e. A Salve to preſerve the Faith againſt Hereſies.] A long Diſcourſe of the Viſion of Souls made before Pope John XXII. in which he defends the Judgment of that Pope. It is in MS. in the Library of the Grey-Friars at Toledo. Trithemius makes mention of a Treatiſe of this Author, Intituled,

The Mirrour of Kings, and an Apology divided into Four Books. The Treatiſe of Alvarus Pelagius, De planctu Eccleſiæ, is divided into two Books. In the Firſt, he treats of the State of the Church, its Foundation, Juriſdiction, Power, and Sanctity; the Pope and Cardinals Authority. In it he maintains as well the Temporal, as Spiritual Soveraignty of the Pope; That none can Appeal from his Judgment; That he has none that can Judge him upon Earth; That he has two Swords; That he is above Emperors and Kings, and may depoſe them. He alſo in it treats of the Pope's diſpenſing Power, the Authority of his Legates, Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures, and the Power of Biſhops, Duty of Kings, Qualities of the Church, and particularly its Unity; Of Schiſm and Schiſmaticks. The Second Book contains many Paſſionate Declamations againſt the Diſorders and Unrulineſs of the Members of the Church of all Degrees, and the means to remedy them. In it he alſo treats of the Obligation of Biſhops to Reſidence, of Simony, of ſuch Faults as the Popes may be guilty of, of their Obligations and Duties; as alſo of the Cardinals, Patriarchs and Biſhops. He deſcribes the Vices into which they commonly fall, and ſpares not the Abbots and Monks. From the Clergy he paſſes to the Laity; and having run through all Eſtates and Employments, Conditions, Ages and Sexes, he diſcovers their Sins, to which they are Subject, and oppoſes the Errors of the Begards. In it alſo he debates the queſtion about the Poverty of Jeſus Chriſt and his Apoſtles, and endeavours to reconcile the Decretal, Exiit, with the Opinion of John XXII. and proves, that it is not Heretical to aſſert that Jeſus Chriſt and his Apoſtles had not any Dominion either in common, or particular to themſelves, nor any property, nor any right of Uſe, but the more actual uſage of them. Upon this Subject he enlarges with the reſpect to the Franciſcans, and the Queſtions debated in Pope John XXII's time, but defends his Conſtitutions notwithſtanding; affirming, That it belongs to the Pope to explain the Rule. He after ſpeaks of the other Virtues of the Monks; as their Obedience, Humility, Charity, Silence, and the Oppoſite Vices, and ends this Work with an Explication of the Seven Gifts of the Holy Spirit.

William Ockam.

William Ockam, born in a Village of the ſame Name in the County of Surrey, in England, a Grey-Friar, and Sirnamed, The Singular Doctor; was the Head, or Leader of the Sect of Schoolmen, called Nominals, becauſe they did not multiply things according to the difference of their Names; but attempted to know, and explain the Proprieties of terms. He flouriſhed in the Univerſity of Paris in the beginning of this Age, and made a Work of the Eccleſiaſtical and Secular Power, in the defence of Philip the Fair, againſt Boniface VIII. He after fell in with a Party of his own Order, who maintained that Jeſus Chriſt had nothing in Proper nor in Common, and was one of the great Adverſaries of John XXII. who Condemned him to Silence under the Penalty of Excommunication; but in the iſſue, he declared himſelf openly for the Emperor Lewis of Bavaria, and for the Anti-Pope Petrus Corbarius, and wrote againſt John XXII. who Excommunicated him in 1330. whereupon he left France and went to Lewis of Bavaria, who received him favourably. He finiſhed his Life in that Court, and wrote always in his defence. It is ſaid, that he uſed to ſpeak to the Emperor thus, O Prince, defend me with thy Sword, and I will defend thee with my Pen. He died at Munick [April 10.] 1347.

His Works were never Collected into one Body, but printed ſeverally. They are of Three Sorts: 1. Works of Philoſophy. 2. Treatiſes of School-Divinity. 3. Books of Controverſie. His Philoſophical Books are, his Expoſition upon Logick, printed at Bononia in 1496. A Sum of Logick printed at Venice in 1508. and 1591. and at Oxford 1675. His great Summ of Logick, printed at Venice in 1532. His Queſtions upon the Eight Books of Ariſtotle's Phyſicks, printed at Strasburg in 1491. and 1506. His Natural Philoſophy, or an Abridgment of a Summ taken out of the Books of Phyſick, printed at Venice in 1606. and at Rome in 1637. His Works of School-Divinity, are his Queſtions upon the Four Books of Sentences, printed at Lyons in 1495. his Centiloquium, containing the whole Science of Speculative Divinity in a Hundred Concluſions, printed in the next Year in the ſame place. A Commentary upon the firſt Book of the Sentences, printed in 1483. Seven Quodlibetical Queſtions, with a Treatiſe upon the Sacrament of the Altar, or of the Body of Jeſus Chriſt, printed at Paris in 1487. and 1513. at Strasburg in 1491. and at Venice in 1516. [and at Paris 1487. and 1513.]

His Books of Controverſie againſt the Popes Boniface VIII. and John XXII. are put together by Goldaſtus into his Collection, Intituled, Monarchia. The Firſt is about the Eccleſiaſtical and Secular Power, in the form of a Dialogue between a Soldier and a Clergyman; in it he confutes the pretended Claim of Pope Boniface VIII. to a Superiority over the Temporal Affairs of Kings. This Treatiſe was printed before at Paris in 1598. The Second is a Treatiſe, containing a Reſolution to Eight Queſtions about the Eccleſiaſtical and Secular Power. In it he diſcuſſes theſe following Queſtions, I. Whether the Supream Spiritual Power and the Supream Temporal Power may meet in the ſame Subject, and whether the Pope hath them both? He recites the Reaſons and Anſwers on both ſides, and at laſt concludes, That although both theſe Powers may meet in the ſame Man, yet it is not at all fit, that they ſhould meet in him; and that the Pope hath only a Spiritual Juriſdiction. II. Whether the Lay-Power hath any thing proper to it, which is immediately derived from God, and whether it depends on the Pope? He treats of this Queſtion in the ſame manner as the former, and gives us to underſtand, that the true Opinion is this, That Kings depend immediately on God, and not on the Pope, as far as concerns their Temporal Power. III. Whether the Pope, and the Church of Rome have by the appointment of Jeſus Chriſt, a Power to give a Temporal Juriſdiction to the Emperor and Kings, Kings, and whether they hold it from him? He recites the Reaſons on both ſides; but manifeſtly ſhews what Opinion he was of. IV. Whether the Election of a King of the Romans, or of the Emperor, entitles to a Supream Power, and whether it depends upon the Ceremony of Unction uſed at the Coronation. He treats of the Diſtinction between the King of the Romans, and the Emperor, of the Right of Charles the Great to the Empire, and of the Right of his Succeſſors, as well to the Empire, as Kingdom of France, of the Right of Election; and concludes, that the Electors in chooſing a King of the Romans, which he looks upon, as not differing from the Emperor, confer on him a Right to Govern the Empire. V. Whether in thoſe Kingdoms, where there is a Succeſſion eſtabliſhed, the Unction performed by the Clergy, gives any Temporal Authority? VI. Whether Kings are Subject to them that Crown them? VII. Whether a King, who ſhall ſuffer himſelf to be Crowned by any other Biſhop, than him, to whom it belongs of Right, loſes his Title of King, and his Regal Authority? VIII. Whether the Canonical Election of the Princes Electors gives the King of the Romans a Right to any other than the Hereditary Countries. He treats of all theſe Queſtions after ſuch a manner, that though he does not plainly lay down his own Judgment; yet he ſhews where the Truth lies. In the end of his Treatiſe, he relates the Errors, of which John XXII. was accuſed, as well concerning the Poverty of Jeſus Chriſt and his Apoſtles, as about the Viſion of God. His Third Work is a large Treatiſe in the form of a Dialogue, divided into ſeveral Books, in which he examines the Queſtions controverted in his time, between John XXII. and his Adverſaries in the ſame Method; as in his former Treatiſe. In the Firſt Book he inquires whether it belongs to Divines, or Canoniſts to judge of Hereſies and Catholick Truths. In the Second he lays down, what is Hereſie and what Catholick Truth. In it alſo he Treats of ſeveral Curious Queſtions concerning the Principles of Faith, and the Condemnation of Hereſies by Councils and Popes. In the Third he Examines, who are Judges of Hereſies, and ſhews, that none but ſuch as are obſtinate in their Error are to be treated as Hereticks; and ſo adds, what are the Conditions neceſſary to repute a Man an Heretick. In the Fourth Book alſo he treats of the ſame Queſtion, and preſcribes the means to convince a Man of Obſtinacy. In the Fifth he ſhews who may fall into Hereſie, and particularly, whether the Pope or College of Cardinals may err; In it alſo he treats of the Primacy of the Church of Rome, and of the Infallibility of a General Council, and of the whole Church. In the Sixth he treats of the Puniſhment of Hereticks, and particularly of a Pope, who is either Suſpected, or Convicted of Hereſie; the Method of Proceeding againſt him, the Judges which he may have upon Earth, and the Penalties which may be inflicted on him. He alſo conſiders, what ſhare Lay-Princes have in the Deciſions and Executions of ſuch Judgments as concern the Faith. In the Seventh he treats of ſuch as give Credit to Hereticks, who defend and protect them, and particularly of ſuch as follow an Heretical Pope; who obey him, and maintain his Heretical Doctrines and Communicate with him. After he has explained theſe Queſtions in the Firſt Part of this Dialogue, he oppoſes in the Second the pretended Hereſie of John XXII. concerning the Viſion of God, and confutes the Reaſons brought to excuſe him. The Third Part is divided into two Treatiſes. The Firſt is about the Authority of the Pope, and the Second about that of the Emperor. In the Firſt Book he inquires how far the Pope's Power extends it ſelf, and whether he hath any Temporal Authority. In the Second he examines, whether it be convenient for all Chriſtians to be Subject to One Head, and the State of the Church to be Monarchical. Whether there may be ſeveral Supream Biſhops, or Independant Patriarchs. In the Third Book he inquires what that Authority is, to which Men muſt yield a Belief under pain of Damnation. In it he handles many Curious Queſtions concerning the Authority of Scripture, General Councils, Popes and Fathers in Matters of Faith. In the Fourth he diſcourſes of the Supremacy of S. Peter, viz. Whether Jeſus Chriſt made him the Head and Prince of the Apoſtles, and whether he had Power over them. It is eaſie to diſcern, that he is for the Affirmative.

In his Second Treatiſe, which is concerning the Power of the Emperor, he examines in the Firſt Book, Whether it is convenient that all the World ſhould be Subject to one Prince; how far the Authority of the Emperor extends; whether it depends upon the Pope, or God only; whether the Empire may be Tranſlated, Divided, or Separated. In the Second he treats of the Emperor's Authority in things Temporal; declares the difference between the Spiritual Power of the Pope and that of the Emperor; and ſhews, how far the Power of this latter extends. In the laſt Books, he diſcourſes of the Emperor's Power over the Perſons of Churchmen, and Revenues of the Church; He inquires, whether the Right of chooſing a Pope belongs to him, or the Romans; whether theſe laſt may incroach upon him, if the Emperor be the Pope's Judge, and have Authority over him. He had promiſed in the Preface to the Third Part of that Work, Seven other Treatiſes; The Firſt concerning the behaviour of John XXII. whether he died an Heretick, or Orthodox Perſon. The Second of the Life of Lewis of Bavaria, to ſhew, whether he were a Lawful Emperor or no. The Third of the Carriage of Benedict XII. whom ſeveral Acknowledged to be Pope. The Fourth of the Life of Friar Michael Ceſena. The Fifth of the behaviour of Friar Gerhard Odonis, whom ſome reputed the Lawful General of the Grey-Friars. The Sixth of the demeanour of William Ockam. And the laſt, of the Conduct of the Princes, Biſhops, and other Chriſtians, who had adhered to, favoured and maintained thoſe of whom he had ſpoken. Theſe Treatiſes, 'tis not certain, whether they were ever finiſhed by Ockam, or whether they are loſt.

But we have two Treatises more of this Author's against John XXII. The one Intituled, An Abridgment of the Errors of Pope John XXII. as well in respect to the Poverty of Jesus Christ, and his Apostles, as about the Vision of God, the Trinity, and Power of God, in which he answers the Reasons brought to excuse that Pope, and accuses Benedict XII. to have been a Favourer of the Heresies of John XXII. and to have broached a New One, in forbidding that when any Question is brought to the Pope, to choose either the Negative or the Affirmative Part, before the Pope has decided it. The other is a large Work, Intituled, Ninety Days; because he spent so much time in Composing it; in which he confutes word by word the Four Decretals of John XXII. Quia Vir reprobus, Ad conditorem, Cum inter, and Quia quorundam.

Lastly, There is also another Treatise of Ockam's Composed upon the Occasion of the Divorce of Margaret Dutchess of Carinthia, and the Son of the King of Bohemia, in which he explains the Right of the Emperor and Princes in Matrimonial Causes. All these Books of Controversie are found, as we have observed in the First and Second Tome of the Monarchy of Goldastus, and have been printed severally at Lyons in 1496. There is in the Library of M. Colbert, a MS. Treatise of Ockam's against Benedict XII. divided into Seven Books; and a Letter to the General Chapter of the Grey-Friars met in 1334. at Assisi.

Marsilius Patavinus.

Marsilius Patavinus, or Marsilius of Padua, Sirnamed Menandrinus, a famous Lawyer of his time, stoutly defended the Party of the Emperor Lewis of Bavaria against the Pope; and about the Year 1324. Composed a large Work upon that Subject, Intituled, A Defender of the Peace against the Jurisdiction usurped by the Pope of Rome, dedicated to the Emperor; It is divided into Three Parts. In the First he settles the Civil and Temporal Authority and Jurisdiction, its Extent and Bounds. In the Second he shews the Nature of the Ecclesiastical Power, what is its Extent, and what are the Effects of it, and how it differs from the Civil Authority. In it he maintains, That the Church, properly speaking, hath no Compulsive Authority or Jurisdiction; That all the Apostles were equal in Power; That all Bishops and Ecclesiastical Ministers have their Power immediately from God; That all Bishops have Power to decide Matters of Faith; That a General Council is the Supream Judge of the Church, and that the Government of the Church belongs to that; That the Bishop of Rome is not the Head of other Bishops, nor has any Primacy above them; That he is the first in a Council, and has Power to execute its Rules and Decrees. In it he also shews, wherein the Popes have exceeded their Authority and Power, as well in Spiritual as Temporal Things, and answers the Objections that may be made against that Doctrine, and the Passages of the Fathers usually against it. In the last Part he draws 42 Conclusions from the Principles laid down in the Two former Books, of which these are some of the Principal: 1. That only the Doctrine contained in the Divine, and Canonical Scripture, or that which is deduced from thence by the Interpretation of a General Council is true, and necessary to believe in order to Salvation. 2. That General Councils only can settle such Articles of Faith, as oblige us to believe them, as necessary to Salvation. 3. That the Gospel does not appoint to Compel Men by Mulcts, and Temporal Punishments to observe the Commandments of the Law of God. 5. That no Mortal Man can dispense with the Commands of the Gospel; and nothing but a General Council can forbid what the Gospel permits. 7. That the Popes cannot Condemn to any Secular, or Temporal Punishment. 14, & 15. That Bishops, as Bishops, have not any compulsive Jurisdiction; but it belongs to Princes only. 16. That Bishops can't execute their Excommunications, or Interdicts; but by the Authority of the Magistrates. 17. That all Bishops are equal by Divine Right. 18. That Bishops may excommunicate the Bishop of Rome, as well as he excommunicate them. 19. That they cannot give a Dispensation to celebrate such Marriages as are forbidden by the Law of God, and it belongs to Princes to dispense with such as are forbidden by Human Laws, to Legitimate Children, and make them capable not only to inherit, but to be promoted to Ecclesiastical Orders. 23. That it belongs to Princes to bestow Ecclesiastical Offices and Benefices. 27. That Magistrates for the Publick Good, may make use of the superfluous Revenues of the Church. 29. That it belongs to them to allow, or hinder the Erecting of Colleges, or Monasteries. 30. That it belongs to them only to Punish Hereticks with Temporal Punishments. 32. That a General Council can Erect a Metropolis only. 33. That it belongs to Princes to call a General Council. 34, 35, & 36. That none but a General Council, or a Prince, can appoint Fasts, or new days of Abstinence, canonize Saints, or make Rules of general Discipline. 38. That Evangelical Perfection requires a Poverty, which consisteth in having no Moveables, and enjoying Goods without Dominion, and without a design of defending them, or recovering them before a Secular Judge. 39. That Maintenance and Provision is due to Bishops and Ministers of the Gospel; but Men are not obliged to pay them Tythes if they have a Subsistence otherwise. 41. That it belongs only to a Prince, or a General Council to raise or depose the Bishop of Rome. These Conclusions plainly demonstrate, That Marsilius designing to defend the Rights of the Empire against the Attempts of the Popes, fell into the Opposite Extream, and that he rather wrote as a Lawyer, than as a Divine; although in the Second Part he quotes many excellent Passages of the Fathers, Councils, and Ecclesiastical Writers.

The same Author composed another Treatise after the former, concerning the Translation of the Empire, in which he gives us an History of the Ancient State of the Roman Empire, the Translation of the Greek Empire to the French, and of the French to the Germans, and of the Institution of Electors, and a Consultation about the Divorce of Jane, the King of Bohemia's Daughter, Daughter, and Margaret Dutchess of Carinthia; in which he proves the Right of a Prince about Marriages. These three Treatises are inserted in the Second Tome of Goldastus's Monarchy, and the first was printed by it self at Basil in 1522. and at Francfort in 1612. John XXII. condemned this Treatise by an express Decree recited in Raynaldus. He was also opposed by Alvarus Pelagius in his Book, De Planctu Ecclesiæ, by Alexander de S. Elpidio, by Peter de Palude, and by Cardinal Turrecremata.

The same Question concerning the Supream Power of Kings, was also debated in France under Charles V. and the Pretences by which the Popes endeavoured to raise themselves above the Temporal Jurisdiction of Kings, mightily opposed. Several other Treatises were made to defend the Soveraignty of Princes, and to prove that the Pope's Power did not extend to Temporal Things. We have two considerable Ones of them still extant.

The first is Radulphus de Prælles, a Counsellor, and Master of Requests to the French King; who Composed a Treatise in Latin, and after translated it into French by the said King's Order. The Other is a larger Treatise in Latin, Composed also by the Order of the same Prince, Intituled, Somnium Viridarij [or the Dream of the Orchard] in the form of a Dialogue between a Clergyman and a Soldier. The Author of it conceals himself under the Name of Philotheus Achillinus, a Counsellor of the King; But some Attribute it to Philip Mazerius, or De Mazeriis, a Soldier, who was heretofore a Chancellor of the Kingdom of Cyprus, and after Secretary to Pope Gregory XI. and last of all put himself into the Service of Charles V. from which he retired into the Monastery of Celestines at Paris, where he died. These two Treatises are in the First Tome of the Monarchy of Goldastus. The other was printed in French, at Paris in 1491. and in Latin 1503. and with the Imprimatur of the Parliament in 1516. Radulphus de Prælles Composed another Treatise, Intituled, Rex Pacificus, of which he makes mention, and translated the Books of S. Austin, De Civitate Dei, into French, printed at Abbeville in 1486. and at Paris in 1531.

Radulphus de Prælles.

Philip Mazerius.

The Soldier Mazerius wrote also the Life of S. Thomas, or Petrus Thomasius, Archbishop of Crete, published by Bollandus on Jan. 29.

Ubertinus de Casalis, a Grey-Friar, was one of the Chief of the Spiritual part of the Monks against the Community, and maintained before Clement V. the Writings of Petrus Olivæ. He also Composed several Books in defence of that Party before and after the Council of Vienna, of which one of them begins with these words, Sanctitati Apostolicæ, i. e. To the Apostolick Holiness; and the other with these words, Super tribus sceleribus; i. e. Concerning Three Wickednesses; and the last, which he Composed since the Council of Vienna, with these words, Ne imposterum, i. e. Lest for the future. He defended himself before Pope Clement V. and obtained a Bull of Absolution. But he was accused anew by Friar Bonagratia under the Papacy of John XXII. who assigned him for his Judge, William Cardinal-Bishop of S. Sabina, to whom the Friar presented a Writing in 1321. against the Behaviour and Writings of Ubertinus de Casalis; in which he quotes the Writings, of which we have spoken. In the Year 1322. Ubertinus being asked his Opinion by the Pope concerning the Poverty of Jesus Christ; he answered in Writing, That Jesus Christ, and his Apostles as Heads of the Church, had Goods to distribute to the Poor, and Ministers of the Church; but if they be considered, as private Persons, who attained and practised a Perfection in Religion, we must distinguish the two Ways of having any thing; The one Civil and Worldly, by which they had right to defend what they had, and recover it from any that had taken it; The other Civil and Natural by a Right of Common Charity; That Jesus Christ and his Apostles had nothing in the first sense, but in the second they had all things necessary for Life; This Answer being read in the Consistory, was approved by the Pope; and Ubertinus de Casalis defended it again in 1330. These two Treatises are published by Mr. Baluzius, in the First Tome of his Miscellanies. There are two other Books attributed to Ubertinus, the one intituled, The Tree of a Crucified Life, printed at Venice in 1485. and the other, The Seven Estates of the Church; printed in the same place 1516.

Ubertinus de Casalis.

Michael Casenas, who was chosen General of the Grey-Friars in 1316. undertook a Defence of the Opinion of the Divines of his Order concerning the Poverty of Jesus Christ, against John XXII. and caused it to be determined in a General Chapter held 1322. at Paris; That neither Jesus Christ, nor his Apostles had any thing in Proper. But maintaining the same Doctrine obstinately before the Pope at Avignon in 1327. he was Arrested and put in Prison; but while he was proceeding further against him, he escaped, and appealed from all that John XXII. had done, or should do against him, and published his Appeal at Perusia; but notwithstanding this Appeal, the Pope published a Bull against him, by which he deposes him, and orders a General Chapter to be called by Bertrandus de la Tour, the Vicar-General of that Order, which was held at Paris; and in it the Deposition of Michael de Casenas, he was approved and confirmed. In the Year 1331. he caused another Chapter to be held about the same Subject, at Perpignan, to choose another General, and to reject the Common Opinion of that Order concerning the Poverty of Jesus Christ. Michael Casenas wrote a Treatise, which he addressed to this Assembly to turn them from that Resolution; in which he accuses John XXII. of Twelve Errors. He also sent another Treatise to all the Monks of his Order, to engage them to maintain his Opinion; and presented a Petition to the Emperor, and the Princes of the Empire, against John XXII. in which he delivers and confutes the Twelve Errors, of which he accused that Pope. These three Treatises are published in the Second Tome of Goldastus's Monarchy. Michael flying to the Protection of the Emperor Lewis of Bavaria valued not the Pope's Curses, but kept the Title of General of the Grey-Friars till the Day of his Death; which happened at Munick in 1343.

John of Gaunt, or de Janduno.

Joannes de Jandumo, or John of Gaunt, so called from his Native Country, was one of the Divines, who were of the Party of Lewis of Bavaria. He Composed a Treatise of the Ecclesiastical Power. Goldastus at first believed, that that was the Treatise which bore this Title, An Information of the Nullity of the Processes made by John XXII. against the Emperor Lewis of Bavaria, Composed in 1338. which he therefore Published under his Name in the First Tome of his Collection; but he has since owned, as he declares in his Preface, that it is a different Work. He also observes, That Marsilius Ficinus hath published a Commentary of John of Gaunt, upon the Sentences, and some Quodlibetical Questions; but we cannot find that Edition. We have only several Philosophical Commentaries of that Author, printed in several places.

Bernardus Guido.

Bernardus Guido, a Native of Limoges, was Born in 1260. and entred into the Order of Friars-Preachers in 1280. and after he had been Prior of the Abbies of Albi, Carcassone, Castres, and Limoges, was appointed Inquisitor against the Albigenses in 1305. and Procurator-General of his Order in 1312. Four Years after he was sent into Italy by John XXII. and received as a Reward for his Labour in 1323. the Bishoprick of Tuy in Gallæcia; from whence he was translated in the following Year to the Bishoprick of Lodeve. He died Dec. 13. 1331. He Composed several Works; of which these are in the Library of Mr. Colbert, viz. A Catalogue of the Roman Popes, Roman Emperors, Bishops of Tholouse and Limoges, and Earls of Tholouse; A Chronicle, or Genealogy of the Kings of France; A Description of the Gauls; A Book of the Names of the Apostles; Another of the Names of the Disciples; The Names of the Saints of the Diocess of Limoges; A Book of the Foundation of the Monks of Grandmont; Another of the Monks of Artigia, and a third of the Foundation of the Monastery of S. Augustine of Limoges; A Treatise of the Times and Years of the Councils, and several Tracts of the Articles of Faith, and Sacraments of the Church; On the Ten Commandments, Original Sin, The Office of the Mass, and of the Accidents that may happen in the Celebration of it; A Part of his Sanctorale, or the Mirrour of Saints. There are Five other Treatises in the Library of the Friars-Preachers at Tholouse, viz. A Treatise of the Advantages of the Blessed, Two Volumes of Sermons, and a Work Intituled, The Practice of the Office of an Inquisitor. He also continued, and augmented the Book of Stephen de Salagnac's History of the Establishment of the Order of Friars-Preachers; The Mirrour of Popes, Emperors, and Kings of France, to the Year 1322. dedicated to Pope John XXII. which is in the Library of the Friars-Preachers at Avignon. Such of these Works, as have been printed, are as follow; Two Lives of Clement V. and two other Lives of John XXII. published by Mr. Bosquet, and Mr. Baluzius in his Collection of the Lives of the Popes of Avignon; The Life of S. Fulchran, printed by Bollandus, Feb. 15. The Life of S. Glodesindis by Surius, July 25. An History of the Monks of Grandmont, and the Monastery of S. Austin at Limoges to the Year 1313. by F. Labbé in his Bibliotheca. The Epistle Dedicatory, and Preface to his Mirrour of Saints by the same Person, and the Acts of the Earls of Tholouse, by Catellus.

Guido de Perpiniano.

Guido de Terrenâ de Perpiniano, a Native of Rousillon, a Doctor of Paris, and a Carmelite, was made General of his Order in 1318. and afterward appointed Inquisitor-General by Pope John XXII. who made him Bishop of Majorca in 1321. from whence he was translated to the Bishoprick of Elne. He died Aug. 21. 1342. He Composed a Summ of Heresies with the Confutation of them, dedicated to Goncelin Cardinal-Bishop of Albania, printed at Paris in 1528. and at Cologne in 1631. with an Harmony of the Four Evangelists. There is in the French King's Library a Commentary of this Author upon Gratian's Decrees, and a Treatise of the Perfection of Life, in Mr. Colbert's; where he treats of the Poverty of Jesus Christ, and his Apostles. He made this Treatise at Paris. Mr. Baluzius hath published the Synodal Decrees of this Bishop, in the Appendix of his Work, Intituled, Marcha Hispanica, P. 1454.

Arnoldus de Terrenâ.

There is another Terrenâ, named Arnoldus, who is thought to be the Nephew of the former, of whom we have spoken. He was a Doctor of Law, and Sacrist of Perpignan, who flourished about the End of this Age, and wrote about the Year 1373. a Treatise of the Mass and Canonical Hours, and Theological Questions, which he Compiled at Avignon; which Works are found in MS. in Mr. Colbert's Library.

Francis Mayronius.

Franciscus Mayronius, Born at Digne in Provence, a Grey-Friar, a Scholar of Scotus, being Batchelor of Divinity in the University of Paris, first introduced by his Example, an Act in the Sorbonne, which is held from Morning to Night in the Schools of the Sorbonne by one Respondent without any President, and without interruption. There he received the Doctor's Cap in 1323. and died at Placentia in 1325. His Comments upon the Four Books of the Sentences, and some other Treatises of School-Divinity, have been printed at Venice, in 1517, 1520, 1556, and 1567. His Sermons upon Lent, and the Saints-Days, were printed in the same City in 1491, and 1493. and at Basil in 1598. The following Treatises of the Poverty of Jesus Christ, and his Apostles, of the Cardinal Virtues and Vices, Of the Articles of Faith, Of Baptism, Of Humility, Of Indulgences, Of the Body of Jesus Christ, Of the Angels, Of Prayers for the Dead, Of Penances, Of Fasting, Of the Last Judgment, Of the Seven Gifts of the Holy Spirit, Upon the Lord's Prayer, and the Magnificat, were printed at Basil in 1498. He has an Explication upon the Ten Commandments, which is printed at Paris in 1619. Theological Truths upon S. Austin, and the

the City of God, printed at Tholouſe in 1488. and at Venice in 1489. His Commentaries upon the Predicaments, upon the Categories, and upon Ariſtotle's Books of Phyſicks, were printed at Venice in 1517. and ſome other Works, yet in MS. are in ſeveral Libraries, [as that of Mr. Waddingus, and the Grey-Friars at Leige.]

Bertrandus de Turre, a Grey-Friar of the Dioceſs of Cahors, and General-Miniſter of the Province of Aquitain, was made Archbiſhop of Salerne in 1319. and in the following Year Cardinal-Prieſt of S. Vitalis by John XXII. and laſtly, Biſhop of Freſcati. He was appointed in 1328. Vicar, or Adminiſtrator-General of the Order of Grey-Friars, and approved of the Depoſition of Michael de Caſenas in the Aſſembly of a General Chapter of that Order held at Paris in 1329. He died in 1334. He Compoſed ſeveral Sermons, which are in ſeveral Libraries; Two Volumes of them are in the Library of Cardinal de Bouillon, and Three in that of the Sorbonne. His Sermons upon the Epiſtles of the Year, were printed at Straſburg, in 1501. Bertrandus de Turre.

Durandus de S. Porciano, a Village in the Dioceſs of Clermont in Auvergne, of the Order of Friars-Preachers, a Doctor of Paris, flouriſhed in that Univerſity from 1313. when he was Licentiate, to 1318. when he was made Biſhop of Puy or Annecy by the Pope; from whence he was tranſlated in 1326. to the Biſhoprick of Meaux, which he governed to 1333. in which he is ſaid to have died. His chief Work is a Treatiſe of Divinity upon the Four Books of the Sentences, which he began when he was very Young, and finiſhed a little before his Death, as he himſelf tells us: In them he departs much from the Opinions of S. Thomas and Scotus, and taught ſeveral Doctrines very particular, and bold; which gave him the Name of the Moſt reſolute Doctor. This Commentary was printed at Venice in 1561. ſeveral times, and at Lyons in 1595. He alſo Compoſed a Treatiſe about the Eccleſiaſtical Power upon the Occaſion of the Queſtion, which was diſputed upon that Subject in France in 1329. between the Biſhops and Peter de Cugnieres; of whom Peter Bertrandus makes mention upon the Sixth Book of the Decretals, which was printed at Paris in 1506. He alſo Compoſed a Treatiſe againſt the Opinion of John XXII. about the State of Souls, but we have it not; as alſo an Inſtruction for his Clergy, and ſome Sermons. Durandus à S. Porciano.

Odericus de Port-Naon in Friuli, a Grey-Friar, after he had travelled a long time in the Eaſt, and Preached the Goſpel in Aſia and the Indies, Compoſed a Relation of the Wonders of the Eaſtern Tartars, which is in MS. in ſome Libraries in England, and a ſhort Chronicle from the beginning of the World to the Papacy of John XXII. Some Sermons and Letters. Odericus de Port-Naon.

Guido, Abbot of S. Denys in France, flouriſhed about the Year 1320. and was Abbot of that Abby between Giles de Pontoiſe, who died in 1325. and Walter de Pontoiſe, who ſucceeded him in 1333. He made ſome Notes upon Uſuardus's Martyrology, which is in MS. in the Library of S. Victor. Guido.

William of Nottingham, a Canon and Chanter of the Church of York, and after a Franciſcan Monk, flouriſhed in England about 1320. and died Octob. 5. 1336. None of his Works are printed, but there are ſeveral of them in the Libraries of England; and among others ſome Queſtions upon the Four Goſpels, Reflections upon all the Goſpels of the Year, Queſtions upon the Lord's Prayer, and a Treatiſe againſt the Errors of Pelagius. William of Nottingham.

William Mount, an Engliſhman, Canon of Lincoln, flouriſhed in 1330. and Compoſed ſeveral Works, which are in MS. in the Engliſh Libraries. Theſe are the Titles of ſome of them, which are publiſhed; Collections with a Paraphraſe upon the Pſalms, The Mirrour of Penance, A Summ for Paſtors, Theological Diſtinctions, Sermons, A Numeral, A Similitudinary, and a Treatiſe of Tropes. William Mount.

Philip de Montcalier in Piedmont, became a Monk in the Convent of Grey-Friars at Tholouſe, and was after Divinity-Lecturer at Padua. He Compoſed in 1330. a Poſtill upon all the Goſpels of the Year, and Sermons for the whole Year. The Abridgment of his Sermons drawn up by Janſelmus de Canova, Keeper of the Covent of Cordeliers at Cuma, was printed at Lyons in 1510. and 1515. This Author lived to 1350. or thereabouts. Philip de Montcalier.

Aſteſanus, ſo called from the Village of Aſt in Piedmont, where he was Born, a Grey-Friar, is the Author of a Summ of Caſes of Conſcience, divided into Eight Books; which was printed at Noremburg in 1482. by the Care of Bellatus and Gometius, and ſince at Venice in 1519. from whence Antonius Auguſtinus hath taken his Penitentiary Canons printed at Venice in 1484. This Author lived to the Year 1330. There is another Aſteſanus of the ſame Order; who flouriſhed ſome time after, whom Waddingus believes to be the Author of ſome Commentaries upon the Books of the Sentences, upon the Revelation, and ſome Sermons, which are not printed. Aſteſanus.

Nicholas de Lyrâ, a Town of the Dioceſs of Evreux, was Born of Jewiſh Parents, who taught him the Hebrew Tongue; but being converted, he became a Monk in the Monaſtery of Grey-Friars at Verneuill in 1291. and having ſtayed ſome time there, he went to Paris, where he read Lectures ſeveral Years upon the Holy Scripture in the Great Covent of Cordeliers at Paris, where he died Octob. 23. 1340. He made uſe of the Learning, which he had gotten when he was a Jew, to explain the Holy Scripture literally, and made Poſtills upon all the Holy Books. He began this Work in 1293. and ended it in 1330. In them he ſhews a great deal of Jewiſh Learning, and makes a very good uſe of the Comments of the Rabbies; and among others, of Rabbi Salomon, Iſaac, or Jarchi. The firſt Edition of this Work was put out at Rome, under the Papacy of Sixtus IV. in 1471. by the Care of John D'Alena. It has been ſince printed at Baſil in 1508. and Nicholas de Lyra.

His Poſtills on N. Test. pr. at Nuremberg in 1487 by Koberg, in D. University Library, and at Lyons in 1529. But the moſt perfect Edition is that of Francis Feuardentius, John Dadreus, and James de Cuilly at Lyons in 1590. which they put out after they had compared it with the MSS. It is printed ſince in the Bible with Gloſſes, at Doway in 1617. at Antwerp in 1634. and in the great Bible of Father Le Haye in 1660. He hath alſo Compoſed ſome Moral Comments upon the Holy Scripture, which were printed at Venice in 1516. and in 1588. Large Poſtills or Explications upon the Goſpels of all the Sundays in the Year. We have alſo a Treatiſe of his concerning the Perſon that Adminiſters, and him that Receives the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, which has been printed in Germany without Date, with a Work of S. Thomas upon the ſame Subject. A Diſputation againſt the Jews, printed at Venice, with his Commentaries; A Book againſt a Jew, who made uſe of the New Teſtament to oppoſe the Doctrine of Jeſus Chriſt; printed with the Edition of his Poſtills in 1529. Waddingus attributes to him a Writing of the Life and Actions of S. Francis; but becauſe no other Authors mention it, I believe it is not his. Trithemius makes mention of his Sermons, and we meet with ſome Large Commentaries upon the Holy Scriptures, in Libraries, which bear his Name. Some Authors ſay, That he made ſome Comments upon the Books of the Sentences, Some Quodlibetical Queſtions, a Treatiſe upon the Beatifick Viſion, An Expoſition upon the Ten Commandments, and ſome other Works.

Peter Bertrand.

PETRUS BERTRANDUS, a Native of Annonay in Vivarois, the Son of Matthæus Bertrand, and Agnes the Empreſs; after he had Profeſſed the Civil Law with great Reputation in the Univerſities of Avignon, Orleans and Paris, was made in 1320. the Chancellor of Joanna Queen of France and Dutcheſs of Burgundy, who made him Executor of her Will; and a little time after was made Biſhop of Nevers, from whence he was tranſlated in 1325. to the Biſhoprick of Autun. The Conference that he had in 1329. with Peter de Cuguieres, in which he defended the Rights of the Church in the preſence of Philip de Valois, King of France; got him Abundance of Reputation. He was made Cardinal of the Title of S. Clement in 1331. by John XXII. through the recommendation of the King and Queen of France. He Founded the College of Autun at Paris in 1341. and died June 24. 1349. in the Priory of Monſaults, which he had built near Avignon.

He reduced into Writing the Acts of the Conference held in 1329. in the King's Preſence between the Biſhops of the Realm, the Chief of whom was Roger, then nominated to the Archbiſhoprick of Sens and Peter de Cuguieres, the King's Advocate; who ſpoke for the King's Officers and Judges, about the extent of the Eccleſiaſtical and Civil Juriſdiction. The occaſion of this Conference, were the Complaints, which the Prelates, Officials, and all the Clergy made againſt the Judges and King's Officers, and againſt the Barons, pretending that they encroached upon their Juriſdiction. The King to ſupport them, and maintain a good Intelligence among all his Subjects, as well Eccleſiaſtick as Civil, gave a Command by his Letters dated Sept. 1. as well to the Prelates as Barons of the Kingdom to meet at Paris upon the Octaves of the Feaſt of S. Andrew. to propoſe whatever they had to alledge againſt one another, that they might live orderly for the future. The Archbiſhops of Bourges, Auſche, Rouen and Sens met accordingly, together with the Biſhops of Beauvais, Chalons, Laon, Paris, Noyon, Chartres, Coutances, Angiers, Poictiers, Meaux, Cambray, S. Flour, S. Brieu, Chalon upon Saone, and Autun. The King being come alſo thither with his Council and ſome Barons, Peter de Cuguieres, Knight, and Counſellor of State ſpoke for the Rights of the King, taking for his Text theſe words, Render to Ceſar the things that are Ceſar's, and to God the things that are Gods; from whence he proved two things: 1. That due Honour and Reverence ought to be paid to the King. 2. That the Spiritual Authority ought to be ſeparated from the Temporal, of which the former belongs to the Prelates, and the latter to the King and his Lords; which he proved by ſeveral Reaſons drawn from Fact and Right; and in the end concludes, That the Biſhops ought to be contented with the Spiritual Power, and the King ought to Protect them in Matters, which are Subject to him. This Diſcourſe being finiſhed, he ſaid in French, That the intention of the King, was to put himſelf in Poſſeſſion of the Temporal Power; and preſented ſeveral Articles containing the Grievances, and Attempts, which he affirmed to be done by the Prelates and Clergy of the Realm of France or their Officers, againſt the Temporal Juriſdiction of the King, Barons, and other Lords. The greateſt part of theſe Articles reſpect the Encroachments which the Eccleſiaſtical Judges had made upon Civil Juſtice, in taking upon them the Cognizance of Civil and Real Cauſes under divers Pretences, and preſuming to forbid the Lay-Judges. The Prelates deſired time to conſider before they gave their Anſwer, and obtained till Friday following, when Roger the Archbiſhop of Sens Elect carried word to the King, who was at the Caſtle of S. Vincent, and after he had proteſted, that what he was about to ſay, was not with an intention to ſubmit himſelf to the Judgment of the King; but only to inſtruct his Majeſty and the Conſcience of his Attendants, he took for his Text theſe words of the Firſt Epiſtle of S. Peter, Fear God, Honour the King; and ſhewed from them, that Fear and Love was due unto God, which engage Men to give Liberally to him, to Honour him reverently, and give him all his Dues. Secondly, That all Men are obliged to obey their Prelates, and that the Kings of France, who had honour'd them more than other Princes, have been always moſt happy. Thirdly, That we muſt render to God, what is really his, and in this Point he oppoſed what Peter de Cuguieres had ſaid of the two Juriſdictions, maintaining, that though they were diſtinguiſhed, yet they were compatible, and might be united in one Subject; That the Temporal Power is Subject to the Spiritual; That the Clergy have both; which he endeavours to prove by the Old Teſtament and New, by Natural, Eccleſiaſtical and Civil Law, by Cuſtom, and by the Privileges granted by the Kings of France to the Clergy of his Realm.

Upon the Second part of the Text, Honour the King, he ſaid, That truly to Honour the King, was to adviſe him not to attempt any thing againſt his Conſcience, and that would bring a general Odium upon himſelf by engaging him to make void what his Predeceſſors had done. Secondly, That it was not to honour him to put him upon any thing, that would leſſen his Power by perſwading him, That his Predeceſſors had no Power or Right to grant thoſe Privileges. Thirdly, It was not to honour the King, to adviſe him to do any thing contrary to his Reputation, Conſcience, or Oath which he had taken to preſerve the Privileges and Liberties of the Church. He concludes with a Supplication to the King, That it would pleaſe the King to confirm their Juſt and Canonical Privileges, to recall the Attempts made to the contrary at their Complaint and Requeſt, and to preſerve the Church of France in its Franchiſes, Liberties, and Cuſtoms. And as to the Articles propoſed, Some of them they were obliged to maintain; becauſe otherwiſe they ſhould loſe and weaken all their Eccleſiaſtical Power: But the others contained nothing but certain Abuſes, which they could not believe their Officers had been guilty of, and which they would neither approve, nor tolerate.

The next Friday, which was Dec. 29. the King being in his Palace, with his Counſellors and Barons, Peter Bertrandus, Biſhop of Autun, delivered his Speech, having taken for his Text theſe words in Geneſis, Let not the Lord be Angry, if I ſpeak; and theſe other words of Scripture, Lord, thou art our preſent Refuge. And having proved, That it is the Duty of Kings to be the Protectors of the Church; he anſwers Peter de Cuguieris, yet with a Proteſtation, that he did it only to inſtruct the King, and not to anſwer as in Judgment. He maintains, That the Juriſdiction in Civil cauſes belongs to the Clergy both by Divine and Humane Right, and that Kings had beſtowed that Privilege on the Church, and the rather, becauſe the Church had granted Kings ſeveral Spiritual Revenues. Then he anſwers to the Articles propounded, and ſays, That they are of Three ſorts; Some concerned the perpetual Rights of the Church, and belong to it by Right and Cuſtom, which it juſtly uſed, and they were ready to defend it. Others contained ſeveral Abuſes and Errors, which they would not endure, and were ready to correct, if they were really uſed. The laſt Sort were partly juſt and partly unjuſt. Then he makes ſome Remarks upon the 66 Articles propounded by Peter Cuguieres, and maintains the greateſt part of them. Laſtly, The Biſhop preſented a Petition, in which they requeſted a Confirmation of their Privileges, and a Revocation of all that had been done and attempted to the contrary.

The Aſſembly being met on the 8th. day at the Caſtle of S. Vincents before the King, Peter de Cuguieres anſwered the Biſhops in the Name of his Majeſty, in a Diſcourſe which had for the Text theſe words of Jeſus Chriſt, I give you Peace, I am with you, fear not; and told the Biſhops, That the King's intention was not to deprive the Church or Biſhops of the Rights and Privileges, which they could claim by Right, or any Reaſonable Cuſtom; but he proved that they had no right to Judge in Civil cauſes; and in the Concluſion adds in the Name of the King, That if any one would inform the King of the Cuſtom and Uſe, he was ready to hearken to them. Bertrand replied, and ſays in his Reply, That the King's Anſwer was very general, and prayed his Majeſty to explain himſelf further. He was anſwer'd in the King's Name, That his intention was not to oppoſe the Cuſtoms of the Church which were made appear by good Authority. The next Sunday, the Biſhops being come to the King at the Caſtle of S. Vincents, The Archbiſhop of Bourges ſaid to them, That the King had declared, That they ſhould fear nothing, for they ſhould loſe nothing during his Reign; but he would maintain them in all their Rights and Cuſtoms. The King owned that he had made ſuch a Declaration, and the Biſhops thanked him by the Mouth of the Archbiſhop of Sens, who humbly repreſented to his Majeſty, That he had publiſhed many things Prejudicial to the Juriſdiction of the Clergy, which they prayed his Majeſty to revoke. The King anſwered them himſelf, That they were not done by his Order, and that he would not ratifie them. The Archbiſhop of Sens added, That the Biſhops would reform ſome Abuſes, which the Laiety had complained of, provided, that the King and others would be content. Laſtly, He beſought his Majeſty to comfort them with a Clear Anſwer. Peter de Cuguieres anſwered, That the King was reſolved ſo to do, provided, That the Biſhops would correct and reform whatever he deſired, and that the King would give them time to do it till Chriſtmaſs; but if they did not in that time work the Reformation Agreed on, he would uſe ſuch a Remedy himſelf, as ſhould be approved by God, and the People; and with this Anſwer he ſent away the Biſhops, but they were not ſatisfied with it. Some affirm, That the Clergy continued their Enterprizes, and thereupon he put out an Edict in favour of the Secular Judges: But however that be, it is certain, That from that time, the Clergy loſt the Temporal Juriſdiction, which they exerciſed, and which they had extended ſo far, that they determined almoſt all Cauſes upon the account of Sin, or Swearing; as you may ſee in the Articles propounded and maintained by the Prelates in that Conference. The falſe Opinion, defended then by the Biſhops, was at that time abandoned. That the Temporal Juriſdiction belonged by Divine Right to the Clergy.

Bertrandus made alſo another Treatiſe upon this Subject, Intituled, Of the Original, and Uſe of Juriſdictions, or of the Spiritual and Temporal Power; in which he handles, and determines theſe following Queſtions: I. Whether the Secular Power, by which the People is governed, as to their Temporal Rights, is from God. II. Whether there ought to be any other Power, or Juriſdiction for the good of the People. III. Whether theſe two Powers may meet in One Perſon. IV. Whether Spiritual Power is Superior to the Temporal, or the Temporal to the Spiritual. He anſwers the firſt Queſtion thus; That the Power of governing the People, cometh from God, as to the Right, but not as to the obtaining, or uſe of it; becauſe it is by the Law, and according to the Order of God, that there is any ſuch Power; but as to the manner of coming to it, it is not by Divine Right, but is often Unjuſt, and Kings do alſo abuſe their Power. As to the Second, he ſays, That beſides the Secular Power, whoſe end is the Moral and Civil good; there is a Spiritual and Eccleſiaſtical Power to govern the People, in order to Everlaſting Life. As to the Third, It is evident that theſe two Powers may meet in the ſame Subject, and that they did actually meet in the Prieſts of the Old and New Law; but the difficulty is to know, whether the Eccleſiaſtical Power or Juriſdiction extends it ſelf over that which belongs to the Temporal Juriſdiction, of which ſort are the perſonal and mixt Actions of the Laiety, either in its own Nature, or by Uſage, or by Cuſtom; That the Eccleſiaſtical Power in its own Nature extends it ſelf over all Perſons, which are Subject to it as Chriſtians; That the Pope hath this Juriſdiction over all Chriſtians and other Prelates in their Dioceſſes, in ſuch ſort nevertheleſs, that the Pope may exempt certain Perſons from it; and that it extends alſo to all perſonal Actions, as far, as they may be ſinful, and conſequently, that Eccleſiaſtical Judges may take Cogniſance of them, as well as Lay. Nevertheleſs, although the Church hath this Right, yet it hath not always made uſe of it, either to avoid Scandal, or to prevent Mens Thoughts, that it ſeeks its own Intereſt; or laſtly, becauſe of the Oppoſition of Tyrants. But in France ever ſince the Kings have become Chriſtians, it hath always peaceably enjoyed that Right; That as to Cauſes Real, the Church hath determined them by Cuſtom, or a Privilege granted by Princes. His Anſwer to the laſt Queſtion is, That the Spiritual ought to rule over the Temporal, alledging for his Proof Pope Boniface's Decretal Unam Sanctam: And laſtly, Endeavours to anſwer ſome Objections which are brought againſt it. All the falſe Reaſonings which are in that Treatiſe proceed from hence, that the Author diſtinguiſhes well between the two Powers, but does not determine in what manner each Juriſdiction ought to Act, its Power, and End. It is true, that all Men as Chriſtians are ſubject to a Spiritual Juriſdiction; and that all their Actions, as they are Virtues or Vices, are to be regulated, and ordered by the Spiritual Power; but it is not true, that it therefore can exerciſe a Temporal Juriſdiction over all Men and their Actions, nor force them by Temporal Puniſhments, or a Deprivation of their Eſtates. It can only uſe Threats and Puniſhments purely Spiritual, inſtruct Men, admoniſh them, injoyn them, and forbid them under the Pain of Excommunication, Depoſition, &c. and not under the Penalty of Deprivation of Goods, Corporal Puniſhments, &c. and conſequently it hath not a Juriſdiction to decide Controverſies in relation to things Temporal, and it doth not belong to it to judge in Foro exteriori. The firſt of theſe Treatiſes of Bertrandus, hath been printed alone at Paris in 1495. and is found alſo in the Second Tome of Goldaſtus's Monarchies; The others among the Treatiſes of Law, printed at Venice in 1584. They are both in the laſt Bibliotheca Patrum, printed at Lyons, Tome 26.

William de Rubion.

WILLIAM de RUBION, a Grey-Friar, hath Compoſed ſome Diſputations upon the Sentences; printed at Paris in 1518. Some hold, that he flouriſhed about the Year 1333.

He died in the 78th. Year of his Age, after he had gone through divers Offices in his Order. Clement de Florence.

LUPOLDUS de BAMBERG, a Lawyer, the Scholar of John Andreas de Bologne, has Compoſed two Works full of Learning; the one dedicated to Rodulphus Duke of Saxony, concerning the Zeal and Fervour of the Ancient German Emperors towards the Religion of Jeſus Chriſt, and the Miniſters of the Church, in which he produces abundance of Examples of French Kings and German Emperors, upon that Subject. The other is a Treatiſe of the Rights of the Empire, dedicated to Baldwin Archbiſhop of Treves, printed at Straſburg in 1508. Theſe two Treatiſes have been printed at Paris in 1540. at Cologne in 1564. at Baſil in 1497, and 1566. and at Straſburg in 1603. and 1609. This Author flouriſhed about the Year 1340. Lupoldus de Bamberg.

WALTER BURLEY, an Engliſhman, whom ſome aſſure us to have been a Grey-Friar, and others a Secular Prieſt, ſtudied under Scotus at Oxford, and at Paris; but followed not his Doctrines. Walter Burley.

He was the Maſter of Edw. III. King of England, and died about 1340. His Commentary upon the Books of the Sentences, was never printed; but only ſeveral Commentaries upon the Books of Ariſtotle, which have been printed alone in ſeveral places, and a Book of the Lives of the Philoſophers, printed in 1472. but very full of Faults; as Voſſius has obſerved.

John Canon. JOHN CANON, an Engliſhman and a Grey-Friar, after he had finiſhed the firſt courſe of his Studies at Oxford, came to Paris to hear the Lectures of Scotus; where having received a Drs. Cap, he returned to Oxford, where he taught till he died, which was in about 1340. He Compoſed a Comment upon the Mr. of the Sentences, Some Lectures and Queſtions, and a Treatiſe upon the Eight Books of Ariſtotle's Phyſicks, printed at Venice in 1492.

Peter de Palude. PETER de PALUDE, [or PALUDANUS] the Son of Gerhard Varembonius, a Lord in Breſſe, of the Order of the Friars-Preachers, a Licentiate in 1314. in the Univerſity of Paris, flouriſhed in that Univerſity, and was nominated Patriarch of Jeruſalem in 1330. He made a Voyage into the Eaſt in 1331. and being returned preached a Cruſade. He died at Paris, Jan. ult. 1341. He Compoſed a large Commentary upon the Four Books of the Sentences, of which that Part which is upon the Third and Fourth Books was printed at Paris in 1514, and 1517. and ſince in 1530. Sermons for all the Year printed at Antwerp in 1571. at Venice in 1584. and at Colen in 1608. A Treatiſe of the Immediate Cauſe of the Eccleſiaſtical Power, printed at Paris in 1506. in which he Treats of the Power of S. Peter, the Apoſtles, Diſciples, Popes, Biſhops and Curates. His MS. Commentary upon the Firſt and Second Book of the Sentences, was faln into the hands of Damianus Zenarius, a Printer at Venice, who had a Deſign to publiſh it, but never brought it to paſs. There are in the Covent of Jacobins in Paris, ſome Comments of this Author upon all the Books of Scripture, and in the Library of Mr. Colbert, Cod. 566. A Treatiſe upon the Poverty of Jeſus Chriſt, and his Apoſtles, againſt Michael de Ceſena. It is ſaid alſo, That there is a Treatiſe printed by this Author to prove, That the Friars-Preachers may have Goods and Revenues. It is obſerved by the Continuer of the Chronicon of William de Nangis, that in the Year 1331. Peter de Palude, and ſome other Doctors were of Opinion, That a Friar-Preacher, who knew by Confeſſion, the Story of the Forgery of certain Letters produced by Robert d'Artois, to prove his Right to that County, might do it without Sinning; yea, he was obliged to diſcover it, becauſe that Story was not the Sin, which made part of the Confeſſion; and his Opinion was followed by all the Doctors that were preſent, although it was not the Common Opinion.

Francis Petrarch. FRANCIS PETRARCH, Born July 20. 1304. at Arezzo, of a Father a Native of Florence, but baniſhed his Country: He was brought up at Anciſa till he was 18 Years old, when he returned with his Parents to Piſa, and from thence was brought to Avignon. He Studied Grammar, Rhetorick and Philoſophy at Carpentras, and Civil Law at Montpellier and Bononia. Having taſted of Law, becauſe he was not to be of that Profeſſion, he left it, when he was 22 Years of Age; and having taken a Journey into Italy and France, he retreated into the Valley of Clauſa, near Avignon; where he gave himſelf up wholly to the Study of Human Learning, Oratory, Hiſtory and Poetry; and arrived at ſuch Perfection in them, that his fame being ſpread far, he was invited to Rome, where he was Crowned with Laurels in 1343. He was the firſt that recovered the Ancient Love of Human Learning, and revived it in Europe, which had lain buried a long time, and cauſed Men to return from that Barbariſm, which had reigned till then by inſpiring many with a deſire to imitate him. About the end of his Life he was made a Canon of Padua, and died near that City, July 14. 1374.

It is not upon the account of his Eloquence, or Pieces of Poetry, or Works of Profane Learning, which he made in great Numbers, that we put him among Eccleſiaſtical Writers; but becauſe he Compoſed ſeveral Books of Morality, in which he eſtabliſhes the Principles and Maxims of Religion, viz. Two Books of the Remedies of both Fortunes, which are full of Chriſtian Morality; Two Books about a Solitary Life, in which he relates ſeveral Examples of Chriſtian Monks; Two Books of the Leiſure of Monks, in which he commends the Holy quiet of Religious Perſons; Two Books of the Contempt of the World, full of excellent Morality; A Paraphraſe upon the Seven Penitential Pſalms; to which we may joyn a Treatiſe againſt Covetouſneſs, and ſome others. There are alſo ſeveral Letters of his which concern the Affairs of the Church of his time, in which he treats of ſome Points of Chriſtian Morality. He ſpeaks very freely againſt the Popes at Avignon, and againſt the Diſorders of the Court of Rome. The Works of Petrarch have been printed at Baſil in 1554. and in 1581.

John Bacon, or Baconthorp. JOHN BACON, or BACONTHORP, ſo called from a Village in Norfolk in England, a Carmelite; having accompliſhed his Studies at Oxford, came to Paris, where he took his Degrees; and returning into his Countrey, was made Provincial of his Order in 1329. Four Years after he made a Voyage to Rome; he died at London in 1346. This Monk was a famous Averrhoiſt. He Compoſed a Comment, or ſome Queſtions upon the Sentences printed at Milan in 1510, and 1511 at Cremona, in 1518 at Paris and Venice. An Abridgment of the Life of Jeſus Chriſt, and ſome Quodlibetical Queſtions printed at Venice in 1527. He alſo Compoſed a Treatiſe upon the Rule of the Carmelites an Abridgment of the Hiſtory and Rights of that Order; Some Comments upon St. Auſtin, De Civitate Dei, and the Trinity, and upon a Treatiſe of S. Anſelm, Intituled, Why God was made Man? A Treatiſe againſt the Jews; A Treatiſe of Poverty; Some Commentaries upon all the Scripture; A Treatiſe of the Beatifick Viſion againſt John XXII. and ſeveral Sermons.

JOHN

John Becanus.

John Becanus, a Canon of Utrecht, hath Compoſed a Chronicon of the Biſhops of Utrecht, and Earls of Holland, from S. Wilbrod to the Year 1346. This Chronicon has been continued to 1524. by William Hedanus, Canon of Harlem; printed at Franeker in 1612. and at Utrecht in 1643.

Simon Fidatus.

Simon Fidatus de Caſſia, a Village near Rome, an Hermit of S. Auſtin, Founder of the Monaſtery of S. Catharine of Nuns of his own Order at Florence, died Feb. 11. 1348. He was famous for his Devotion, and in great Reputation for his Spiritual-mindedneſs, and having a Gift of Prophecy. He made a conſiderable Work about the Actions of Jeſus Chriſt, divided into Five Books dedicated to a Lawyer named Thomas de Corſinis, printed at Colen in 1540. A Book of Virginity, printed at Baſil in 1517. Trithemius makes mention of theſe following Treatiſes of this Author, A Book of the Chriſtian Doctrine, A Treatiſe of Patience, An Explication of the Creed, The Mirrour of the Croſs, The Diſcipline of the Monks called Spiritual, and ſome Letters.

Joannes Andreæ.

Joannes Andreæ, [not Joannes Andreas, as ſome ſtile him] the moſt famous Lawyer of his time, was a Native of Mugello [in Italy.] He taught 45 Years in the Univerſity of Bononia, and died in that City July 7. 1348. Theſe Works of his are Extant; Novels, or Commentaries upon the Five Books of Decretals, printed at Venice in 1581. Two Commentaries upon the Sixth Book; One of them he made, when he was young, called, His Apparatus; the other, when he was older, called, A Novel; The firſt is in the Body of Law, the other is printed with his Novel upon the Decretals. His Gloſſes upon the Clementines, printed at Lyons in 1572. His Additions to the Mirrour of William Durandus. A Tree of Conſanguinity, Affinity, and Propinquity, as well Spiritual as Legal, printed at Baſil in 1517. Some Feudal Queſtions, as alſo upon Marriage, and Interdicts, printed at Venice in 1584. A Summ about Affiances, Marriage, and Degrees of Conſanguinity printed in Vol. VI. of Tractatus Tractatuum.

Robert Holkot.

Robert Holkot, a Native of Northampton in England, a Preaching-Friar, flouriſhed in the Univerſity of Oxford before the Year 1349. in which he died of the Plague, after he had began his Lectures upon Eccleſiaſtes. His printed Works are theſe, A Commentary upon the Four Books of the Sentences, printed at Lyons in 1497. 1510. and in 1518. Two Hundred and Thirteen Lectures upon the Book of Wiſdom, which are attributed in ſeveral MSS. to Arnoldus D' Alni, a Ciſtertian, printed at Spires in 1483. at Ruthlingen in 1489. and at Venice in 1509. and 1586. His Moral Hiſtories for the uſe of Preachers, with a Table of S. Thomas upon the Goſpels and Epiſtles of all the Year, printed at Venice in 1505. and at Paris in 1510. His Lectures upon the Canticles, and upon the Seven firſt Chapters of Eccleſiaſticus, printed at Venice in 1509. A Treatiſe about the Imputation of Sin, and Four other Queſtions, printed at Lyons in 1497. and in 1518. A Commentary alſo upon the Proverbs of Solomon is attributed to him, printed at Paris in 1515. but it belongs rather to Thomas Gualenſis. There are ſome other Works of Holkot's in MS. in the Libraries at Cambridge, as his Quodlibetical Queſtions [in Pembroke-Hall] Sermons and Allegories [in Peter-Houſe.]

Richard Hampole.

Some of them were printed at Cologne, and are extant in the 26th. Tome of the Bibliotheca Patrum. A Treatiſe of the Amendment of a Sinner, An Explication of the Lord's Prayer, Another of the Apoſtles and Athanaſius's Creed; The Praiſe of the Name of Jeſus, A Treatiſe of the Embraces of the Love of God, An Expoſition upon theſe words of the Canticles of Solomon, The Daughters will love thee affectionately, in which he alſo treats of the Love of God. Theſe Treatiſes are full of the Spirit, and very affecting. He alſo Compoſed ſeveral other Spiritual Commentaries upon the Holy Scripture, as the Pſalms, Job, Lamentations of Jeremiah; A Treatiſe Intituled, The Sting of Conſcience, Scala Mundi, A Book of the Contempt of the World. The Commendation of Chaſtity, and ſome other Treatiſes, which are found in the Libraries of England [as the Cotton, Archbiſhop of Canterbury's at Lambeth, and Bodleian.]

Joannes Honſemius.

Joannes Honsemius, or Hoxemius, a Dutchman, a Canon of the Church of Leige, made a Continuation of the Hiſtory of the Biſhops of Leige, compoſed by Ægidius Aurea Vallis from 1247. to 1348. It is printed in the Collection [of Hiſtorians upon the ſame Subject put out] by [Joannes] Chapeavillus [and printed at Leige in 1613.]

Gerardus Odonis.

Gerardus Odonis, a Native of Rovergne [in France] a Grey-Friar, was choſen General of that Order in 1329. in the place of Michael de Caſena, and after preferred to the Dignity of Archbiſhop of Antioch by John XXII. he died at Catana in 1349. He Compoſed a Comment upon the Ten Books of Ariſtotle's Morals, printed at Venice in 1500. The Office of the Marks of S. Francis is attributed to him. There is in the Covent of Cordeliers at Mirepoix [in Languedoc] a MS. Treatiſe of the Figures of the Bible, which bears his Name, and in the Vatican Library a Comment upon the Books of the Sentences, Two Philoſophical Queſtions, and ſome Commentaries upon ſeveral Books of Scripture [as Waddingus teſtifies in his Biblioth. Fran. Min. p. 145.]

Jacobus Folquier.

Jacobus Folquier, an Hermite of S. Auſtin, a Doctor, and Reader of Divinity at Tholouſe, dedicated in 1345. to Clement VI. a Work Intituled, Viridarium Gregorianum, or Allegories upon all the Books of Scripture which are found in MS. in the Library of the Great Auguſtines at Paris.

Bernardus,

Bernard. BERNARDUS, Abbot of Mont-Caſſin, who flouriſhed about 1347. Compoſed a Book, Intituled, The Mirrour of the Monks of the Order of S. Benedict, printed at Paris in 1507. A Commentary upon the Rule of S. Benedict, which is found in MS. in ſome Libraries. Trithemius alſo mentions, a Book of Regular Precepts and Sermons for his Monks.

Thomas Bradwardin. THOMAS BRADWARDIN an Engliſhman, of the Order of Grey-Friars, Chancellor of the Univerſity of Oxford, Confeſſor to Edward III. was choſen Archbiſhop of Canterbury in 1348. by a Chapter of that Church, two ſeveral times; for the King of England and the Pope, having preferred John Ufford the firſt time before him, he was not conſecrated; but this laſt dying a little time after, he was choſen a Second time, and his Election being confirmed by the Pope, and approved by the King, he was conſecrated at Avignon by Cardinal Bertrandus; but he died within Forty Days after his Ordination, and before he had taken Poſſeſſion of his Archbiſhoprick.

This Author, Sirnamed the Profound Doctor, Compoſed a large Work Intituled, The Cauſe of God, and the truth of Cauſes againſt Pelagius, publiſhed by Sir H. Savil, and printed at London in 1618. in which he ſtrongly maintains the Principles of S. Auſtin and S. Thomas, concerning the Operation and Power of God over the Actions of his Creatures. Some attribute to him alſo a Treatiſe of Geometry and Arithmetick, viz. a Treatiſe of Proportions, printed at Venice in 1505. A Treatiſe of Speculative Arithmetick, printed at Paris in 1502. and a Treatiſe of Geometry, printed at Paris in 1512. and 1530.

Bradwardin in his Work [De Cauſſâ Dei, &c.] does not only treat of Liberty and Predeſtination, but alſo of the Exiſtence of God; his Perfections, Eternity, Immutability, Immenſity and other Attributes, particularly his Knowledge, Power and Will. He ſhews that God preſerves all Beings that he hath Created; That he doth all things immediately, that are done by his Creatures; That his Will is effectual, invincible, and immutable; That all that he Wills, infallibly comes to paſs; That the things which he knows are not the cauſe of his Knowledge, but his Will. He explains in what ſenſe God Wills, or Wills not Sin. He proves the Neceſſity of Grace againſt Pelagius, and ſhews that it is gratis given, and that Man deſerves not the firſt Grace; That it is the immediate Cauſe of all good Actions, and principally of Repentance. He holds Predeſtination to be gratuitous, and rejects the middle Knowledge. Theſe are the Chief Points he treats of in his Firſt Book. His Second Book is upon Free Will: He affirms, That it conſiſts not in being able to Will, or not Will, the ſame thing, but in a Power of Willing freely all that we ought to chooſe, and willing all that we ought not to chooſe. He ſhews that no Second Cauſe can neceſſitate the Will, but that the free Will cannot conquer Temptations without the ſpecial Aſſiſtance of God, which is nothing elſe, but his invincible Will; That without this help, no Man can avoid Sin; That Perſeverance is the Effect of Grace: Laſtly, He explains the Co-operation of Man's Will with God's. He affirms, That God hinders not Liberty, though he cauſes a kind of Neceſſity. He treats of ſeveral Kinds of Neceſſity and Contingence, and recites ſeveral Opinions of Philoſophers and Divines about the Contingency of things, which he numbers as far as 33. and concludes that all future things happen by one kind of Neceſſity, with relation to Superior Cauſes, which agrees nevertheleſs with Liberty; but that is not Abſolute, Natural, violent, or forced. He concludes his Works with a brief Recital of the Errors which he hath oppoſed, and the Truths he hath eſtabliſhed, which he hath reduced to 36 Propoſitions.

Albericus de Roſate. ALBERICUS de ROSATE, or ROXIATI, Born in Bergamo, a Lawyer, flouriſhed about 1350. He hath Compoſed a Commentary upon the Sixth Book of the Decretals, printed in the Collection of the Treatiſes of Famous Lawyers made at Venice in 1584. A Dictionary of the Civil and Canon Law, printed at Venice in 1573. and 1601. and ſome other Treatiſes of Civil Law.

Petrus de Paternis. PETRUS de PATERNIS, an Hermit of the Order of S. Auguſtine, flouriſhed about 1350. and wrote a Work of the Neceſſity and Sufficiency of the Human Life, which is found in MS. in Mr. Colbert's Library, Cod. 1517. with a Treatiſe againſt the Jews, Cod. 978.

Peter de Clarà Valle. PETRUS de CLARA VALLE, writ ſeveral little Works about the Reformation of Manners; and among others, an Epiſtle in the Name of Jeſus Chriſt to Pope Innocent VI. dated 1353. A Letter from Luciſer to the Worldlings, dated 1351. and a Treatiſe of the Power of the Pope, which are in MS. in Mr. Colbert's Library, Cod. 1502.

Rich. Fitz-Ralph. RICHARD FITZ-RALPH, that is to ſay, the Son of Ralph, Born at Dundalke in Ireland. He was firſt Archdeacon of Lichfield, then Chancellor of Oxford, about 1333. and afterwards raiſed to the Dignity of Archbiſhop of Armagh, in 1347. He made War with the Begging-Friars, and not only Preached againſt them in England; but when they complained of him to the Pope, he went himſelf on purpoſe to Avignon in 1357. to maintain what he had aſſerted, and to demand of Pope Innocent VI. a Revocation of their Privileges, and to complain of the Attempts they made upon the Rights of Biſhops and Cures. The Pope minded him, and appointed Commiſſioners; but he died December 16. 1360. before he had finiſhed this Buſineſs. An Ancient Author who wrote the Life of Innocent VI. obſerves, That the Begging-Friars rejoyced much at his Death, and that they rather Sung a Gaudeamus, than a Requiem at it.

He wrote two Treatiſes againſt the Begging-Friars; The one Intituled, A Defence of the Curates againſt the Mendicants; and the other, Of ſuch as are to hear Confeſſions, De Audientia Confeſſionum; This laſt is in MS. only, the firſt is in the Collection of Goldaſtus, and has been printed ſeveral times at Paris, viz. in 1496. 1525. and 1623. from a MS. of the Library of of S. Victor. We have also a Summ of this Authors against the Errors of the Arminians, printed at Paris in 1511. and in 1612. and Four Sermons in Praise of the Virgin, preached at London in 1356. printed with the former Work. His other Sermons and Summ upon the Sentences are in MS. in England. Some say, he has translated the Bible into the Irish Tongue.

His Treatise for the Defence of Curates, is nothing but a Discourse which he made before the Consistory of the Pope and Cardinals at Avignon, Nov. 8. 1357. which has for the Text these words of S. John Chap. 7. Judge not according to appearance, but judge righteous Judgment. He protests in the beginning, that he had no intention to deliver any thing against the Doctrine of the Church, nor did desire the destruction of the Begging-Friars; but only their Settlement in their ancient Purity. Then he relates the Subject and Occasion of the Contest he had with them in the manner following. He says, That being at London, he met with some Doctors who disputed among themselves about the begging Condition of Jesus Christ and his Apostles; and being invited to Preach upon that Subject, he had laid down Nine Conclusions in Seven or Eight Sermons; which had given occasion to the Begging-Friars to bring a frivolous Accusation against him. The First of these Conclusions was this, That Jesus Christ was poor in his Life, because he was born in it; not that he loved, or chose Poverty. The Second was, That Jesus Christ never voluntarily begged. The Third, That he never taught Men to beg voluntarily. The Fourth, That he taught the contrary. The Fifth, That no Man ought to make a Vow always to live in a voluntary Poverty. The Sixth, That the Rule of the Grey-Friars does not oblige them to a voluntary Poverty. The Seventh, That the Bull of Alexander IV. who Condemned the Books of the Doctors of Paris, is not contrary to any of these Conclusions. The Eighth, That we ought rather to confess in our Parish-Churches, than in the Chapels of the Begging-Friars. The Ninth, That it is better to confess to the Bishop, than Monks. He begins his Apology with these two last Propositions, and proves them by Principles of Law. In it he shews, That according to the Canon, Omnis utriusq; Sexus, all Christians are obliged to confess their Sins once in a Year to their own Curate; That the pretended Privileges of the Begging-Friars are Abuses, contrary to their Institution and Rule, and are more Prejudicial to them than Advantageous. Then he proves his other Conclusions concerning Begging. This Discourse is followed with a Memoir, which he presented to the Four Cardinals, to answer the Reasons which the Begging-Friars alledged to justifie their Opinion concerning Begging, and another Writing presented to the same Cardinals, against the Abuses committed by the Begging-Friars in their Preaching, Confessions, Celebration of their Prayers, &c.

Goldastus hath joyned to his Defence of Curates, an Answer made by Roger Chonoe, or Conway, a Grey-Friar, who lived at the same time, concerning Confessions made to Begging-Friars. The same Author also confuted him in his Opinion about Poverty in Three Questions; which Waddingus saw in MS. He died at London in 1360. His Work doth not equal Richards either in Solidity, or Eloquence. Roger Conway.

Mr. Baluzius hath also two Treatises, MSS: of Richards, the one of Begging and the Privileges of Friars, and the other, A Reply to the Work of Robert Conway. In the first he takes notice, that he had already Composed Seven Books of the Poverty of our Saviour; and in the second he mentions an Answer to the Book of F. John de Terinis. He also observes in the Continuation of Rodolphus of Chester, that he had also Composed several good Sermons.

Gregorius Ariminensis, or de Arimino, an Hermit of S. Austin, of which Order he was chosen General May 24. 1357. flourished in the University of Paris. He hath left a Commentary upon the First and Second Book of the Sentences, printed at Valence in 1500. at Venice in 1503. Additions to that Work, printed at Venice in 1522. Commentaries upon the Epistles of S. Paul, and upon the Canonical Epistle of S. James, with a Book about Usury, printed at Ariminum in 1522. He died in 1358. at Vienna in Austria. Authors say, that he also made Sermons upon the whole Year. Gregorius Ariminensis.

Thomas de Strasburg, an Hermit of S. Austin, was chosen their General in 1345. and died at Vienna in Austria in 1357. He is the Author of a Commentary upon the Four Books of the Mr. of the Sentences, printed at Strasburg in 1490. and at Venice in 1564. and at Geneva in 1585. Trithemius also relates, That this Author made a Book upon the Constitutions of his Order. There was another Thomas de Strasburg, a Friar-Preacher, who flourished about the end of the 15th. Century, who Composed some Sermons, Meditations, Letters and Questions, which some attribute to the former. Thomas de Strasburg.

Adam Goddam, or Wodham, an Englishman, a Grey-Friar, who is ordinarily called, Anglicus, flourished in England from 1330. and died 1358. He Composed a Commentary upon the Books of the Sentences, printed at Paris in 1512. Adam Goddam.

Radulphus, or Ralph Higden, or Hikeden, a Benedictine Monk of Chester, is the Author of a large Historical Work, Intituled, Polycronicon, from the Creation of the World to the Year 1357. which was translated into English in 1397. by John de Trivisi, and continued in Latin by John Malvarne, a Monk of Winchester, who also Composed a Treatise of Visions about the Year 1342. There are abundance of MSS. of the Original of this Polychronicon in the Libraries of England, and a Version printed in 1482. by William Caxten the first Printer in England, with a Continuation to 1460. Higden also Composed some Theological Distinctions, The Mirrour of Curates, a Commentary upon Job and the Canticles, and some Sermons. He died in 1363. having lived a Monastick life 64 Years. Ralph Higden.

Joannes

Joannes Thaulerus. JOANNES THAULERUS, a German, a Dominican of Cologne, was one of the famouſeſt Preachers of his time; Surius has tranſlated his Sermons into Latin, and cauſed them to be printed at Cologne in 1548. with ſome other Small Treatiſes of Piety gathered from the Writings of Thauler, and ſome others. They have been alſo printed in the ſame City in 1572. and 1603. This Author died in 1361. May 17. There is a great deal of Piety in his Works.

Petrus Bercherius. PETRUS BERCHERIUS, a Native of Poictiers, a Benedictine Monk, and Prior of S. Eligius at Paris, died there in 1362. He Compoſed a Moral Dictionary of all the Bible, which contains the principal Words of the Bible, with Moral Reflections on them. His Moral Reductory of the Bible, in which he rehearſes all the Hiſtories in a Moral Senſe, and his Moral Inductory divided into Three Parts, have been printed at Paris in 1521. in Four Volumes (which is the beſt Edition) at Baſil the ſame Year, at Venice in 1583. and 1589. in Three Volumes, and at Cologn in 1620. alſo in Three Volumes.

He was alive in the Year 1372.

Thomas Stubbs. THOMAS STOBÆUS, or STUBBS, an Engliſhman of Yorkſhire, a Preaching-Friar, wrote the Lives, or a Chronicle of the Archbiſhops of York, from the Foundation of that See to the Year 1373. This Chronicle was printed at London in 1652. with other Engliſh Hiſtorians. The Authors, that ſpeak of him, attribute to him ſeveral Books of Divinity, which have never yet been publiſhed.

S. Bridget. S. BRIDGET, a Princeſs of the Family of the Kings of Sweden, the Wife of Wulfo, Prince of Nericia, after ſhe had had Seven Children by her Husband, engaged him to become a Ciſtertian Monk, Monk, in the Monastery of Alvastrû, where he died a little after. Then she instituted the Order of S. Saviour, and gave it a Rule, as if she had received it from Jesus Christ himself. She undertook to go into the Holy Land, and after she had travelled there some Years, she came to die at Rome, July 23. 1373. She was canonized by Boniface IX. in 1391. and her Canonization was confirmed by the Council of Constance. This Saintess was famous for her Revelations, which are reduced into Eight Books; besides several which are added since to that Collection. She wrote some Sermons. One about the Excellency of the Virgin Mary dictated by an Angel, and Four others, which she assures us, were revealed to her, as her Rule was; which she affirmed to be dictated to her by the Mouth of Jesus Christ. These Works are printed at Lubeck in 1492. at Nuremburg in 1521. at Rome in 1557. and 1628. at Antwerp in 1611. at Colen in 1628. and at Munick in 1680.

S. Katharine of Sienna.

At the same time flourished S. Katharine of Sienna, who is not less famous for her Revelations, than S. Bridget; She was Born in 1347. Vowed Virginity at Eight Years old, and a little time after took the Habit of a Dominican. She was very ingenious, wrote very well, and was very Charitable and Zealous. She advised Gregory XI. to return to Rome, followed him thither, remained after his Death under the Obedience of Urban VI. and died April 30. 1380. She was canonized by Pius II. in 1461. She wrote several Letters in Italian to the Pope, to the Cardinals, Kings and Princes, which are gathered into One Volume containing 364 Letters, and are printed in Italian at Venice in 1506. 1548. and 1584. and translated into French at Paris in 1644. There are also Six Treatises of hers in form of a Dialogue, Concerning the Providence of God, printed at Ingolstadt in 1583. at Colen 1601. and at Venice in 1611. a Discourse upon the Annunciation of the Virgin, and some others translated into Latin by Raymundus de Vineis, a Dominican Monk of Genoa, her Confessor, printed at Ingolstadt in 1583. and a Treatise translated, or composed by the same Person, Intituled, The Divine Doctrine delivered by the Eternal Father speaking to the Spirit, printed at Colen in 1553.

N.B. The Revelations of S. Bridget and S. Katharine, though admired by the Church of Rome, are Enthusiastick Dreams, and more Dotages.

Matthew Florilegus.

Matthæus Florilegus, a Benedictine Monk of Westminster, flourished about 1377. He Composed certain Annals from the beginning of the World to the Year 1307. which he Names, The Flowers of History, printed at London in 1567. and at Francfort in 1601. He Copies out Matthew Paris only in his First Part; Bale says, That he continued his Annals to the Year 1377. and Composed the Chronicles of the Monasteries of Westminster and S. Edmond's-Bury.

Albert de Strasburg.

Albertus de Strasburo, or de Argentina, made Ambassador by the Bishop of that City, to go to the Pope at Avignon, made a Chronicle from the Empire of Rodolphus of Habsperg to the Death of Charles IV. i. e. from 1270. to the Year 1378. Cuspinian published a part of it, printed at Basil in 1553. and in 1569. but Urstisius since has put it out entire in his Collection of German Historians printed at Francfort in 1585. Tom. 2. pag. 97. This Author also wrote the Life of Bartholdus de Buchecke, Bishop of Strasburg and Spires, from the Year 1328. to the Year 1353. published by Urstisius, and printed by it self at Basil in 1553. and in 1566.

John Schadland.

Joannes Schadland, a German of the Order of the Friars-Preachers, first Bishop of Culme in Poland, then of Hildesheim, and lastly, as some say, of Wormes; died in 1377. He Composed a Treatise of the Estate of the Cardinals, which is in MS. in Mr. Colbert's Library, Cod. 289. He made that Work at the Desire of Petrus de Prato, and began to Compose it, when that Cardinal died; He intitules it, Culmensis, because (as he renders the reason) the State of the Cardinals may be called Culmensis à Culmine, i. e. from the top of Dignity and Virtue; and the Cardinals may be called Culmenses, from their sublimity of Virtue; and the Writer was Culmensis Episcopus, i. e. Bishop of Culmi: He had been Inquisitor of the Faith in Germany, as he says, in several places. He tells us in that Work, That in that time he had burnt several Hereticks, which asserted, That the Church of Rome had lost the Keys of S. Peter, since it possessed great Worldly Revenues; That the Popes and Cardinals were Covetous, Ambitious and Voluptuous, to whom Jesus Christ had not committed the Church his Spouse; but to the truly Poor, full of Humility, and Contemners of this World, among whom the Church resides. He also Composed a Treatise of the Dignity and State of Bishops.

Nicholas Oresmius.

Nicholas Oresmius, or Oresme, a Norman, a Doctor of Divinity of the Faculty of Paris, and of the School of Navarre, of which he was made Governor in 1356. and chose by K. John Mr. for his Son; who was after Charles V. Sirnamed the Wise. He was appointed Treasurer of the Holy Chapel in 1361. and afterwards Dean of the Chapter at Roan, and then left his Government of Navarre. He was sent in 1363. to Urban V. and made a Discourse before the Pope and his Cardinals; in which he speaks boldly against the Irregularities of the Court of Rome. This Book is printed in a Book put out by Fl. Illyricus, Intituled, A Catalogue of the Witnesses of the Truth; and is published alone by Gesner, in the Edition of Wittemberg in 1604. He also made another Discourse about the Change of Money, in which he Declaims against those Princes that Coin Money, which is not full Weight; and shews that Princes have not a Power to change the Money when they please, and set what Value they please upon it. This Treatise is printed in Tom. IX. of the Bibliotheca Patrum, at Paris in 1589. and in the Twenty Sixth of the last Edition. He translated the Bible into French, by the Order of Charles V. and Composed several other Translations of Prophane Authors [as Aristotle's Ethicks and Politicks; some Parts of Tully, and Petrarch's Book, De Remediis utriusq; fortunæ]. There are several other Works of this Author in MS. in the Libraries of Navarre, Mr. Colbert, and others among which are 115 Sermons. A Treatise of the Communication of Idioms; Of the Affirmation, De omni, in respect to Divinity; Three Treatises against Judiciary Astrology; The Art of Preaching; A Treatise of Antichrist, and his Ministers, and the Signs which shall foreshew him; A Writing against the Begging-Friars; And several other Treatises of Philosophy, of which we may see a Catalogue in the History of Navarre, put out by Mr. Launoy, Tom. II. p. 455, &c. Oresmius was Bishop of Lisieux in 1377. and died Seven Years after in 1384. He was buried in his Cathedral Church, on the Left side of the Choir.

There are in the Library of S. Victor, two Books of the Life and Miracles of S. Mary Magdalen, which bear the Name of this Cardinal.

Gerhardus Groot. GERHARDUS MAGNUS, or GROOT, of the City of Deventer, Studied Divinity at Paris, and obtained a Cap at the Age of Eighteen Years, returning into his Country, he was made Canon of Utrecht and Aix-la-Chapelle; but he left his Benefices to establish at Deventer the Clerks, or Friars of the Community for the Instruction of Youth. He died Aug. 20. 1384. in the 44th. Year of his Age. He Composed divers small Tracts, of which there are only Three printed among the Works of Thomas à Kempis; which are, A Declaration of the manner of Preaching with Truth; Some Conclusions and Propositions. Of the Study of the Holy Scriptures. His other Small Works are found in the Libraries in Flanders. Albertus Miraus gives us this Catalogue of them. Some Treatises of Contracts and Usury; Of the Instruction of Novices; Of the Reward of a Pastor's Labour; The Inconveniences of Marriage; De Focariis, Against the Encompassing of Utrecht; Of Poverty; Of the Four sorts of things which are fit Subjects of Meditation; Of Detraction; Some Sermons upon the Nativity of our Saviour, on the Sunday, called Dominica in Ramis, or Palm-Sunday, and on other Subjects; A Letter about Schism, and some others; Of Simony; Of Benefices with Cure; Of the Company and Exercises of the Devout; Of the Agreement of the Evangelists about the Passion of our Saviour; A Commentary upon the Lessons read at the Burial of the Dead; A Treatise of Compunction, and the Instruction of Scholars. Dr. Cave places this Author in 1470. and says, he brings down his Catalogue of Saints to 1482. which if true, our Author is under a Mistake.]

Joannes Ruysbrokius. JOANNES RUYSBROKIUS, or de RUSBROCK, A Village upon the River Senne, between Brussels and Hall, a Priest of Brussels, and first Prior of the Monastery of Canons-Regular of Weure in the Forest of Soignes, was one of the most Eminent Monks of his time, and upon that Account Surnamed, The Divine, or Contemplative Doctor: He died Dec. 2. 1381. in the 88th. Year of his Age. He Composed in Dutch several Mystical Works, which are translated into Latin by Surius, who caused them to be printed at Colen in 1552. and 1609. The Titles of them are as follow: The Summ of a Spiritual Life; The Mirrour of Eternal Salvation; A Commentary upon the Tabernacle of Moses, and all its Parts; A Treatise of the Cardinal Virtues; A little Book of Faith and the Last Judgment; A Treatise of the Four Temptations; Of the Works of the Seven Vigils; Of the Spiritual School; Of the Seven degrees of Love; Three Books of the Spiritual Marriage; Of the Perfection of the Sons of God; The Reign of the Lovers of God; A Treatise of Contemplation; and Seven Letters of Piety; Two Spiritual Songs; Samuel, or of Deep Contemplation; A short Prayer. The Treatise of Spiritual Marriages has been opposed by Gerson, because in it Ruysbrokius says, That the Soul, which Contemplates God fully, becomes one one with God himself; Gerson thought this Doctrine was Erroneous and condemned in Amaury; John de Schonave undertook the defence of Ruysbroek, and made an Apology for him; and Gerson afterward affirms, that he can't be excused, because he has said in another place, That the Creature shall never lose its essence; but he maintains that the words he cited out of the Third Part, are not only to lead the simple, but more understanding Persons into Errour, and he observes that Contemplative Persons are very apt to advance Errours; and it is not fit that they should either read or write without much Precaution, and unless these Works be examined by learned Men; for otherwise their Books are full ordinarily of Falsities, and corrupt Explications, which often mislead the simple.

Philip de Leyde.

Philippus de Layda, or de Leydis, an Hollander, made Doctor of Law at Orleans and Professor at Paris, was afterward Canon of S. Mary de Conde, and lastly Canon and Grand-Vicar of Utrecht, where he died June 8. 1386. GERHARDUS de ZUTPHEN, one of the firſt Canons Regular of the Order of S. Jerome, or Clerks of the Community inſtituted by Gerhard Groot, died in the 31ſt. Year of his Age, Dec. 4. 1398. He has left us ſome Aſcetick Treatiſes; One, Of the inward Reformation of the Powers of the Soul; The other about our Spiritual Progreſs, printed with the Works of Thomas a Kempis, who wrote his Life, and in the Bibliotb. Patr. [Tom. 26. p. 230. as alſo at Paris and Colen in 1539.]

Nicholas Eymericus.

NICHOLAS EYMERICUS, born at Girone, a City of Catalonia, a Friar-Preacher, flouriſhed in the Papacies of Innocent VI. Urban V. Gregory XI. and Clement VII. He was firſt Inquiſitor-General for Innocent VI. about 1356. and coming to Avignon in the Papacy of Gregory XI. was made the Pope's Chaplain, and Judge of Hereſies. He died at Girone, Jan. 4. 1399. His Principal Work is a Book, Intituled, A Directory for Inquiſitors; printed the firſt time at Barcelona in 1503. and after at Rome in 1578. with the Corrections and Scholies of Pegna, and after in the ſame City in 1587. and at Venice in 1595. with the Commentaries of the ſame Author. This Work is divided into three Parts. In the Firſt he treats of the Articles of Faith: In the Second of the Puniſhment of Hereticks, and the Inflictions which they deſerve according to the Canon-Law and Decretals; What is Hereſie and Errour; Of the Differences of Hereſies; And laſtly, Of thoſe, which are ſubject to the Juriſdiction of the Inquiſition, and the Grimes, which are out of its Knowledge. The Third part is about the manner of ordering the Proceſs at the Tribunal of the Inquiſition, of the Power and Privileges of the Officers, of the Witneſſes, Criminals, and the Execution of Judgment upon them.

He Compoſed ſeveral other Treatiſes, which are in MS. in Mr. Colbert's Library, N°. 2846, and 2847. The Titles of them are theſe, A Letter to the Cardinals againſt the Election of Urban VI. A Letter to the King [of France] in favour of Clement VII. Some Verſes upon Schiſm; A Treatiſe upon this Queſtion, Whether the Three Perſons of the Trinity be in the Euchariſt, compoſed on the Occaſion of a Controverſie raiſed on that ſubject in the Kingdom of Valence. The Curates had a Cuſtom, when they adminiſtred the Sacrament to the Sick, to ask them, Do you believe, that this is the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt? and they were to anſwer, Yea. A Curate having put the ſame Queſtion to a Doctor, to whom he adminiſtred the Sacrament, He anſwered, No; But that he believed, that it was the Body of Jeſus Chriſt, who was the Son of God, and not the Father, or the Holy Spirit. This Anſwer being divulged, the Matter was brought to the Inquiſitor, and he found the Abuſe was Common, and when the Cardinal of Valentia ſought out means to remedy it, the Buſineſs was made worſe by Sermons Preached Pro & Con. A Monaſtick Doctor preached, that the Queſtion of the Curate was impertinent, and that the Sick Man's Anſwer was falſe. The Curates were Angry at this Sermon, and one of them preached in one of the Pariſhes of the City, That there being Three things in Jeſus Chriſt, his Body, Soul and Divinity, if it be asked, whether the Fleſh of Chriſt be in the Sacrament, the Anſwer muſt be, Yea; and if his Soul were there, the Anſwer muſt alſo be, Yea. And laſtly, if we ſpeak of his Eſſence, and of his Divine Nature, and ask, Do you believe that this laſt is the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt? A Chriſtian muſt Anſwer, Yea, yea, yea; becauſe the Three Perſons are eſſentially there. This Curate was not content to Preach this Doctrine, but he publiſhed it by Writing. He was contradicted by ſome that ſtood by, and this cauſed a great Scandal, which the Inquiſitor could not appeaſe. The Cardinal of Valentia called the Divines together, and made the Curate retract his Aſſertion; but he went from Valentia, and appealed to the Holy See, and cauſed the Inquiſitor to be Summoned thither. 'Twas to inſtruct Pope Clement VII. in this Matter, that Eymericus Compoſed this Treatiſe in 1390. Let us now come to the other Treatiſes, which are in that MS. This laſt is followed with a Treatiſe againſt Raymundus Lullus, preſented the ſame Year to Pope Clement VII. who gave it to the Cardinal of S. Angelo, to be examined; a Dialogue againſt the Followers of Lullus; Another Treatiſe, entitled, The Enchantment of the Lulliſts, and a Tract againſt ſuch as Pray to Dæmons. The 2847 Volume contains theſe following Treatiſes; A Treatiſe againſt thoſe, that oppoſe the Pre-eminence of Jeſus Chriſt and the Virgin; A Confeſſion of the Faith of Jeſus Chriſt; A Tract againſt the Oath taken by the Pope and Cardinals after the Death of Clement VII. and againſt the Letter of the Univerſity of Paris (which proves that Eymericus was not dead in 1393. as ſome have aſſured us) a Treatiſe againſt the Chymiſts; The Correctory of the Reprimand; A Treatiſe againſt thoſe, who will define the Time of the End of the World; A Treatiſe againſt Aſtrologers, Necromancers, and other Diviners; The Illuſtration of his Explication; A Treatiſe againſt thoſe, who had broached this Hereſie, That St. John the Evangeliſt was the Natural Son of the Virgin Mary; A Treatiſe of the Admirable Sanctity of the Mother of God-Man; The Enchantment of the Univerſity of Lerida, concerning the Twenty Articles diſperſed by Anthony Rieta, Student of the Univerſity of Valentia; and a Treatiſe upon the Explication of the 22 Articles, in which he does not commonly follow the Maſter of the Sentences.

Matthew d'Eureux.

MATTHEW d'EUREUX, a Preaching-Friar, flouriſhed in the Reign of Charles VI. King of France. He is the Author of a Commentary upon the Pentateuch, and Poſtills upon Iſaiah, and upon ſeveral other Books of the Bible, which are in MS. in the Library of the Friars-Preachers at Eureux, where they were put by Robert Begard Doctor of Divinity, and Confeſſor to Charles VII.

NICHOLAS

Nicholas Gorham.

NICHOLAS de GORHAM, a Preaching-Friar, is certainly an Author of the XIVth. Age; but ſome make him an Engliſhman and others a Frenchman, and ſome place him about 1304. and others about 1350. but the laſt about 1390. or 1400. which is moſt likely. He has Compoſed ſeveral Works, particularly Commentaries upon ſeveral Books of Scripture and Sermons. His Commentaries upon the Four Evangeliſts, the Acts of the Apoſtles, St. Paul's Epiſtles, the Canonical Epiſtles, and the Revelation have been printed in divers places [as at Colen in 1537. at Hagenau 1502. and Paris 1521.] and with his Sermons upon the whole Year, at Antwerp in 1617. and 1620.

He has left us a Summ for Preachers, in which he has ranked in an Alphabetical Order many Common-places of Morality. It was printed at Nuremburg in 1485. and at Venice in 1586. There are ſome other Treatiſes of this Author in MS. in the Libraries in England; and among others, a Treatiſe of the Civil and Canon-Law, applied to Morality; His Explications concerning the Ceremony of the Maſs, and his Exhortations [viz. in the Publick Library, and that of Pembroke-Hall in Cambridge, and New-College in Oxford.]

William Wodford.

WILLIAM WODFORD, or WILFORD, an Engliſhman of the Order of Grey-Friars, a Doctor of Oxford, choſen in a Council held at London in 1396. to confute by Writing theſe Propoſitions taken out of Wickliffe's Trilogue, and condemned in that Council, compoſed a Treatiſe upon that Subject dedicated to Thomas Archbiſhop of Canterbury, which is printed in the Faſciculus rerum Expetendarum [at Colen 1535. p. 96.] In it he confutes 18 Articles, of which we ſhall ſpeak in treating of the Hereſie of Wickliffe. There are alſo in the Libraries in England, ſome other MS. Treatiſes of this Authors; and among others, An Apology againſt Richardus Armachanus, concerning the Poverty and Begging of Jeſus Chriſt; An Extract of the Errors of that Author; A Treatiſe of the Sacrament of the Altar. A Summ of Virtues. William Wodford died at Glouceſter in 1397.

Rodolphus de Rivo.

RODOLPHUS de RIVO, a Native of Breda, Dean of the Church of Tongres, died at Rome in 1401. or as others hold, Nov. 2. 1403. He Compoſed an Excellent Treatiſe upon the Divine Offices, intitled, Of the Obſervation of the Canons; in which he treats with exactneſs upon the Uſage and Rules of the Eccleſiaſtical Offices, and ſhews, that Men ought to follow, as much as is poſſible, Antiquity, and avoid Novelties in the Divine Offices, from whence he concludes in his 22d. Propoſition, that Men ought to keep to the ancient Breviaries, and not follow that in uſe at Rome, becauſe it is not the Service of the ancient Roman Church, but a ſhorter Office ſung in the Pope's Chapel, gathered in the time of Innocent III. and which the Grey-Friars followed. He treats in the laſt Article of the Maſs, its Ceremonies and Prayers. This Treatiſe is printed in the Bibliotheca Patrum, and by its ſelf at Louvain in 1568. The ſame Author has Compoſed an Hiſtory of the Three Biſhops of Leige, viz. Engelbert de la Marca, John de Arkel, and Arnold de Horn, from 1347. to 1386. publiſhed by Chapeaville in his Hiſtory of Leige, printed at Leige in 1616. Lastly, I will not tarry longer, to make a tedious Enumeration of the Names, and Works of the Divines and Canonists of this Age, which we can gain the Knowledge of; it shall suffice to observe, That there was hardly any Doctor of Divinity, which did not make a Commentary upon the Master of the Sentences, and Postills, or Lectures upon some Books of the Holy Scripture, which they declared publickly in the Universities to obtain their Degrees, and then they applied themselves wholly to Preaching; from whence comes the great Number of Commentaries upon the Sentences, Postills, and Sermons. The Canonists employed themselves usually to Comment upon the Decretals, and particularly, the Sixth Book of Boniface's. I will not speak of the famous Lawyers of this Age, as Peter de Bellaperche, James d'Arena, Nicholas of Naples, James of Ravenna, Francis Accursius, Martin de Fano, William de Cunio, Richard de Malombre, Lambertinus de Ramponi, Cinus de Pistoy, Oldrad de Lezule, Nicholas de Matarel, Bartholus; nor of such as were eminent for Physick, as Dinus, Thomas de Garbo, Gentile de Foligno, Peter d'Apono, Philip de Bergamo; or for Astronomy, as John de Ligneres, John Dunis, John Esseedi, John Eliger de Gondersheim; nor of those who have excelled in the Study of Human Learning, as Dantes, Aliger, and Paul de Pernsia; because their Works have no Relation to Ecclesiastical Matters.

CHAP. VI.

The History of the Greek Church, and the Authors, that flourished in the East, in the Fourteenth Century.

The History of the Greek Emperors.

THE Greek Empire continued to be governed by the Palæologi; Andronicus, the Son of Michael, having lost his Son, caused young Andronicus his Grand-child, to be declared Emperor, who revolted from him, and forced him to quit the Empire in 1328. Four Years before his Death. This Man reigned till the Year 1341. and left at his Death two Children in their Minority, John and Manuel, Palæologi, to whom he nominated John Cantacuzenus Guardian; but the Empress soon drove him from Constantinople: He retired into Macedonia, whither many of the Lords of the Empire being come to him, obliged him to assume the title of Emperor; he was Crowned at Adrianople by the Patriarch of Jerusalem, made War upon the young Princes, and having five Years after in 1347. recovered the City of Constantinople, he treated with John Palæologus, and joined him in the Empire, on the condition he might govern alone, till he came of Age; he gave him likewise his Daughter in Marriage: Nevertheless, this Agreement lasted not long: The War being again renewed, John Palæologus had the better, and made himself Master of Constantinople; Cantacuzenus yielded up the Empire, and retired in the Year 1357. into a Monastery, where he died a considerable time after. John Palæologus remaining in the sole Possession of the Empire, had upon his hands a troublesom War with the Turks, and came into the West to demand Assistance of the Latines. In his absence, Andronicus his eldest Son, had a mind to possess himself of the Empire, and left his Father in the hands of the Venetians, who had detained him for Money, that he owed, without any thoughts of releasing him. But Manuel his Third Son, Governor of Thessalonich, having gotten together a Summ of Money, payed his Fathers Debts, and deserved by this Kindness to be made Partner of the Empire, in the Year 1384. Andronicus incensed at this, that his younger Brother was preferred before him, applied himself to Bajazet, and having obtained Aid of him, took Constantinople, and put his Father and Brother in Prison. They remained there Three Years; but having found means to get out, and flying unto Bajazet, who was displeas'd with Andronicus, they recover'd the Empire, and delivered up Andronicus to the Turks. John Palæologus died in a short time after in the Year 1391. Manuel was not more fortunate than his Father; for Bajazet laid Constantinople, in his Reign, besieged Ten Years. He came in vain to demand Succours of the Latines against him; but by good Fortune unlooked for, Tamerlane, King of the Tartars, forced Bajazet to raise the Siege. Vanquished him and took him Prisoner; After this, Manuel made Peace with Mahomet II. and left the Empire to John his Son, who reigned to the Year 1449. when he was succeeded by his Son Constantine, the last of the Greek Emperors in Constantinople, which was taken by the Turks, in the Year 1453.

Under these Emperors, the Government of the East and of the Greek Church fell to decay, by the Victories which the Turks obtained over the Christians, from whom they presently took the Provinces they had in Asia, and then passing into Europe, they possess'd themselves by degrees of all the Cities in the Greek Empire. This Progress of the Infidels could not induce the Greeks to unite themselves to the Church of Rome, but they appear'd on the contrary more averse than ever from Peace, and more incensed against the Latines, as their Books set forth by their Authors against the Procession of the Holy Ghost, against the use of Unleavened Bread in the Eucharist, and against the Primacy of the Pope, written with sharpness, do testifie. Nevertheless there were some among them, who declared for the Latines, and also writ in their favour. As to their Emperors, the Necessity of their Affairs, and the need they had of the help of the Latine Princes, rendered them more inclinable, at least in shew, to a Union.

The Inclination of the Greeks to the Latines.

About the Year 1339. young Andronicus sent Barlaam Abbot of the Monastery of S. Saviour from Constantinople, with a Lord named Stephen Dandulus, unto Philip de Valois King of France, and to Robert King of Sicily, to desire Assistance of them; and because he could not hope to prevail, but by uniting himself to the Church of Rome, he gave them this matter in charge. These two Envoys came to Benedict XII. with Letters of Recommendation from both these Kings, and Barlaam proposed to this Pope in the presence of the College of Cardinals, to call a General Council, wherein should be discussed the Question concerning the Procession of the Holy Ghost, that the Latines, and the Greeks, after having on both Sides urged their Arguments for their respective Opinions, might come to an Agreement; but above all things he besought his Holiness to cause, that the Princes of Europe should afford their Assistance to the Greeks, for the recovery of their Cities, which the Turks had seized. The Pope demanded of them, whether they had a full Power from the Emperor, the great Lords, and chief Prelates of Greece? They made Answer, That they had it not in Writing, and yet the Pope gave them leave to propound the Means of Re-union, which they judged might be successful. Barlaam after having made a Protestation, that he spake sincerely, and had nothing in Prospect, but the good of the Church, and the Agreement of all Christians, declared, there were two Ways to attain to a Union; the one by force, the other voluntary, by way of Instruction. That it was not convenient to think of the first, but to adhere to the latter, which one may distinguish into two, in reference to the Learned, and to the Common People; that as to the Learned, it would be easie to agree with them, because if Thirty or Forty were sent from the East, they would make no difficulty to join issue; but that would not be enough for the People, because these Persons upon their return would be accus'd of being corrupted, and would not be credited; that the only way were to call a General Council, whose decision would be receiv'd of all the World with respect; if it be objected to this, that there had been one already held at Lyons, it ought to be observed, that the Greeks never allow'd of it, because those from Greece, who assisted at that Council, were not sent thither by the four Patriarchs, nor by the People; but the Emperor singly: That if the Pope designed to call a Council, to which the Greeks should submit, he must first send Legates into the East, full of Piety, Meekness and Humility with Letters, by which his Holiness would intreat the four Patriarchs, and the other Bishops, to meet in some place to search into means of Union; that if it were managed thus, the Emperor, the Patriarchs, and the People would admit of a General Council, whose Determinations would be received without Contradiction. After this, Barlaam gave his Reasons, why the Latines ought to assist the Grecians against the Turks, even before the Union. The Pope having advised with the Cardinals, made answer to the Deputies of the Grecian Emperor, That the Procession of the Holy Ghost from the Father and the Son, being a matter decided, was no more liable to dispute, nor debate. The Greek Deputies proposed, that at the least the Greeks be left at liberty to continue in their same Judgment: it was replied, they could not dispense with it, because there was but one Faith in the Church; and there was propounded to them an easie way of Agreement, viz. That the four Patriarchs should depute some Persons of note in the West, with sufficient Power to confer with such as the Pope should nominate, not to dispute, but to be instructed in the Truth, and to remove their Scruple: That for the Meeting of a General Council, it was to no purpose, neither could it be effected, especially at this Juncture. Barlaam return'd, That though the Procession of the Holy Ghost from the Father and the Son went for current truth among the Latines, the Greeks notwithstanding were in a doubt of his Proceeding from the Son, and that they could not be convinced herein, but by the way of discussion; that this was ever practised in the Church; that they were to find them, that should suffer, the Latines distrusted the goodness of their Cause; that a General Council had ever been Useful, and done the Church service; In fine, he propounded to make a Re-union, and to leave both Parties free to hold what they pleased as to the Controversies, provided they obliged the Greeks to grant the Church of Rome the Honours which the ancient Patriarchs had allowed, and which were determined by the Laws of the Emperors, and by the Canons of the Holy Fathers; and that the Latines on their part should give way, and by the Canons of the Holy Fathers; and that the Latines on their part should give way, to allow to the Church and Empire of Constantinople the Rights they enjoy by ancient Custom, by the Laws, and by the Canons. He concludes with demanding of Succours. The Pope denied him, for fear the Greeks, when strengthened and raised by the Holy See, and by the Catholick Princes of Europe, should afterwards desert them, as they had done before. Barlaam before his departure delivered a Treatise Memorial to the Pope; wherein he testifies, That it was impossible to send Deputies from the East, as he demanded, because whatever good Design the Emperor might have to settle the Union, he durst not discover it; and that the Patriarch of Constantinople could not send Legates, without consulting the other Patriarchs, which he could not do, by reason of the Wars, and that otherwise he was not certain the other Patriarchs would consent to it; he added a Promise, that notwithstanding he would do his utmost. This Project had no issue, and things remained in Greece in the posture they were in, as to the Latines.

Projects for Union under Cantacuzenus.

Andronicus being dead in the Year 1341. the Empress to strengthen her self against Cantacuzenus, writ to Pope Clement VI. that if she were able to conquer her Enemies, she would embrace the Doctrine and Ceremonies of the Church of Rome. The Pope considered her Design, exhorted her to persist in it and promised her Succours. Cantacuzenus sent some time after George Spanopulus, Master of his Wardrobe, and Sigerus, Prætor of the People, in Quality of Ambassadors; to whom he joined a Latine named Francis, a Friend of the Pope's, giving them in Charge to remove any Prejudice he might have against this Prince, and to demand Aid against the Infidels. Clement VI. gave these Ambassadors a kind Reception, and sent with them two Bishops, one of the Order of the Grey-Friars, and the other of the Order of Friars-Preachers, to treat of the Union. They agreed with the Emperor, that the Pope should call a Council; that he should give the Emperor notice of the time and place, and that the Emperor should call the Patriarchs together, to the intent they might send Deputies thither. The Pope accepted this Proposal; but he wrote to the Emperor, that he could not put it in Execution suddenly, because of the Wars in Italy. Cantacuzenus gave him Thanks for his good Intentions, and intreated him to do what was necessary for the assembling of this Council; but the Pope died, and it was no more mentioned.

The Union of John Palæologus.

In the Year 1369. the Emperor John Palæologus, seeing himself hard beset on all sides by the Turks, made a Voyage into Italy, to demand Succours of the Christian Princes in Person. He was well received there, and repaired to Rome, where Urban V. came to meet him on the 18th. of October, and on the 18th. of the same Month he made a Profession of Faith, which he Signed with his Hand, and Sealed with his own Seal, in the presence of Five Cardinals, and other Witnesses, to the end he might be received into Communion, whereby he acknowledged the Procession of the Holy Ghost from the Father and the Son, the Pains of Purgatory, Prayers for the Dead, the Vision of Souls purged from all sin soon after Death, the Seven Sacraments, the Validity of the Sacrifice of the Eucharist offered with Unleavened Bread, the change of the Bread and Wine into the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST, the validity of Second, Third and Fourth Marriages, the Primacy of the Church of Rome over the whole Catholick Church, given with full Power by JESUS CHRIST to Peter, to whom the Pope of Rome is Successor, to whom recourse ought to be had in all Causes that concern the Church; to whom all Churches and all Bishops owe Obedience and Submission, who hath the fulness of Power, &c. He promises and engages by Oath upon the Holy Gospels inviolably to hold this Doctrine, and utterly renounces the Schism. Notwithstanding this Act of Submission, John Palæologus drew not much Assistance from the Western Princes, but was Arrested by the Venetians for the Payment of his Debts, and was not released, till his Son Manuel had discharged them. This latter coming to the Empire, went also to the Pope about the end of this Century, there to demand Succours against Bajazet, who had laid Siege to Constantinople; but he in vain went over Italy, France, England, and Germany, and could obtain but very little Aid from the French King, insomuch, that he not only rejected the Opinion of the Latines, but also wrote against them about the Procession of the Holy Ghost.

The Contests between the Barlaamites and Palamites.

The Greeks had likewise in the Fourteenth Century Disputes among them upon Points of Doctrine, which were pushed on with great heat on both Sides. The Heads of the two Parties were Barlaam, and Palamas. The first was a Monk of Calabria, Learned and Cunning, who being come to Constantinople, buoyed up by the Authority of the Emperor, the young Andronicus, undertook the Monks, stiled Hesychasts, or Quietists, examined their Method of Prayer, and having therein observed things he did not like, he writ against them, and accused them of reviving the Errors of the Enthusiasts, and the Messalianists, giving them a new Name of Omphalo Psychi, that is to say, Navellists; because as we have noted, in speaking of Simeon of Xerocercs, one of the Maxims of these Hesychasts was to have the Eye fixed on the middle of the Belly, as the place, where was the Seat of the Faculties of the Soul; insomuch that being in that posture they imagined to see a Light altogether Divine. When they were asked, What kind of thing this Light was; they answer'd, That it was Light it self, and the Glory of God which had appeared on Mount Tabor, and affirmed, that this Light was uncreated and incorruptible, though it were not the Essence of God. They said the same thing of all the Operations God had to make his Glory appear to Men, and pretended that the Saints themselves and the Angels saw not the Divine Essence, but this uncreated Light, which they named the Operation of God. They laid it down as a Principle, that this Operation was distinguished from the Divine Essence, and yet eternal, uncreated and incorruptible, and that one might also give it the Name of Divinity. Barlaam impeach'd Palamas, and the other Monks who held these Opinions before the Emperor and the Patriarch of Constantinople. A Council was called in this City in the Year 1340. where two of the Points, which we have touched upon, concerning Prayer, and the Light of Tabor were there chiefly debated. Barlaam raised a great many Questions, and oppos'd the Opinion of Palamas, by maintaining, that this Light could not be uncreated and incorruptible, if it were not the very Essence of God, and that nothing could be perceived by the Eyes of the Body, but that which was created. The Palamites defended their Opinion, and affirmed, That this Light which had appeared on Mount Tabor, was uncreated; That the Holy Fathers called it Divine, though it was not the Essence of God, but his Vertue, his Grace, his Glory, his Brightness, which issued from the Essence of God; that the Saints and Angels saw this Eternal Glory, though they saw not the Essence of God: They maintain'd likewise, that the Name of Divinity might be given to this Light, and to other Divine Operations, so that in this they seemed to allow many Subordinate Divinities, flowing from the Substantial Divinity. The Opinion of Barlaam was rejected in this first Convention.

Some time after, another Monk, named Gregory Acindynus, continuing to maintain the Opinion of Barlaam, though he made as if he oppos'd it, and stoutly attacking that of Palamas, was cited to a Synod held in presence of John Cantacuzenus, a little after the Death of Andronicus in the Vestry of St. Peter's Church in Constantinople, by John Patriarch of this City; where Thirteen Bishops were present. Acindynus was there convicted to be of Barlaam's Opinion concerning the Light of Tabor, and to believe it created and limited, of the same Nature with other Lights, and condemned with Barlaam. 'Twas in this Second Convention they prepared a Volume, wherein they collected divers Passages of the Greek Fathers, concerning the Light of Tabor, and Prayer, which appeared to favour the Opinion of Palamas. They condemned the Doctrine and Person of Barlaam, and Acindynus, silenced these Contests, and forbad on pain of Excommunication to accuse the Monks of Heresie.

The Second Council of Constantinople, against Acindynus.

The Palamites puffed up with this Victory, grew more Positive for their own Doctrine than ever, and pushing their Principles farther, separated the Husbands from their Wives, shaved them for Monks, and raised new Disturbances in Constantinople. The Patriarch after Admonition resolved to Expel them the City, caused the most mutinous to be Arrested, and required a Profession of Faith from the Clergy, and Palamas and Isidore, elected to the Bishoprick of Adrianople, to render an account of their Carriage, and their Doctrine. These two peristing obstinate in their Errours, were condemned and deposed in a Synod, held by John Patriarch of Constantinople, in which assisted the Patriarch of Antioch, and divers Bishops. The condemned paid no respect to this Judgment, and continued to exercise the Functions of their Priesthood; which put the Patriarch upon making a Discourse addressed to all the Faithful, to Exhort them to Separate from Palamas, and all his Followers. This passed in the time, that Cantacuzenus was Banished under the Empress Anne; but when Cantacuzenus had made himself Master of Constantinople, the Empress Anne and John Palæologus willing to make use of Palamas to make their Peace, got him Absolved in a Convention, in which the Patriarch John was condemned, and sent him afterwards to Cantacuzenus, to the end he might do the Palæologi good offices with the Conqueror. John dying a little time after, Cantacuzenus proposed Palamas to fill his place, but not being able to compass it, he procured his Friend Isidore to be chosen Patriarch of Constantinople, and Palamas was some time after made Archbishop of Thessalonica. Their Adversaries complained loudly of this Promotion, Protested it was void, and against the Canons, forbidding to give Bishopricks to Persons deposed in a Synod, accused them of Blasphemy and Heresie, of admitting two Deities, of not observing the Rules prescribed by the Church, of despoiling the Images, of breaking the Sacred Vessels; and upon this ground they refused to Communicate with them, demanded a Synod, to depose them. And indeed, ten Bishops of this Party being Assembled at Constantinople, authorized as they pretended, by the Letters of more than Twenty others gave Sentence of Deposing against Isidore and Palamas, and Exhorted all the Faithful not to hold Communion with them. This Sentence is dated in July, in the Year 1347. Notwithstanding Isidore remain'd in Possession of the Patriarchal See of Constantinople, as long as he lived, and Callistus, who succeeded, upheld the same Party.

The Third Council of Constantinople, against the Palamites.

The Fourth Council of Constantinople, against the Palamites.

This Patriarch purposing to subdue entirely the remainder of the Party of Barlaam and Acindynus, which was supported by Nicephorus Gregoras and divers others, assembled a Council at Constantinople, which was held in presence of Cantacuzenus, and John Palæologus in a Hall of the Palace of Blachernæ, and consisting of Twenty five Metropolitans, of some Bishops, and many Priests and Monks, before whom were cited the Adversaries of Palamas, of whom they demanded the Reasons, which they had to make a Schism, and to rise against the Emperors, and the Patriarch. They alledged hereupon two Reasons, The First, the Addition to the Profession of Faith, which they were obliged to make, when they were ordained Bishops: And the Second, the Promotion of Palamas to the Archbishoprick of Thessalonica. Palamas, who was present at this this Council, cast in their Teeth, that they were of Opinion with Barlaam, and Acindynus; and the Council told them, that as to the Addition they complain'd of, it was but the Exposition of the Sixteenth Oecumenical Council, and the Condemnation of Barlaam, and Acindynus. After this it was proposed to enter upon the discussion of the Question, and the Dispute was adjourned till the next Day. Palamas and his Adversaries debated it at the next Meeting. At the Third these brought their Profession of Faith, at the close of which they declared, they were of the Church's Opinion touching Barlaam and Acindynus. Next they objected to Palamas, that he had writ several times in his Books, that there were many Divinities. The Emperor asked them, if they condemned that Expression or the Thing, which Palamas designed to signify by this term; for said he, if it be the Thing, why do you insist upon the Term, but if it be the Term only you quarrel at, and in the Thing you agree with him, why do you find fault with an Expression, which has a good meaning? Palamas declared, That he would dispute only upon the Opinions, and not upon the Expressions; and protested, That he admitted not three Divinities separate from the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, but one sole Divinity in three Persons; though according to the Expression of the Fathers, he had given the name of Divinity to the Operations and external Processions of God: That he made use of this Expression only to defend himself against such as said, that the Operations and Divine Vertues were created, and that nothing but the Divine Essence was Uncreated and Eternal; and in fine, That he had not set it on foot, with a design to assert many Divinities; but on the contrary, he had ever made Profession of maintaining one sole Divinity in three Persons, Almighty, and Efficacious. The Emperor and the Council approved of his Declaration, but they said, that the Distinction of the Operation, and the Essence ought to be examined more largely. In the Fourth Session the Light of Tabor was treated of, and the Passages of the Fathers recited, which had been already quoted in the Book against Barlaam and Acindynus; from whence it was concluded, that the Divine Essence was distinct from the Operation, and that this Operation might be stiled a Divinity. The Patriarch after this used his endeavours to make this Doctrine to be approved by those, who had opposed it, and not able to effect it, he declared Ephesius and Gannus Depos'd.

Some days after, the Synod re-assembled, to handle the Questions throughly, which concerned the Divine Essence, and the Operation. The Emperor propounded them himself, and the Council collected several Sentences out of the Fathers to explain them. The Works of Barlaam and Acindynus were examined. The Deputies of the Monks of Mount Athos were heard, who expounded the Opinions of that Society, according to the Books which Philotheus, then Metropolitan of Heraclea, and after Patriarch of Constantinople had written, while he was among them. In Conclusion they approved the Doctrine of Palamas, who delivered a Profession of Faith, in which he declares, that he believes one sole Divinity. The Doctrine of Barlaam and Acindynus was Condemned, and all those were Anathematized that were of their Opinion, and that did not acknowledge the Operations of God to be Eternal and Uncreated, and that the Light of Mount Tabor was not of this Nature. This Council was held about the Year 1355. Father Combefisius hath set down the Acts in his last Addition to his Bibliotheca Patrum, in the Year 1672. in the 2d. Part. P. 136. together with the Refutation, which had been made thereof by Manuel Calecas, and by John Cyparissiotes.

Barlaam, Bishop of Hieracium.

BARLAAM, after his Condemnation in the East, retreated into the West, sided with the Latines, and was made Bishop of Hieracium in Calabria. Wherefore 'tis not to be wondred at, that he has written for and against the Latines, and it is not Necessary for this reason to distinguish of two Barlaams. He has written against the Latines a Treatise of the Pope's Primacy, printed at first in Greek and Latin at Oxford in the Year 1592. and afterwards at Haynault, in the Year 1608. with the Notes of Salmasius. Who since has reprinted it, together with his own Treatise of the Primacy of the Pope at Amsterdam in the Year 1645. And a Treatise of the Procession of the Holy Ghost, containing Eighteen Articles, whereof Allatius has given us the Titles: For the Latines, a Discourse of the Union of the two Churches, related by Allatius and Bzovius; and five Letters: The First directed to his Friends in Greece, about the Union with the Church of Rome. The Second, of the Primacy of the Church of Rome, and of the Procession of the Holy Ghost addressed to the same. The Third, an Answer to Demetrius of Thessalonica, touching the Procession of the Holy Ghost. The Fourth to Alexis Calocheras, to demonstrate, that the Greeks, who do not obey the Latines, are not only Schismaticks, but also Hereticks. The Fifth, containing the Proofs of the Procession of the Holy Ghost from the Father and the Son. Allatius makes mention of these Works, and Bzovius has given them us in Latin in his History. They are to be met with also in the Collection of Canisius, Tom. 6. and in the last Edition of Bibliotheca Patrum, together with two Books of Morality. They are printed separately at Strasburg in the Year 1572. and at Paris in 1600. A Treatise of Arithmetick and Algebra, by the same Author.

In his Treatise of the Pope's Primacy he thus Propounds the Question, viz. Whether JESUS CHRIST did commit his Church to St. Peter, and settled a common Pastor, and Doctor of the Church? whether the Bishop of Rome, as his Successor, ought to Command and Preside over all, and can decree what he pleases, without being to be contradicted by any, and that the whole World on the other side be obliged to receive his Decrees without Examination, as the Word of God. He asserts, That JESUS CHRIST gave to all the Apostles the same Power of binding and loosing, which he gave to St. Peter; and that when he said to him, Feed my Sheep, this concerns all the Apostles; that St. Peter had done nothing, but what the other Apostles had done; that that they were not Bishops of one City only, but exercised the same Power in different places; that those whom they ordained for their Successors, are particular Pastors of different Churches; that nevertheless St. Peter was the first of the Twelve Apostles, and their Superiour, in that he was the first in instructing, and had the first Place; that the Church of Rome was the first, as so settled by the Laws of the Emperors, because this was the first City; that of Constantinople was equal to it in Power, though it were but second in Rank; that it belonged not to the Pope to ordain Patriarchs, seeing the Ecclesiastical Laws say expressly, they shall be ordained by the Metropolitans and the Metropolitans by the Patriarchs; but there is no Law that obliges the Patriarchs to receive Ordination from the Pope; that the Canons give him nothing but the first rank, and the first place; that he is subject to Errors like others; That the Church of Rome ought not to be confounded with the Catholick Church, nor Profession be made of believing in the Roman Church, as one believes in the Catholick Church. Thus you see what he offers in the Treatise of the Primacy, set forth by Salmasius.

But he destroys these Principles in his Letters which he wrote to the Greeks, while he was in the West; for he there maintain'd, that every Church ought to be Subject to the Church of Rome, and her Bishop, who hath received his Ordination from JESUS CHRIST; that his Decrees ought to be consider'd, as the Divine Scriptures; that we owe them a blind Obedience; that it belongs to him to correct all other Bishops, and to examine their Judgments, and to confirm them, or make them void; that he has right to ordain other Patriarchs; that St. Peter received this Primacy from JESUS CHRIST; that his Successors have ever enjoyed it; that the Schism of the Greeks took beginning but Four Hundred Years ago; that since this time the Greek Church is fallen to decay, and sensibly is reduced to the last Extremity; that the Latines cannot be accused of Heresie for using Azyms, nor for holding the Procession of the Holy Ghost, seeing they follow in it the Opinion of the ancient Doctors of their Church, and the Practice of their Ancestors; and that the Greeks, who obstinately assert, that the Holy Ghost proceeds only from the Father, are not only Schismaticks, but also Hereticks, seeing they deny a Truth grounded upon the Holy Scriptures, and on the Tradition of the Fathers.

GREGORY ACINDYNUS followed for the example of Barlaam, in his Union with the Latines, but remain'd concealed in Greece, continually writing against the Palamites. Grelser has set forth two Books of Acindynus, concerning the Essence and Operation of God, written against Palamas, Gregoras, and Philotheus, printed at Ingolstadt, in the Year 1616. Allatius has published in his Græcia Orthodoxa, (i. e. Orthodox Greece) a Poem in Iambick Verse, made by Acindynus against Palamas, and two Fragments against the same; in one of which he makes mention of Five Volumes, which he wrote against Barlaam to defend the Monastick Discipline of the Greeks. Gregorius Acindynus a Greek Monk.

The Works of GREGORY PALAMAS, which are extant, follow: Two Prayers upon the Transfiguration of our Lord, wherein he explains his Doctrine of the Light, which appear'd on Mount Tabor; that it was Uncreated, and is not of the Essence of God, set out in Greek and Latin by Father Combefisius in his Addition to the Bibliotheca Patrum: A Prosopopœia, which contains two Declamations, one of the Soul against the Body, which she accuses of Intemperance and Disobedience; and the other of the Body, which defends it self against the Soul, together with the Sentence given by a third Party, set forth in Greek by Turnebus, printed at Paris in the Year 1553. and in Latin in the last Bibliotheca Patrum: Two Discourses of the Procession of the Holy Ghost against the Latines, printed at London. The Confutation of the Expositions of Johannes Veccus on the Procession of the Holy Ghost, set forth in Greek and Latin, together with the Answers of Cardinal Bessarion by Arcudius, and printed at Rome in 1630. He made a great many Works for the Defence of his Opinions, whereof divers are cited by Manuel Calecas, and by other Greeks, which wrote against him; A Treatise of Divine Participation; A Catalogue of Absurdities, which follow from the Opinion of Barlaam; Dialogues, Letters, Discourses, &c. of which the Extracts are to be seen in Manuel Calecas. There is in the Library of Ausburgh, a Treatise in MS. of Palamas on the Transfiguration of our Lord, more large than the Prayers before-mentioned. The other Authors, who have written for or against Palamas, shall be inserted in the Succession of Greek Authors of this Century, which we proceed to write according to the Order of the times. Gregory Palamas Archbishop of Thessalonica.

NICEPHORUS, the Son of Callistus Xanthopylus, a Monk of Constantinople, a studious and laborious Man, undertook under the Empire of Andronicus the elder, to Compose a New Ecclesiastical History, which he dedicated to that Prince; it was divided into Twenty three Books, began at the Birth of JESUS CHRIST, and ended at the Death of the Emperor Leo, the Philosopher, that is to say, at the Year 911. we have no more, than the Eighteen first Books, which end with the Emperor Phocas, that is to say, in the Year of our Lord 610. He collected his History out of Eusebius, Socrates, Sozomen, Theodoret, Evagrius, and other good Authors, but he has mixed it with a great many Fables, and has fain into many Mistakes: the style is not disagreeable, and is Correct enough for his time. The only Copy of this History, which was in the Library of Matthias King of Hungary at Buda, was taken by a Turk and Sold at an Auction in Constantinople, where it was bought up by a Christian, and after carried to the Library of the Emperor at Vienna, where it is at this present. Langius has translated it into Latin, printed at Basil in 1553. at Antwerp in 1560. at Paris in 1562. and 1573. and at Francfort in 1588. and Fronto Ducæus hath since published it in Greek and Latin, printed at Paris in the Year 1630. Father Labbe has set out a Catalogue of Nicephorus Callistus, a Greek Monk.

of the Emperors and Patriarchs of Constantinople, collected by Nicephorus in his Preliminary Treatise of the Byzantine History, printed at Paris in 1648. and there was printed at Basil in 1536. An Abridgment of the Scripture in Iambick Verse, which also bears the Name of Nicephorus.

Andronicus the Elder, a Greek Emperor.

There is extant under the Name of ANDRONICUS of Constantinople, a long Dialogue between a Jew and a Christian, wherein the Christian proves the principal Points of the Religion of JESUS CHRIST by Quotations out of the Old Testament. This Work is published in Latin, in the Translation of Livineius, by Sylburg, and printed at Ingolstadt in the Year 1616. and in the Bibliotheca Patrum. It is doubtful, who is the Author, but the time is certain; for the Author counts 1255 Years from the Captivity of the Jews, which, reckoning since the taking of Jerusalem by Titus, fall in the Year 1527. from JESUS CHRIST; which makes it appear, that Livineius is deceived in ascribing this Work to Euthymius Zigabenus, who died before that time. The Political Verses, which he found in the Front of the Book, seem to intimate, that this Andronicus was of the Family of the Comneni, but one may likewise understand them otherwise, and perhaps not much from his Faith. The Greek Original is in the Library of the Duke of Bavaria, where also are to be found other Dialogues, which carry the Name of Andronicus, the Emperor, viz. A Dialogue between the Emperor and a Cardinal concerning the Procession of the Holy Ghost, a Dispute of the Emperor's with one Peter, an Armenian Doctor, a Treatise of the two Natures in JESUS CHRIST, and a Manuscript against Johannes Veccus. I easily believe, that the Dialogue against the Jews is by the same Author, namely the Emperor Andronicus the Elder, so much the rather, because the Name, the Time, the Nature of the Subject, and the manner of Writing, agree well to this Emperor.

Maximus Planudes, a Greek Monk.

MAXIMUS PLANUDES, a Greek Monk, flourished under the Emperor Andronicus the Elder, who sent him in an Embassy to Aquileia in the Year 1327. with Leo Orphanotrophus, to assure the Venetians, that he had no hand in the Murder of some of their Citizens, who had been Assassinated by some Galatians at Constantinople. He wrote a Treatise of the Procession of the Holy Ghost against the Latines, published in Greek and Latin by Arcudius, in the Collection he caused to be printed at Rome in the Year 1630. He translated likewise into Greek St. Augustin's Fifteen Books of the Trinity. His Translation is to be met with intire in a MS. of the Emperor's Library, and Leunclavius, and Arcudius have put forth some Fragments of his. Allatius in his Treatise of Ecclesiastical Greek Books, set down a Fragment of a Discourse of Planudes, upon the Burial of JESUS CHRIST, and the Lamentations of the Virgin, to prove that this Author believed, with many other Modern Greeks, that JESUS CHRIST being descended into Hell, preached the Gospel to all that were there, and that all those, who were willing to believe in him, were saved. This Discourse was printed intire in Latin at Paris in the Year 1639. The Homily upon St. Peter and St. Paul, set out in Greek and Latin, under the Name of Gregory Nyssen by Grynæus, and printed at Ingolstadt in the Year 1620. belongs to Planudes, as Lambecius has observed. This Author hath also writ several Learned Treatises, of which some are Printed, and the rest in Manuscript.

Matthew Blastares, a Greek Monk.

MATTHEW BLASTARES, a Monk of Greece, flourished about the Year 1335. and made in the compass of a Year an Alphabetical Table of the Canons, which is found in the Pandects of Dr. Beveridge, printed at Oxford in 1672. He is likewise the Author of a Treatise of Causes, and Questions upon Marriage, printed in the Greco-Roman Law of Leunclavius, and he translated into Greek Constantine's Donation, printed with that of Balsamon.

Nil. Cabasilas.

NILUS CABASILAS, Archbishop of Thessalonica, flourished at Constantinople in this Century, under the Empire of the Andronici's. He wrote two Treatises against the Latines; The First to make it appear, that the Cause of the Division of the Greeks and Latines, arises from this, that the Pope is not willing any controverted Question should be decided by the Judgment of an Oecumenical Council; but will be the sole Judge, and others must hearken to him, as their Master. He demonstrates by the Examples of Ancient Popes, by the usage of the Church, and by divers reasons, that it is seasonable to call a Council; and that it is the only expedient to settle Union, and to decide the Question about the Procession of the Holy Ghost. The Second Treatise is of the Pope's Primacy, in which he pretends to prove, that the Pope hath from St. Peter the Episcopacy of Rome, but that he holds his Primacy by Laws, Councils, and Princes. He there asserts, That the Pope is not infallible, and proves it by the Example of Honorius. He grants him the Primacy of Honour; but he pretends, he has no Jurisdiction over other Patriarchs, seeing he does not ordain them. He observes, that the right of Appeal gives him no Authority over other Patriarchs, seeing the Patriarch of Constantinople hath the same right over the Patriarchates, wherein he hath no Jurisdiction, according to the Ninth Canon of the Fourth General Council. He shews, That it is not true, that the Pope cannot be judged by any Person, or that he is of an Order more sublime than the Bishops; That he is Subject to Councils and Canons; that he is not properly Speaking Bishop of the whole World; that the See of Rome is not the only one, that may be called Apostolick; that it belongs not to him alone to call a General Council; and that if Canons cannot be made without him, neither can he make any without others. These Treatises of Nilus are writ in a good Method, clearness, and full of Learning. They were at first printed in Greek at London without a Date, in Greek and Latin at Basil in 1544. at Francfort in 1555. and with the Notes of Salmasius at Haynault, in 1608. and in his Treatise of the Primacy of the Pope, printed at Amsterdam in 1645. Nilus also made a large Work of the Procession of the Holy Ghost against the Latines, divided into Nine and Forty Books, whereof Allatius makes mention in his Dissertation of the Nilus.

NICOLAS

Nicolas Cabasilas, Archbishop of Thessalonica.

NICOLAS CABASILAS, Nephew to Nilus Cabasilas, flourished under the Empire of Cantacuzenus, and succeeded his Uncle in the Archbishoprick of Thessalonica. He was one of the most vehement Adversaries of the Latines, and Composed a Treatise of the Procession of the Holy Ghost against them, and a Work call'd, An Accusation against the Latines, wherein he lets upon St. Thomas. He made an Exposition of the Liturgy, in which he treats of the Mass, its Parts and its Ceremonies: He observes in the entrance of his Work, that the effect of the Celebration of the Holy Mysteries, is the changing of the Elements into the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST; that the End is the Sanctification of the Faithful, the Remission of Sins, and the Kingdom of Heaven; that the Preparation and the Means are Prayer, Singing of Psalms, and Reading the Holy Scriptures, and all that is done before or after the Consecration of the Elements. He shews the Necessity of those Prayers, and explains the Ceremonies of the Oblation, which precedes the Receiving; why, but one part of the Host is given; why, the Sign of the Cross is made upon the Host at the mention of the Death of JESUS CHRIST; of the Thanksgiving after the Oblation; of the Prayers of the Mass; of Presenting the Sacred Elements on the Altar; of the Sanctification of these Elements: He attacks the Latines upon this Subject, and pretends, that it is not by the sole Vertue of the Words of JESUS CHRIST that the Consecration is made, but by Prayer. He says, that the Sacrifice consists in this, That the Bread, which was not sacrificed, becomes the Body of JESUS CHRIST sacrificed. He explains in what sense, the Saints are prayed for in the Liturgy, by observing that those Prayers are Thanksgivings, and that we rather pray them to help us by their Prayers; but that the Priest prays for himself, and for the living, and for the Protection of a good Guardian Angel. He adds, that at the Elevation of the Host, he says, Sancta Sanctis, to signifie that Saints only ought to partake of those Mysteries. He renders a reason of the usage of the Greeks, who mingle warm Water in the Chalice before the Communion. He affirms, that this Ceremony implies the descent of the Holy Ghost. He speaks of the Communion and the Prayer said after it. In fine, he affirms, That the Sacrifice is offer'd for the Dead, as well as for the Living, as to the Effect of the Intercession, but not as to the Participation. He treats of the Effects of the Communion, and chiefly of the internal Sanctification of the Soul, or of the Spiritual Communion, by which JESUS CHRIST imparts himself spiritually to such, as are worthy to receive him, a Communion, which is more compleat in the Saints after their Death, than in the Living. He enlarges upon the Commemoration of the Saints. This Treatise of Cabasilas is to be met with in Greek and Latin, in the Addition to the Bibliotheca Patrum, printed at Paris in the Year 1624. It had been already printed in Latin at Venice in 1545. and at Antwerp in 1560.

There is another Work of Nicolas Cabasilas, Of the Life in JESUS CHRIST, divided into Six Books, translated into Latin by Pontanus, out of a Manuscript in the Library of the Duke of Bavaria, and printed at Ingolstadt, in 1604. and since in the Bibliotheca Patrum, wherein he treats of the Sacrament of Baptism, of Chrisme, and the Eucharist, which give, and maintain the Life in JESUS CHRIST, and speaks in a most sublime style, of the wonderful Effects of these Sacraments, and of the Graces they produce.

There is moreover a Discourse of Cabasilas against Usury in Latin, of the Translation of the same Pontanus, in which he undertakes to prove, That all Usury is against the Law of God, and a Sin, though the Laws of Princes allow it. This Discourse was printed separately at Ausburgh, and to be found in the Bibliotheca Patrum. Henschenius has published on the 5th. of April, an Encomium of the Widow Theodora, which he attributes to Nicolas Cabasilas. There is in the Vatican Library a Work in Manuscript upon the Vision of Ezekiel, which bears the Name of Cabasilas. This Author writ clearly, and methodically, and treats of the Vertue, and Effects of the Sacraments in a very Instructive, and most Profitable manner.

Nicephorus Gregoras Charto-phylax, Charter-keeper of the Church of Constantinople.

NICEPHORUS GREGORAS, Born about the End of the Thirteenth Century, flourished under the Empire of the Andronici, John Palæologus and Cantacuzenus. He was the Favourite of Andronicus the Elder, who made him Keeper of the Charters of the Church of Constantinople, and sent him on an Embassy to the Prince of Servia. He accompanied that Emperor in his ill Fortune, and was present at his Death. He was afterwards in the Court of young Andronicus, and he it was who diverted the Greeks from entring into Conference with the Legates of John XXII. In the Contest between Barlaam and Palamas, he sided with Acindynus, and upheld him stoutly, being he is mentioned in the Synod held in the Year 1355. as one of the chief Adversaries of Palamas; it is not known, how long he lived after that Council. His principal Work was his Byzantine History, from the taking of Constantinople by the Latines, to the death of Andronicus the younger, that is to say, from the Year 1204. to the Year 1341. divided into Eleven Books; it is full of Errors, and he is accused of being too partial to Andronicus the Elder. Wolfius has translated it into Latin, and his Translation was printed at Paris in 1567. at Francfort in 1568. and 1587. in Greek and Latin at Basil in 1562. at Geneva in 1615. Father Petavius has published at the end of the Abridgment of the History of Nicephorus, Patriarch of Constantinople, printed at Paris in 1616. some Fragments, which were wanting in the Eighth Book of Gregoras: the Funeral Oration of Theodorus Metochites, made by Gregoras, was printed at Amsterdam in 1618. and in the end of Glycas, at Paris in 1660. He moreover made Scholia upon Synesius his Treatise of Dreams, printed with the Works of that Author. Henschenius, and Papebrochius put out on the 10th. of March, the Sufferings of St. Cordatus of Corinth, and of other Martyrs of Achaia, which they father upon Nicephorus Gregoras. The Books, which he writ against Palamas were never printed.

There is a Manuscript in the Library at Ausburgh, which is a Dispute he had with Palamas in the presence of the Emperor John Palæologus, and another in that of the Vatican, Composed in Six Books, written against the Synod, which condemned Barlaam and Acindynus. There are divers other Treatises in Manuscript of the same Author, in the Vatican Library; and among others, a Treatise of Easter, how the Mistake arises in the time of its Celebration, and the means of reforming that Error.

Callistus, Patriarch of Constantinople.

CALLISTUS, a Monk of Mount Athos, was raised to be Patriarch of Constantinople, after the Death of Isidore, about the Year 1354. He presided, as we have made mention, in the Council held in the Year 1355. against the Adversaries of Palamas; and having no mind to Crown the Son of Cantacuzenus, he retired to a Monastery, but he was restored a little after by John Palæologus, who sent him into Servia, to conclude a Treaty of Peace, where he died, in the Year 1358. Some attribute to him an Homily upon the Exaltation of the Cross, set forth by Gretser, and two Sermons, the one upon the Death of the Virgin, and the other upon the Beheading of John the Baptist. The Work intituled, Monastick Method, or Rule, a MS. in the Library of Cardinal Barberini, attributed to Ignatius and Callistus, belongs not to this Callistus, but another, who was also Patriarch of Constantinople about the Year 1406. seeing he makes mention of Nicolas Cabasilas, who did not write, till after the Death of the first Callistus.

Philotheus Patriarch of Constantinople.

PHILOTHEUS, Monk and Abbot of Mount Athos, made Archbishop of Heraclea, before the Year 1354. was chosen Patriarch of Constantinople in the room of Callistus, who was expelled thence about the end of the Year 1355. John Palæologus afterwards becoming sole Master of Constantinople restored Callistus, and Philotheus was forced to abscond, till the Death of Callistus, which fell out in the following Year, after which Philotheus again obtained Possession of the Patriarchship, and enjoyed it to the Year 1371. which was that of his Death. This Patriarch, whom Cantacuzenus affirmed to have been commendable for his Sanctity and his Eloquence, writ many Books, but very few of them were printed; one of the chiefest was his Treatise of the Substance, Operation, and Power, and Light of Mount Tabor, divided into Fifteen Books, against the Ten Books of Nicephorus Gregoras, which are in Manuscripts in the Duke of Bavaria's Library, and the Vatican; Homilies upon the Gospels, and upon the Annual Feasts, in the Library of Bavaria, and that of the King of Spain; An Abridgment of the Oeconomy of the Man JESUS CHRIST, and a Panegyrick upon the Holy Martyr Demetrius in the Vatican Library. These are the Works of Philotheus in Manuscript. Those, that are printed under his Name, follow: A Treatise of the Ministry, or the Functions of a Deacon, in Latin, in the last Bibliotheca Patrum; A Panegyrick of St. Basil, of St. Gregory Nazianzen, and St. John Chrysostom, printed in Greek and Latin in the Addition to the Bibliotheca Patrum, of the Year 1624. Two Sermons, one on the Cross, the other upon the Third Sunday in Lent, set forth in Greek and Latin, by Gretser in his Second Tome of the Cross.

Theophilus, Archbishop of Nice.

THEOPHANES, Archbishop of Nice, flourished under the Empire of Cantacuzenus, and John Palæologus. He Composed a considerable Work against the Jews, and concerning the Truth of the Christian Religion, which hath not been yet printed; An Instruction to the Clergy, and a Letter of the Contempt, which a Christian ought to shew, of the Pleasures, and Evils of this Life. The first of these Treatises is in Manuscript, in the Jesuits Library at Rome, and the two latter in the Vatican. Gonsalvus Pontius procured to be printed at Rome in the Year 1590. certain Hymns, which bear the Name of this Author.

Nilus, Metropolitan of Rhodes.

NILUS, Metropolitan of Rhodes, an Adversary of the Barlaamites, ought to be placed among the Authors of this Age, seeing he concludes his Historical Abridgment of the Oecumenical Councils, at that of Constantinople against Barlaam, under Isidore. This Work was printed with Photius his Nomo-canon, set forth by Justellus in his Bibliotheca Juris Canonici, and in the last Edition of the Councils. Allatius has published a Discourse, which this Author made in Praise of a Lady in the Isle of Chios.

John Cantacuzenus, Greek Emperor.

The Emperor JOHN CANTACUZENUS, writ in his Retirement, an History of the reign of the Andronici, and his own, under the Name of Christodulus. It is divided into Four Books, and Prefaced with a Catalogue of the Greek Emperors, since the Year 1195. to the Year 1320. This History is well written, and faithfully; it was printed in Latin in the Translation of Pontanus at Ingolstadt in 1603. and in Greek and Latin at Paris, in 1645. He likewise made an Apology, or four Treatises for the Faith of JESUS CHRIST against the Saracens, and Three Discourses against the Mahometans, printed at Basil in 1543. and 1555. There is a Treatise of his in MS. in the Vatican Library, intituled, Contradictions against Prochorus Sidonius.

John Cyparissiota.

JOHN CYPARISSIOTA, was one of the Opponents of Palamas, against whom he made a large Work, intituled, Palamick Transgressions, divided into five Books, and each Book cantoned into several Discourses, which is found in MS. in the King of France's Library, and of which Father Combefisius has set down two Discourses, in his last Addition to the Bibliotheca Patrum. He is moreover the Author of another Work, divided into Six Decads, intituled, A Substantial Exposition of what Divines say of God. A Work of Mystical and Symbolical Divinity, put out by Turrianus in Latin, and printed at Rome, in the Year 1581. and in the Bibliotheca Patrum.

Man. Calecas, of the Order of S. Dominick.

MANUEL CALECA, or CALECAS, a Greek turn'd Latin, commonly believed to have been of the Order of St. Dominick, has writ against the Greeks, and against the Palamites. The Treatise he made against the Greeks, was translated by Ambrosius Camaldulensis, by Order of Martin V. whereof the Translation was put out by Stuart, and printed at Ingolstadt, in 1616. and in the Bibliotheca Patrum.

Patrum. It is divided into Four Books, in the three first Books the Opinion of the Greeks about the Procession of the Holy Ghost, and confutes that of the Latines; and in the Fourth, after having justified the Addition made to the Creed by the Latine Church, he Answers all that which the Greeks blamed in the Usages of the Latines, and proves the Primacy of S. Peter, and the Pope. Also a Treatise against the Palamites, of Essence and Operation, was put forth by Father Combefisius, in Greek and Latin, in his last Addition to the Bibliotheca Patrum. He there confutes the Work or Decision of the Synod held under Callistus, Patriarch of Constantinople. We have in the same place another Doctrinal Treatise concerning Faith, and the Principles of the Catholick Faith, in which he Discourses of the Unity of God, of the Trinity, of the Incarnation, of the Seven Sacraments and of the Resurrection from the Dead. Allatius further makes mention of another Treatise concerning the Trinity, by Calecas, which has not been printed.

Isaac Argyrus, a Greek Monk, Composed about the Year 1375. a Calendar for the Feast of Easter, according to the Principles of Nicephorus Gregoras. This Work was printed at Heidelberg 1611. and Father Petavius has inserted it in a Book of the Doctrine of Times, wherein he has moreover set forth another Calendar, out of a MS. in the King's Library, which he likewise Father on this Author.

Isaac Argyrus, a Greek Monk.

Manuel Palæologus II. Emperor of Constantinople, may pass in the Number of the Ecclesiastical Writers of this Age, seeing he has made divers Works of Morality and Devotion. The Treatises of Devotion are Prayers for the Morning, The Subjects of Compunction, or Confession of Sins unto God in Verse, A Psalm of Thanksgiving for the Captivity of Bajazet. Those of Morality are Precepts of the Education of a Prince to his Son John, Seven Discourses of Vertues and Vices, and of the Study of good Learning. These Works have been printed in Greek and Latin at Basil in 1578. by the care of Leunclavius. Father Combefisius in his Second Tome of his last Addition to the Bibliotheca Patrum has inserted a long Panegyrick, which Manuel Palæologus made in Honour of Theodorus, his Brother, Prince of Peloponnesus, upon the settling of his Son in the Throne. He writ also a Treatise against a Work of a Latine, who had made a Summary Discourse, to prove the Procession of the Holy Ghost, from the Father and the Son, whereof Allatius makes mention.

Manuel Palæologus, a Greek Emperor.

Nil Damyla, a Greek born in Italy, a Monk of a Monastery in the Isle of Crete, wrote about the end of the Century, against the Latines, a Treatise of the Order of the three Divine Persons, and the Procession of the Holy Ghost, which is in MS. in the Vatican Library, and three other Treatises Manuscripts, in the Library of the King of France, whereof the first is a Collection of Passages out of the Scripture, against such as assert, that the Holy Ghost proceeds from the Father and the Son; The Second, to shew that the Church of Rome was not of this Opinion in the time of Damasus, and that it began not to be there, till under the Papacy of Christophilus, and Sergius; And the Third, about the two Synods held on account of Photius. Some Fragments of these Works Allatius recites.

Nil Damyla, a Greek Monk.

Maximus, a Greek Monk.

Demetrius Cydonius, the Author of two Discourses inserted by Father Combefisius, in the Second Tome of his Addition to the Bibliotheca Patrum, is not that Favourite of Cantacuzenus which accompanied him in his Retreat, and entred into the same Monastery; for these two Discourses were made under the Empire of John Palæologus, the Son of Manuel, about the Year 1422. The First is to perswade the Greeks to keep a good Correspondence with the Latines, that of them they might obtain Succours; and the Second to demonstrate that the City of Constantinople ought not to be surrendred to Amurath, who demanded it to make up the Peace. There is mention made, in the First, of a Voyage of the Emperor John Palæologus, Manuel's Son into Hungary, which was made about the Year 1424. there to Sue for Aid; and the Second is written in the time, that Amurath reigned over the Turks, who began not to reign till the Year 1421. Thus there is no probability, that the Author of these Discourses is the same, who in the Year 1357. had already passed part of his Life; besides, that he, of whom we speak, abode almost all his time in Italy, there studied the Divinity of the Latines, and at last went to die in a Monastery, in the Isle of Crete. He was one of the Antagonists of the Palamites, and wrote against them a Treatise, intituled, The execrable Doctrines of Gregorius Palamas, put out by Arcudius, with a Treatise of the same Author about the Procession of the Holy Ghost, and printed at Rome in 1630. He has encountred the Opinion of the Greeks concerning the Procession of the Holy Ghost, and confuted the Work of Nicolas Cabasilas, against St. Thomas. He translated into Greek the Treatise of S. Anselme concerning the Procession of the Holy Ghost, the Letter about the use of Unleavened Bread to Valerian Bishop of Numidia, the Books of St. Thomas against the Gentiles, and the Second Part of the Summ of that Author, of which these be divers Manuscripts in the King's Library. Where is found likewise a long Discourse about Preaching of the Gospel, wherein he treats of the Fall, and Recovery of Man, according to the Principles of St. Thomas. There was printed at Basil in 1552. and 1559. a Discourse of the Contempt of Death, which bears the Name of Demetrius Cydonius, and it may well enough be his, of whom we treat; but for the Letter directed to Barlaam, against the Procession of the Holy Ghost from the Son, inserted by Canisius in the Sixth Tome of his Antiquities, it is rather to be Father'd on the ancient Demetrius Cydonius, than upon this Man.

Demetrius Cydonius.

The 18th. is against the Coiners of Bad Money, and those that conceal them.

The 19th. forbids the Execution of the Wills of the Persons appointed Judges in such cases, unless confirmed in the Civil Law, or approved by the Ordinary or his Officials.

The 20th. denounces them Excommunicated, who publish certain Bills, in which they threaten Men, unless they give them a Summ of Money.

The 21st. orders the Payment of the Tribute due to the Church.

The Last enjoins the Deans to take Copies of these Constitutions.

The Synodal Constitutions at Bayeux.

THESE Constitutions contain Instructions for Priests about the Manner, in which they ought to come to a Synod, Concerning the Administration of Sacraments, the Celebration of the Mass, Divine Service, The Ornaments of the Church, The Priestly Habits; The Manners of Clergymen, Excommunication, The Feasts, Fasting-Days, The Assistance of the Sick, Ordinations, The Age and Capacities of such as may be Ordained, and several other Points of Discipline. Those sorts of Decrees, Constitutions came very often, and were almost always a Repetition of the former Decrees. The Authors of the Last Collection of Councils did not think it convenient to let them down; and therefore we shall take the Liberty to pass them over in the following part of this History.

The Council of Auschе in 1300.

The General Council of Vienne in Dauphine, held in 1311.

The General Council of Vienne, in 1311.

THIS Council was Summoned by Clement V. to judge of the Accusations brought against the Order of Knights Templars, by his Bull dated Aug. 11. 1307. by which it ought to have met Octob. 1. 1309. but was Prorogued by another Bull to October 1311. Many Prelates being come to Vienne at the time appointed, the first Session of this Council was held Octob. 16. of the same Year. The Number of Archbishops and Bishops which were present at it, is not very certain. It is commonly thought, that they were near 300. There was a considerable time between the first and Second Session, which was spent in consultation. This last was held May 22. 1312. Philip King of France was present at it. The Dissolution of the Templars was resolved on in it, and the Bull was published about it, as we have said. We have also observed what passed in it about the Memory of Pope Boniface, which was condemned to Oblivion, notwithstanding the Earnest Requests of that King. Some say, that a Crusado also was resolved on there, The Begards and Beguins were condemned there, and their Errours rejected with Detestation, and the Pope made in this Council divers Constitutions; which are in the Five Books of Clementines, published by John XXII. and are inserted in the Body of the Civil Law.

Some of these Constitutions are about the Doctrines of the Church, and particularly those which are under the first Title of the first Book; in which he defines, 1. That the only Son of God subsisting from all Eternity with the Father, who is in every place, where the Father is, hath taken both parts of our Nature Hypostatically united together; insomuch, that though he is the true God, he was also a real Man; that is to say, had an Human Body passible, and an intellectual, and reasonable Soul informing the Body by it self. 2. That the Side of Jesus Christ was opened after his Death, and that there came out of it Blood and Water to make a Church, which is One, without Spot, Holy, the Mother of the Faithful, and the Spouse of Jesus Christ. 3. That the Soul is really the form of the Body essentially and by it self. 4. That we must acknowledge one only Baptism, to be the Means of attaining Salvation, as well for the Adult, as Infants. 5. That the Opinion of those, who believe, that by that Sacrament Sanctifying Grace, and the habit of Vertue is infused into the Soul of Infants, is very probable, and conformable to the Expressions of the Holy Fathers, and Doctrine of the Modern Divines, and therefore is to be followed.

The Errors * of the Begards and Beguines are condemned in the Constitution contained in the Third Chapter Tit. 3. of the Fifth Book, and are these: 1. That a Man in this Life may acquire

* The Begards, and Beguines, who are by this Council of Vienne Condemned as Heretick's, and many Heterodox Assertions and Doctrines either feigned, or by depraving some unwary Expressions of theirs laid to their Charge, were, as our Historians relate, a very Religious sort of Men, and much reverenced by many Learned Men of that time, but detesting the Errors of the Church of Rome, and not fearing to teach, that the Roman Church was not the true Catholick Church, that Boniface VIII. and John XXII. were not lawful Popes, that the Emperor was not Subject to the Pope in Temporals, that the Host was not to be adored, with many other things not agreeing to the Doctrines of the present Church of Rome, they fell under the displeasure of those Popes, and their Bishops, who Excommunicated them, and Condemned in their Councils; but as Ockam wrote for them against John XXII. so at the latter end of this Age Gregory XI. stood up in their Defence, and Absolved them from their Excommunication, so that they spread much in Italy and Germany.

ſuch a degree of Perfection, that he may become without Sin, and above the Eſtate of growing in Grace. 2. That they, which are arrived at that Perfection need not Faſt or Pray, becauſe in that eſtate the Senſes are ſo ſubject to the Spirit, and to reaſon, that a Man may then freely allow his Body, what he pleaſes. 3. That they, who have attained this Spirit of Liberty are no ways obliged to obey, or tied to practiſe the Precepts of the Church. 4. That a Man may attain the higheſt degree of Happineſs in this Life, and have the ſame degrees of Perfection as in the other. 5. That every Intelligent Creature is naturally happy, and that the Soul hath no need of the Light of Glory to raiſe it to the Viſion and Enjoyment of God. 6. That the Practice of Virtue is for imperfect Men, and the Soul of the Perfect may diſpenſe with the Practice of them. 7. That to Kiſs a Woman is a Mortal Sin, but the Carnal Knowledge of her is no Sin. 8. That in the Elevation of the Body of Chriſt, it is not neceſſary for the Perfect to riſe up, or pay it any reſpect; becauſe it would be an Imperfection in them to deſcend from the Purity and height of their Contemplation to think of the Sacrament of the Euchariſt, or the Paſſion of Jeſus Chriſt.

In the fifth Title of the Fifth Book concerning Uſurers, not only Clement V. forbids the Practice of it, but he condemns alſo them for Hereſie, who obſtinately hold and aſſert that it is no Sin.

In the fifth Title of the third Book, he forbids the Adminiſtration of Baptiſm out of the Church, and in the fourteenth of the ſame Book, Chap. 1. he makes divers Rules for the Celebration of Divine Service.

The ſixteenth Title of the ſame Book, contains a Bull for the Inſtitution of the Feaſt of the Holy Sacrament by Urban IV. confirmed by Clement V.

He renews in the eighteenth Title of the fifth Book, the Laws and Penalties impoſed upon thoſe that aſſault or impriſon Clergymen.

In the tenth Title of the ſame Book, he appoints, that Penance ſhall be granted to Perſons Condemned to Death for their Crimes, notwithſtanding the contrary uſage.

In the thirteenth Title of the firſt Book, Chap. 2. he declares, That the Cardinals, during the Vacancy of the Holy See, have not the Pope's Power, but may nevertheleſs provide for the Offices of Chamberlain and Penitentiary, if they, that are in theſe Offices, happen to die; That the Election of a New Pope ought to be made in the place, where the laſt died; That if any of the Cardinals go out of the Conclave before the Election, they ought to be compelled to return; That no Cardinal ought to be hindred from giving his Vote under a Pretence of Excommunication, Suſpenſion, or Interdict, &c.

The other Clementines concern the Collations of Benefices, Elections, Renunciations, Right of Lapſes, Patronages, the Age of Beneficed Perſons, the Manners of Clergymen, Wills, Burials, the Inquiſition, and the Office of Inquiſitors, Treaſurers, Excommunications, Interdicts, the Authority of Judges Delegates, the manner of Proceedings, and other Matters of the Canon Law.

Laſtly, There are ſeveral, that concern the Reformation of Monks, as Chap. 1. and 2. of the tenth Title of the third Book, which contain divers Rules for Monks and Nuns, and Chap. 1. of the eleventh Title of the fifth Book, which contains the famous Decretal, Exivi, concerning the Rule of S. Francis. In the Second Chapter Tit. 7. Lib. 2. he regulates the difference between the Mendicant-Friars and the Ordinaries concerning their Preachings and Confeſſions, and allows the former to Preach in their own Churches, Schools, and Publick Places; but it forbids them Preaching in their Pariſhes, unleſs invited by the Curates, if the Biſhop does not order them. And as to Confeſſions, he orders the Provincials and Priors to addreſs themſelves to the Biſhops, that they would permit them to chooſe a certain Number of their Monks to hear Confeſſions, whom they would preſent to them, to have their Approbation; That if the Biſhops think fit to reject ſome of them, they ſhall name others; but if they ſhall abſolutely refuſe to grant them ſuch a Permiſſion, the Monks may do it by virtue of the Power, which the Holy See ſhall give them. In Chap. 1. Tit. 7. Lib. 5. he forbids the Monks to Adminiſter the Sacraments of Extream Unction, the Lord's Supper, and Marriage, without the Permiſſion of the Curate; or to Abſolve the Excommunicated; He forbids them to ſpeak ill of the Biſhops in their Sermons; to diſcourage the Faithful from going to their Churches; to make Reſtitutions; abſolve Special Caſes; to vex the Clergy; by citing them unfitly before the Judges Delegates. And in Chap. 1. Tit. 9. Lib. 3. he declares, that they, who have made Profeſſion in the Order of Begging-Friars, if they go over to another Order, ſhall bear no Offices in it, nor have a Vote in the Chapter.

All theſe Conſtitutions were not made in the Council of Vienna, but ſome before, and ſome after, and of thoſe, which were publiſhed during the Seſſion of that Council, none but ſuch, as concern the Faith and the Condemnation of the Errors of the Begards and Beguins, the Conſtitution concerning the Privileges of the Mendicant-Friars, the Study of Tongues in the Univerſities, and the Inquiſition, were approved in it.

The

The Council of Ravenna in 1317.

The Council of Ravenna in 1317.

LAstly, This Archbishop, who always applied himself to his Duty, and Reformation of Discipline, called a Council at Ravenna, Octob. 27. 1317. in which he confirmed the two former, and published new Rules in 22 Articles.

He orders in the First that Bishops should appoint Stewards to manage the Revenues of Vacant Churches.

The 2d. orders, That no Man shall enter into the Ministry of the Church, who has not received his Mission from the Bishop.

The 3d. That those, who have gotten Benefices, shall enter into Holy Orders within a Year, as their Benefices require.

The 4th. renews the Rules concerning the Habits and Conversation of Clergymen, and imposes Pecuniary Mulcts upon such as shall contradict them.

The 5th. forbids receiving a Canon of a Cathedral, or a Monk out of a Monastery, without the Special Licence of the Ordinary.

The 6th. That none shall be received into a Monastery upon the Credit of Lay-men.

The 7th. That Notice shall be given to the Metropolitan of Ravenna, what Benefices are faln to him.

The 8th. That the Number of the Canons of Cathedral and Collegiate Churches shall be regulated, if not already done, and the Number reduced to a proportion of the Revenues.

The 9th. is against Beneficed Persons that do not reside.

The 10th. orders, That there be daily Distributions in Cathedral Churches, and One Table for the Canons.

The 11th. concerns the Taxes and Impositions, that Churches ought to bear.

The 12th. appoints, that the Clergy be present at Solemn Masses, and that Private Masses shall not begin in the Churches, till the solemn One is finished.

The 13th forbids Archbishops, Provosts, and inferiour Bishops, the Knowledge, Instruction, or Judgment of what concerns the Persons of Clergymen.

The 14th. forbids all Christians to lett out their Houses to the Jews.

The 15th. lays down divers Cautions to prevent Usury.

The 16th. ordains, that the Restitutions of such Goods, as the Owners are not known, shall be made by the Bishops Order, and they shall be obliged in their Wills to specifie the Cause of such Legacies.

The 17th. forbids Clergymen or Monks to Hunt.

The 18th. ordains, That Clergymen taken carrying Arms, committing any Crime, shall be put into the hands of the Bishop, without defaming Reflections on them.

The 19th. That only One Punishment shall be inflicted for One Crime.

The 20th. leaves it to the Liberty of the Bishops to dispense with the Age, and Qualifications, which such as are to be ordained, ought to have by the Canons of the former Councils, provided, that the Persons, whom they ordain, be capable.

The 21st. imposes a Punishment upon the Chapters, who do not give notice of the Death of their Bishop to the Bishops of the Province.

The 22d. gives the Ordinaries a Power to Absolve such as offend against the Rules of this Council but this Archbishop reserved for the future the Punishment of the Breakers of the Canons to himself, and the Power to moderate, or interpret the Laws of these Councils. And by virtue of this Power, he added two Articles to these 22 Rules. In one of them he allows the Nuns to speak through a Lattice to Persons not Suspicious; and in the second, he sets down a Table of the Dues, which Notaries and Secretaries ought to take.

The Council of Paris in 1314.
